"Miss Annie Chappell, who is a gifted soprano, made her first appearance at the Crystal Palace Concerts on Saturday last, when she fairly won an important success. She sang 'Di tanti palpiti' with conscientious fidelity, and to the delight of her audience. Her vocalisation was irreproachable, and its sympathetic quality imparted an additional charm. Subsequently she gave a tasteful rendering of 'My dearest heart,' and fully merited the warm applause with which her efforts were rewarded by the vast audience."—Brighton Gazette.

"Miss Chappell has a brilliant soprano voice, and is a highly cultured singer. She gave a very chastely expressive rendering of 'My dearest heart,' the accent and expression being entirely appropriate to the music and words. She also sang Ardit's well known but difficult song 'Il bacio' with clever vocalisation, perfect tunefulness, and exceedingly sprightly rhythm and nice shading. "Sir A. Sullivan conducted, and the cast included Madame Albani, Miss Hilda Wilson, Messrs. Lloyd and Brereton. The last, so far as I am aware, was new to the part of Lucifer, whose music many a vocalist has found a hard nut to crack. It is therefore much to the credit of this young vocalist, although the part lay rather high for him, that where so many have failed he succeeded, his voice standing well through the din of the Strasburg Bells, while its expression in the study and in the road to Salerno showed that he possessed a good deal of that sardonic humour which the character demands."

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH, September 12.

"A special word is due to Mr. Brereton. It is pleasant to credit the young artist with a great success both as regards emphasis and expression. Mr. Brereton may be commended also for an intelligent attempt at characterisation, as far as that is possible on the concert platform. He certainly made the utterances of Lucifer sardonic, and by other means, often slight, helped to suggest the personage whose words he spoke."

THE TIMES, September 12.

"Mr. Brereton, in addition to realising a good deal of the humour which is the dramatic and musical key-note of Lucifer, did full justice to the vocal demands of his task."

THE MORNING POST, September 12.

"Mr. Brereton was most successful in his reading of the part of Lucifer; his voice, greatly improved of late, was resonant and incisive, and he succeeded in creating a most favourable impression."

GUARDIAN, September 19.

"Among the soloists Mr. Brereton deserves unqualified praise for his excellent impersonation of Lucifer. He is not far from being the best Lucifer that has yet been heard, and in the difficult scene where the solo voice has to make itself heard through the chorus and the enormously heavy instrumentation he was clearly audible throughout, a thing which no other singer has been since the production of the work."

MUSICAL WORLD, September 15.

"Mr. Brereton, if we mistake not, assumed the part of Lucifer for the first time, and made a distinct success therein. This earnest and conscientious young artist imparted an amount of individuality and force to the music, by legitimate and thoroughly artistic methods of expression, which did him infinite credit."

FIGARO, September 22.

"In regard to the performance of 'The Golden Legend,' the chief point was the admirable singing of Mr. Brereton as Lucifer."

THE MUSICAL TIMES

MORE ABOUT MENDELSSOHN.*

To the making of books on Felix Mendelssohn there is no end, and we shall by-and-by be able to say that very few men, and certainly no musician, has a larger individual literature. The process goes on, it will be observed, quite irrespective of the fact that Mendelssohn does not now occupy the position among composers which was once his own. Continuous development of the art, and changes in public taste, have undoubtedly had an effect upon his status, though among the masses of amateurs in this country he is still the favourite. We will not trouble ourselves to enquire how far this change is just, the point being that whatever Mendelssohn's position as a composer, he maintains his conspicuousness as a personality. It is always prudent to distinguish between the individual and his work. There are eminent men who scarcely have, for their fellows, a human side at all, being simply an intellectual force working out certain results. There are others who possess, so to speak, a dual celebrity, being famous both for what they do and for what they are, and it sometimes happens that the individual survives while the repute of his work languishes and expires. Mendelssohn is certainly one of the dual celebrities. We know him by music which, let us hope, will never die, and he is familiar to us no less by the fascinating personal qualities which have secured a commanding share of attention, esteem, and, it might even be said, of love. It is more because of the man than of the composer—though the composer made known the man—that Mendelssohn literature goes on increasing, and that a hearty reception has been given to the work now under consideration.

This most interesting volume has been waited for long. The intimate friendship of Mendelssohn with the Moscheles family is matter of history, and when Madame Moscheles' biography of her husband appeared, the great composer's admirers had good reason to know that behind it lay a rich store of material for future enjoyment. The "Life of Moscheles" told us a great deal about Mendelssohn; the correspondence with Moscheles would make known a great deal more. But years went on and nothing was heard of the letters. Indeed, they almost passed into oblivion, as far as concerned the public mind, or, if thought of, were connected with an idea that the Moscheles family preferred to retain the treasure as strictly private property. The more welcome on this account was the announcement that Mr. Felix Moscheles had at last given Mendelssohn's letters to the world, after whetting public appetite by publishing a choice selection in Scribner's Magazine. It may be asked: Why the delay? The editor: "If I have abstained from giving publicity to these letters for so long a time, it is because I thought such a delay was in accordance with the wishes of both writers. Many passages occur in which prominent musicians of those days are unreservedly criticised—passages which I felt as little authorised to suppress as to publish during the lifetime of those alluded to." This is a valid excuse. On the one hand, it would have been an offence against decency to hurt the feelings of individuals by the publication of opinions never meant to be published; on the other, it would have deprived the correspondence of much of its value had any passages been eliminated. By waiting till it became possible to avoid both evils the editor showed as much good feeling as sound judgment.

The acquaintance of Moscheles with Mendelssohn began in 1824, when the future composer of "Elijah" was fifteen years old, and even then so accomplished that the man described the boy as "a master, not a pupil." Acquaintance soon ripened into friendship, so that the Moscheles family gladly received the youth when, in the course of his first ramble abroad in the world (1829), he paid a visit to London. In a letter anticipating this visit, the young Berliner declared that his intention was not "to appear in public, but rather to be musically benefited by my tour, to compare the various views and opinions of others, and thus to consolidate my own taste." Later, he wrote: "I want your advice as to whether I should really bring the scores of some of my compositions, and, if so, which would be the best to select. I was thinking of my Overture to 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' do you think that suitable?" Moscheles replied "Yes," and added that he had secured rooms at 203, Great Portland Street—the street in which Weber died. Mendelssohn reached London, April 21, 1829. The correspondence of the two friends when residents in the same city is not very important, but contains a few characteristic and happy passages. Moscheles had expressed a wish to hear some of his young compatriot's new works, and Mendelssohn wrote to the professor's wife: "If he will let me know when he has had enough of them, I will one of these days bring a cabful of manuscript, and play you all to sleep." The Double Concerto in E was one of the works in question. This the two musicians tried together in Clementi's warehouse, and added a cadenza theretofore wanting. Apropos, it is curious to find them, in their capacity as virtuosi, consulting whether a little bit of solo following the cadenza should be left out, "since of course," wrote Mendelssohn, "the people would applaud the cadenza." "We must have a bit of Tutti between the cadenza and the solo," said I. "How long are they to clap their hands?" asked Moscheles. "Ten minutes, I dare say," said I. Moscheles beat me down to five. I promised to supply a Tutti, and so we took the measure, embroidered, turned, and padded, put in sleeves, à la Mameluke, and at last with our mutual tailoring produced a brilliant Concerto." The placid acquiescence of the two masters in the abominable practice of applauding tours de force during the course of a work forcibly illustrates the proverb that "Use is second nature."

Everyone knows that Mendelssohn met with a carriage accident in London, after returning from his memorable Scottish tour with Klingemann; also that he travelled to Berlin before recovery and was there again obliged to "lie up." In the spring of 1830 he visited Italy and Switzerland, then went to Paris, and crossed to England in April, 1832. No letters to Moscheles of this period, if any were written, appear in the present collection, but, happily, there are plenty elsewhere. When the birthday of Moscheles (May 30) came round, his young friend sent him a drawing—one of a series which the editor gives in fac-simile. We cannot reproduce the sketch, but the artist's division of responsibility for it is available: "The writing is in Emily's hand, the poem by Klingemann, the design invented, and the ink blots executed by Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy."

* "Letters of Felix Mendelssohn to Ignaz and Charlotte Moscheles." Translated from the originals in his possession, and edited by Felix Moscheles. [Trübner and Co.]

We are bound to say that the humour of the jeu d'esprit is essentially Teutonic and therefore mild, but the whole thing speaks volumes for Mendelssohn's genial good nature. On again returning to Berlin, in July, 1832, the composer addressed a charming letter to Mrs. Moscheles, wishing himself back again in Chester Place, and sketching a Moscheles interior in the happiest manner: "I merely long for a chat with you—a little innocent abuse of the world in general, and a special attack on phrenology; a weak-fingered pupil, down below in Moscheles' room, playing all the while a slow presto, and being suddenly startled by a few brilliant notes from another hand to relieve her dulness." In the same letter he wants verses for a song: "Haven't you got some German or English words for a song which I might compose? Of course, for a voice down to C and up to F², and I could play the accompaniment in 1833 on the Erard, with the slow presto coming up from below." Mendelssohn goes on to describe how a sister of Madame Moscheles, resident in Hamburg, received a communication with reference to the possible removal of the London household to Berlin. "She looked at me very angrily, and asked what was to be got in Berlin, and who took any interest in music there. I named myself, but found little favour in her eyes; I was detestable, growing more and more so, the very type of a 'Berliner' she thought; next, I became a stranger, then, yet more—a strange musician; and, lastly, she turned severely polite." This is delicious, and makes one almost wish that Mendelssohn had taken to novels of character in the manner of Mr. Howells. Continuing, Mendelssohn gives reasons why he did not go to hear the pianist, Madame Belleville, better known in England as Madame Oury: "She intended giving a concert, and the bills announced that Mr. Oury, her husband, was going to assist her, but the Berlin people would not be attracted, so she gave it up, and performed at the theatre between two comedies. People said there was no soul in her playing, so I preferred not hearing her, for what a Berliner calls playing without soul must be desperately cold. Take it all in all, I am blasé with Hummel's Septet and Herz's Variations, and the public was quite right to be blasé too." Madame Moscheles, in reply, appears to have rallied Mendelssohn upon not admiring Madame Oury's appearance, and he answered: "I was not influenced by any such reasons, although I must admit that there are certain faces that cannot possibly belong to an artist, and are so icily chilling that the mere sight of them sends me to freezing point. But why should I hear those Variations by Herz for the thirtieth time? They give me as little pleasure as rope-dancers or acrobats, for with them there is at least the barbarous attraction that one is in constant dread of seeing them break their necks, though they do not do so after all; but the piano-tumblers do not as much as risk their lives, only our ears, and that I for one will not countenance. . . . And then she played in the interval between two dramas: that, again, I cannot stand. First, the curtain rises, and I see all India and the pariahs, and palm trees and cactuses, and villany and bloodshed, and I must cry bitterly. Then the curtain rises and I see Madame Belleville at the pianoforte playing a concerto in some minor key, and I have to applaud violently; finally, they give me 'An Hour at the Potsdam Gate,' and I am expected to laugh. No, it cannot be done, and these are my reasons why I do not deserve your scolding." The same letter contains a reference to what the composer called his "Piano Songs" (originally "Melodies," and in the third place, "Lieder ohne Worte"), on behalf of which Madame Moscheles had written to Simrock, the publisher. Mendelssohn makes merry over them:—"The work will certainly go through at least twenty editions, and with the proceeds I shall buy the house, No. 2, Chester Place, and a seat in the House of Commons, and become a Radical by profession. Between this and that, however, I hope we shall meet, for possibly a single edition may prove sufficient."

About this time Mendelssohn suffered a good deal from what our fathers called the "spleen." He confessed to a "ferocious mood," and some of his remarks should be taken with that fact in mind. Hear him growl: "Well, Meyerbeer is formally invested with his title! Were there not a distance of several miles between a Court Kapellmeister and a real Kapellmeister, it might vex me. The addition of the little word 'Court,' however, indicates that he has nothing to do, and that again proves the extreme modesty of our nobility; for whenever the word 'Court' is put in conjunction with a title, it means that the recipient has the distinction only, not the office, and that he is expected henceforth to rest and be thankful. If they were to make a Court Composer of me to-morrow, I should be bound not to write a note as long as I live." The Moscheles had a son and heir born to them, and Mendelssohn accepted the dignity and responsibility of godfather. He writes in January, 1833: "I rejoice like a child at the thought of next spring, of my dignity as a godfather, of green England, and of a thousand things besides. My melancholy is beginning to vanish. I have again taken a lively interest in music and musicians, and have composed some trifles here and there; they are bad, it is true, but they give promise of better things; in fact, the fog seems lifting, and I again see the light. Whether I shall be able to bring some creditable work with me to London, heaven only knows, but I trust I may, for I would like to figure not only as a godfather, but as a musician. The former, however, comes first and foremost. I will make the most serious face possible, and bring the very best wishes and all the happiness I can gather together to lay down as a gift at the christening." Godfather Felix did not wait for his arrival in England before formally recognising the child. He sent a sketch of a cradle surrounded by all manner of instruments, and a letter beginning: "Here they are, wind instruments and fiddles, for the son and heir must not be kept waiting till I come. He must have a cradle song, with drums and trumpets and janissary music; fiddles alone are not nearly lively enough. May every happiness and joy and blessing attend the little stranger: may he be prosperous; may he do well, whatever he does, and may it fare well with him in the world. So he is to be called Felix, is he? How nice and kind of you to make him my godchild in formâ. The first present his godfather makes him is the above entire orchestra, it is to accompany him through life—the trumpets when he wishes to become famous, the flutes when he falls in love, the cymbals (basins) when he grows a beard; the pianoforte explains itself, and should people ever play him false, as will happen to the best of us, there stand the kettle-drums and the big drum in the background." As may be gathered from the above, Mendelssohn entered with most affectionate interest into the happiness of the Moscheles family, and that at a time when most men are frankly indifferent to, or only by courtesy concerned about, such events. He wrote to the proud mother: "How pleased I am that I shall soon see the little stranger and that he will bear my name! Do wait till I come, that I may accept your first invitation and be present in person at the christening." He goes on, in his own lively fashion, to speculate concerning the boy's future: "I see already how his two grown-up sisters, Misses Emily and Serena, will tyrannise over him when he is about fourteen years old. He will have to put up with a good deal; his arms will be voted too long, his coat too short, and his voice wretched. But presently he will become a man and patronise them, doing them many a good turn, making himself generally useful, and submitting to the boredom of many an evening party as their chaperon."

Mendelssohn reached London in April, 1833, but we have only one note of many which, no doubt, passed between him and Moscheles. It refers to the first and third books of the "Songs without Words," then called "Melodies for the Pianoforte." These had been published by Novello, in 1832, on the royalty plan, and, a year having elapsed, the composer wished to touch some coin. Hence he wrote:—"This morning I again forgot to mention, my dear Moscheles, what I have often intended asking and have as often forgotten—how matters stand in reference to that publication of mine, and whether there has been any practical result. I have an appointment with V. Novello to-morrow morning, and if he has only sixpence to give me as my share I would rather not broach the subject. So please leave word at my house whether you think I ought to mention the matter, or whether it had better rest in eternal oblivion. I return home to-morrow at eleven o'clock to know which way you decide, the saying is, 'Merit hath its crown,' so I scarcely expect I shall get as much as half-a-crown." Mendelssohn's modest expectations were quite in keeping with the fact. A settlement up to date was made in June, when it appeared that forty-eight copies had been sold, the composer's share of the proceeds being £4 16s. 1. An inspection of Novello's books shows that in 1836 the public had purchased only 114 copies, and, as it was not worth while to keep open so unfructuous an arrangement, the composer, in 1837, sold the copyright together with three preludes and fugues for the organ, and three chorales for female voices, in consideration of the sum of £35. What an idea all this gives us of the state of music at the time! It seems incredible to us that the lovely "Songs without Words" did not run like wildfire through the land, and we think it monstrous that Mendelssohn should have been content to part with them and the companion works for so small a sum. But the price was a fair one under the circumstances which, and not the intrinsic merits of the music, determined their commercial value. Shortly after returning to Germany Mendelssohn became "music director" at Düsseldorf, and from that place kept up a lively, though not over-frequent, correspondence with his London friends. In most of his letters we find pregnant remarks. He says: "In general, I am not very partial to dedications, and have seldom made any, but in this case they are to convey a meaning," &c. Again: "My own poverty in shaping new forms for the pianoforte once more struck me most forcibly whilst writing the Rondo (Brilliant). It is there I get into difficulties and have to toil and labour, and I am afraid you will notice that such was the case. Still, there are things in it which I believe are not bad, and some parts that I really like, but how I am to set about writing a calm and quiet piece (as you advised me last spring) I really do not know. All that passes through my head in the shape of pianoforte music is about as calm and quiet as Cheapside, and when I sit down to the pianoforte and compel myself to start improvising ever so quietly, it is of no use—by degrees I fall back into the old ways." In the same letter we find a description, half funny, half indignant, of a mild sort of O. P. riot in the Düsseldorf Theatre, at the production of "Don Juan," under Mendelssohn's direction. "The opposition," he adds, "consists mainly of beershop-keepers and waiters; in fact, by four o'clock p.m. half Düsseldorf is intoxicated. . . . Now, what do you think of such a discreditable state of things, and can you have anything more to say to such boors as we are?" Further on we read: "Blagrove was here. I took him to our Choral Society, where we were just rehearsing the choruses from 'Alexander's Feast.' Our performance produced the most excellent effect on him—it sent him to sleep."

Early in 1834 Moscheles produced his friend's Overture "Melusina" in London, and also that of Berlioz, "Les Francs Juges." Writing to Mendelssohn, he criticised the Frenchman's work severely, and Mendelssohn, in reply, took up the same strain: "What you say of Berlioz's Overture I thoroughly agree with. It is a chaotic, prosaic piece, and yet more humanly conceived than some of his others. I always felt inclined to say with Faust :—

He ran around, he ran about,
His thirst in puddles laving;
He gnawed and scratched the house throughout,
But nothing cured his raving;
And driven at last in open day
He ran into the kitchen.

For his orchestration is such a frightful muddle, such an incongruous mess, that one ought to wash one's hands after handling one of his scores.* Besides, it really is a shame to set nothing but murder, misery, and wailing to music; even if it were well done, it would simply give us a record of atrocities. At first he made me quite melancholy, because his judgments on others are so clever, so cool and correct, he seems so thoroughly sensible, and yet he does not perceive that his own works are such rubbishy nonsense." The "Melusina" Overture was, it appears, not much appreciated by the Philharmonic audience, so Mendelssohn wrote: "Never mind, that won't kill me. I felt sorry when you told me, and at once played the Overture through, to see if I too should dislike it; but it pleased me, and so there is no great harm done. Or do you think it would make you receive me less amiably at my next visit? And perhaps it will be liked somewhere else, or I can write another one which will have more success. The first desideratum is to see a thing take shape and form on paper, and if, besides, I am fortunate enough to get such kind words about it as those I had from you and Moscheles, it has been well received, and I may go on quietly doing more work." On the whole, these are fairly philosophical comments. There is in them, however, the ring of a little natural mortification. A subsequent letter (June, 1834) contains another reference to the Philharmonic, and leads up to a fling at Herz: "Many thanks to you and the Philharmonic for playing so much of my music. I am sure I am delighted, if only the public does not grumble. But what do you say to their hissing little Herz? Why, that implies a high degree of culture! Has he consoled himself with guineas and pupils, or was it too crushing? . . . Well, if he will only abstain from writing Variations for four hands, or, if that is too much to ask, if he will only avoid winding up with those Rondos that are so frightfully vulgar that I am ashamed to play them to decent people, then, for aught I care, let him be made King of the Belgians, or rather Semiquaver King, just as one says 'Fire-King.' After all, I like him; he certainly is a characteristic figure of these times, of the year 1834; and as Art should be a mirror reflecting the character of the times—as Hegel, or someone else, probably says somewhere—he certainly does reflect most truly all salons and vanities, and a little yearning and a great deal of yawning, and kid gloves and musk—a scent

* Wagner knew nothing of this remark when, in 1855, at the Hanover Square Rooms, he put on gloves before handling one of Mendelssohn's.

I abhor. If in his latter days he should take to the romantic and write melancholy music, or to the classical and give us fugues—and I should not be surprised if he did—Berlioz can compose a new symphony on him, ‘De la Vie d’un Artiste,’ which I am sure will be better than the first.” Poor Herz! It seems strange that Mendelssohn should devote so many words to a musician who at the present time is not only dead, but altogether extinct. Yet Herz was a man of mark fifty-four years ago. So one generation sits in judgment on the idols of its predecessor, and condemns them to be broken up like old ships. Mendelssohn did but anticipate the verdict.

Referring to the failure of the “Melusina” Overture, Mrs. Moscheles tried to cheer up the composer. He answered her thus: “You say, too, I am not to care for public and critics, and that is just as bad. Am I not by trade an anti-public-caring musician, and an anti-critic-caring one into the bargain? What is Hecuba to me, and what the press (I mean the press that depresses)? And if, this very day, I had an idea for an Overture to Lord Eldon, in the form of a canon alla rovescia, or of a double fugue with a cantus firmus, write it I would, although I knew it could never become popular; how much more the lovely Melusina—a very different subject! Only it certainly would be annoying if one never had a chance of hearing one’s things performed; but as you say that is not to be feared, let us wish the public and critics long life and happiness—and me too—and let me live to go to England next year.” Evidently, from this genial extract, the little soreness about the “Melusina” had passed.

THE GREAT MUSICAL REFORMERS

By W. S. ROCKSTRO.

I.—HUCBALD DE ST. AMAND.

THE difficulty of tracing to their origin even the simplest forms of technical expedient with which, for centuries past, whole generations of musicians have been made familiar in the nursery, is so great, that it may well be doubted whether the most careful historian or the most learned antiquary has ever, in so much as one single instance, succeeded in satisfactorily overcoming it. Up to a certain point the task is by no means a laborious one. Abundant written evidence, of unimpeachable authority, may be brought forward to prove that a certain well-known device was in common use at a certain definite period; that, in an earlier century, its employment was far less general; while, in a still earlier one, examples of its occurrence are so rare as to render the extremest caution necessary in dealing with them. But at this point further elucidation of the subject becomes so difficult that by no amount of research, however diligent or however comprehensive, are we able to arrive at anything more satisfactory than a purely negative conclusion. Who invented the device? No one can tell. We have absolutely no means of ascertaining who first used so simple a sign as the guidon, or “direct,” placed at the end of a stave to indicate the note with which the next stave begins. Go back as far as we may, we can never feel sure that a record may not some day be found of earlier date than the MS. on which we based our conclusion. And, so long as the history of art continues to engage our attention, the difficulty will be ever present with us.

This state of uncertainty has, not unnaturally, given rise to a school of criticism, the distinguishing characteristic of which is universal distrust; an everpresent and unconquerable element of suspicion; suspicion, often justifiable, and not unfrequently justified by facts; but, none the less, often unreasonable and sometimes even unreasoning. It is, too often, only necessary to bring forward what seems to be a fairly conclusive proof that a certain mediæval student invented a certain symbol, in order to provoke the retort that such a theory is absolutely untenable, since it cannot be proved that no earlier student was acquainted with its use. It is by no means desirable that this suspicious phrase of criticism should be allowed to die out. It is a valuable safeguard against hasty conclusions. But let us not abuse it. The truth is as often obscured by vulgar incredulity as by vulgar credulity; and the via media which separates these two dangerous errors of judgment will undoubtedly be found to be the via tuta also.

But however formidable may be the difficulties with which questions of this nature are surrounded, it is incontestable that conscientious investigation is never thrown away. And we believe that a great step may be made in the right direction, by careful consideration of the work performed by men whose names form universally recognised landmarks in the history of art; men who, rightly or wrongly, enjoy the credit of having invented the alphabet of music while it was yet in its infancy; later geniuses who, during the period of its adolescence, founded its earliest schools of composition; still later ones who, sweeping away the dust of ages in search of artistic truth, brought it to light in new and unexpected forms, so strange, sometimes, that the world rebelled, at first, against their introduction.

Reformers such as these have existed in every age, and the world has rarely abstained from protesting against the doctrines they preached, before it decided, first, upon treasuring them among its most precious possessions, and then, when their novelty had worn off, upon relegating them to the domain of antiquated rubbish. Forms that were opposed, in the sixteenth century, as revolutionary innovations, were regarded, in the seventeenth, as priceless heirlooms, and, in the eighteenth, cast to the moles and to the bats.* But they all served their turn; and, as we believe that a great lesson may be learned by a careful inquiry into the life and life-work of the men by whom some of these forms were, or are believed to have been, introduced, in so far as the facts are accessible to us, we propose to say a few words upon, and draw a few not unnecessary deductions from, the history of some of the most prominent among these great Musical Reformers.

And first, let us see how far the progress of art was advanced by one of the earliest writers on music, whose works have been preserved to us since the time of Boëthius.

Hucbald de St. Amand—Hugbaldus, or Hubaldus de St. Amando—was born, in or about the year 840, at the town of St. Amand sur l’Elnon, in Flanders, whence he derives his patronymic.

Of the details of his early life very few have reached us, save the broad facts that he was admitted, like most other learned men of his time, to Holy Orders; became a monk in his native town; was a disciple of St. Remi of Auxerre, and enjoyed the intimate friendship of St. Odo of Cluny—who was born in 878 and died in 942, and was therefore very much his junior—and devoted himself to the study of music with all his heart and soul.

But, however strong may have been his predilection for art, he was not celebrated for his knowledge of music alone. His title to eminence, in his sacerdotal character, is sufficiently vindicated by his friendship with St. Remi and St. Odo. Moreover, he was a learned poet and a witty, and exceeding loyal. His Imperial master, Charles le Chauve, being bald, he wrote a poem in praise—not of his Imperial master, but—of baldness! a proceeding which, for loyalty and delicate good taste, could scarcely have been surpassed. In proof of his learning, he composed it, not in the vernacular, but in orthodox Latin hexameters, as good—for mediæval Latin—as he could make them. And, in illustration of his wit and ingenuity—and, perhaps, of his patience also—he took care that every word in it should begin with the initial letter of the Emperor's name and most prominent personal attraction—the letter C: on this wise—Carmina Clarisonæ Calvis Cantate Camænæ. For these facts, and for the knowledge that Hucbald died, at the age of ninety or thereabouts, in the year 930, we are indebted to the Chronicle of Sigebertus Gemblacensis; but for the information that most nearly concerns our present enquiry, we must refer to the works—or rather work, for one only is known—of Hucbald himself—the famous Enchiridion or tract, De Harmonica Institutione.

Of the very rare MS. copies of this valuable tract now known to be in existence, the two most perfect are (a) a very fine one in the Paris Library,* dating from the eleventh century, and (b) another, probably still earlier, in the Library of Corpus Christi College (St. Benet's) at Cambridge.† The true authorship of the last-named codex—a very precious one indeed, entitled Musica Hogeri, sive Excerptiones Hogeri Abbatis ex Autoribus Musicæ Artis, and corresponding exactly, in everything but its title, with the Paris MS.—was first established by Dr. Burney, who was justly proud of his discovery, though he could throw no more light upon the identity of the Abbot Hoger—or Roger—than could Dr. Rigel, who, in the year 1639, was in correspondence on the subject of this very MS. with Giovanni Battista Doni, and, in answer to the pressing enquiries of the Italian historian, confessed that he could find out nothing at all about it.‡ Dr. Gale, indeed—no mean authority—describes it as Excerptiones Rogeri Baconi,|| but on what grounds no one knows. The volume contains two distinct tracts, both beautifully written on vellum. The first of these is the Enchiridion of Hucbald, proved by Dr. Burney to be identical with the Paris MS.§ The second, preceded by the rubric, Incipit Scholium Enchiridii de Arte Musica, was farther identified by Dr. Burney as the Enchiridion of St. Odo, a much better known work, which the learned historian conceives, on the authority of this rubric, to have been intended by the Saint of Cluny as a commentary upon the older work of his friend at St. Amand. Beyond the internal evidence it affords, this is really all that is known about the volume. The only savant of note who has seriously examined it within the memory of the present librarian is the Abbé le Normand; and, so far as the bibliographical question is concerned, the history of the MS. remains very much in the condition in which it was left by Dr. Burney at the close of the eighteenth century.

It is, however, with the contents of the tract, and not with the history of this particular codex, that we propose to deal in the elucidation of our present subject.

The treatise—which, as its name implies, is intended to serve as a handbook for the enquiring student—deals, during the course of its argument, with the whole science of music, in so far as it was understood in the ninth century.

The writer appears in the character of a Reformer from the very beginning of his work. In treating of the rudimentary forms of harmony practised by his contemporaries, he makes more than one suggestion which, at the time it was written, must have seemed almost revolutionary in its boldness. The so-called *Organum of the period permitted the use of the fourth and fifth only, in addition to the octave and unison. Hucbald boldly advocated the use of the third, and even of the second. Under the title of Symphonia, he describes three kinds of harmony in the fourth, fifth, and octave, which he calls respectively, Diatesaron Symphonia, Diapente Symphonia, and Diapason Symphonia. From these three simple forms he derives three others in the eleventh, twelfth, and fifteenth; giving, however, the preference to the octave. After giving examples of these several forms, he shows how it is possible to use also the third and the second; and sums up the whole in an effusion which must have seemed novel indeed to the “Organisers” of the ninth century, and which undoubtedly betokens considerable progress in the right direction:—

This example, he tells us, is constructed upon the principle that one voice may be permitted to move freely in any direction, so long as the other remains upon the same note. Would it be possible to describe the modern “pedal-point” in clearer terms than these? or to give an example of its use more orthodox than that contained in the first eight notes of the foregoing passage?

This alone suffices to prove that Hucbald was not afraid to propose new methods of procedure, when he considered them to be improvements upon those in common use among his contemporaries; but he stands forth as a bolder reformer still in his system of notation.

The form of notation—or, rather, semiography—which chiefly prevailed in the ninth century, was based upon the employment of Neumes, or signs, written above the verbal text, in such sort as to show the direction in which the melody was intended to move; but giving no indication either of the exact interval required or of the pitch of the sound to be sung. It is manifest that such a system as this could give but a very faint suggestion indeed of a melody with which the singer was previously unacquainted, and there is a strong reason for believing that it was simply designed to assist the memory of those who had already learned the “tune” by ear.

* The derivation of this term has given rise to endless discussion. It is, however, quite certain that neither Hucbald nor any other mediæval writer ever used the word to indicate a part intended to be played upon the instrument now called an organ. It simply indicated a part, which would now be called, in popular language, “a second.” This second part, which was sung extempore against the Canto fermo, was called, indiscriminately, Diaphonia, Discant, or Organum; and the chorists who improvised it were called Organisers, and received extra pay for their services. Whether, as some have suggested, this added part was called Organum because it was found possible to play a second part upon the organ, is an open question; but it is quite certain that the Organisers sang without any instrumental accompaniment whatever. The derivation of the other terms is obvious. Diaphonia from δύς, twice, and φωνέω, I sound; Symphonia from σύν, together, and φωνέω, I sound; Discantus from the Latin, dis, twice, and cantus, a song. Hucbald uses the terms Symphonia, Diaphonia, and Organum, but not Discantus.

|| Both MSS. begin with the words: “Archytas vero cuncta ratione constituens non modo sensum aurium imprimis consonantiis observare neglexit: verum et jam maxime intra Tetrachordorum divisionem rationem secutus est,” &c.

Hucbald invented a notable improvement upon this. By writing the syllables of the verbal text upon a framework of interlinear spaces, he showed, not only the exact interval by which the voice was to ascend or descend, but also the exact sound it was to sing; and this, without the use either of Neumæ or of the "points" or "notes" which, in later centuries, were written upon the stave. For it must not for a moment be supposed that Hucbald's invention either anticipated the principle or contained within itself the germ of the true stave of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. He drew his lines simply for the purpose of marking out the spaces upon which the verbal text was to be written, not with the idea of making them serve as a support for any form of point or sign whatever. This will be made clearly apparent by the subjoined example, which, as the solution beneath it shows, represents a complete vocal score in four parts:—

SOLUTION.

The solution of this really very simple cryptogram was first discovered by the Padre Martini, who published it in his "History of Ecclesiastical Music" in the year 1774.* The principle is this: the letters T and S refer to the tones and semitones (tonus and semitonium) of the scale, consequently the singer, in moving from one space to the next, must proceed by a semitone when he passes upwards from, or downwards to, a space marked S, and, in all other cases, by a tone. Thus the various positions of the letter S in the above example show that the cantus, or highest voice, must begin on F, and the bass on C, from which notes all the rest are deducible in their natural order. In some of his examples Hucbald substituted for the letters T and S certain arbitrary signs, of which he invented sixteen for the notes of the scales and four for the four authentic modes. But this really made no difference in the mode of solution. The form of harmony (Symphonia) here used—not very agreeable to our modern ears—is what he describes as "Auctiore Diaphonia per Diatessaron," in which both the Cantus primus and the Organum are doubled in the octave above.

That this method of notation—we say nothing about the harmony—was an immense improvement upon the older system of Neumæ is evident, and it fixed the exact pitch of every note. But it was open to many formidable objections. It made no provision whatever for determining the comparative duration of the notes—which was only natural, seeing that no form of time-table was in existence until long after its promulgation; and it must for ever have remained inapplicable to instrumental music, since it was by the position of the words only that the pitch of the notes to be sung to them was determined. It was, no doubt, for these reasons, among others, that the system never underwent any farther development; indeed, there is strong reason for believing that it was employed by Hucbald and his friend, St. Odo, alone; and the Neumæ remained virtually in possession of the field until the invention of the stave more than a century later.

But, though a compromise, the system was a clever one, and it needed the head of a very clever Reformer to initiate it.

CREATION AND CRITICISM.

SOMEBODY—a Frenchman, if our memory serves us aright—has made an exceedingly interesting and entertaining collection of the commonplace remarks of great men. Such a collection is a comforting thing to the person of average intelligence, in so far as it proves that great gifts are compatible with occasional deviations into the realm of truism. And great composers, too, have their moments of "banality," or something like it. But what is even more interesting is the fallibility of judgment from which great minds are not exempt in their estimates of the work done by others in their own department, even when there is no suspicion of their having been actuated by jealousy. It is, of course, easy to say that the constructive and the destructive elements, the creative and critical faculties, do not coalesce. But this hardly accounts for the blunders into which eminent musicians have fallen in their verdicts upon others equally eminent. A credulous simplicity is often the mark of noble and magnanimous natures, and that might explain the exaggerated value which genius has occasionally attached to pretentious mediocrity. In the sphere of conduct and character ordinary folk are often endowed with a surer instinct than exceptional natures, and it is a not uncommon but painful experience to witness such a nature magnetised by another of coarser fibre, or sacrificing itself to an idol of the basest clay. But the other form of fallibility—the inability of genius to recognise genius elsewhere, is a more inexplicable phenomenon. The analogy from character is not so easy to find here. We often see saints imposed upon by sinners, but angels generally recognise each other. Perhaps, however, it is altogether unjustifiable to hunt for such parallels. The longer one lives the more is one convinced that music in itself, and apart from association, is an absolutely extra-moral thing. It undoubtedly reflects and illustrates the character of the composer. But not completely. There are sides of some composers' characters which they fortunately manage to keep out of their music. Music can be cynical, vulgar, tawdry, sentimental, ugly, if you like; but, apart from its setting, it cannot very well be styled immoral. After all the solution of the difficulty may be the rather obvious and ordinary one, that persons of strongly marked artistic individuality find it hard to feel sympathy for the works of those whose individuality is equally strongly marked, but in a different direction. The romantic genius is affronted by the pedantry of the classicist; the wielder of the orchestra despises the writer for the pianoforte; the dramatic composer is out of touch with the writer of chamber music, and so on.

In exemplifying the critical incapacity of composers, we purposely exclude all detailed consideration of two who were critics by profession, Berlioz and Schumann, or of Wagner, who devoted so much time to polemics. Berlioz loathed the never-ending task of having to criticise, but it was the only way left open to him to earn a livelihood, and although his feuilletons were often wrung from him by the most painful effort, they remain masterpieces of pungency and incisiveness expressed in a most individual and picturesque style. Mendelssohn's appreciation of him as a critic was as strong as his contempt for him as a composer. "His judgments on others are so clever, so cool, and so correct, he seems so thoroughly sensible, and yet he does not perceive that his own works are such rubbishy nonsense" (Letter to Moscheles from Düsseldorf, April, 1834). Schumann's criticisms are unique in their way. He had the profoundest contempt for the drudging technicians who set to work to measure a Colossus like Beethoven with a two-foot rule. One great function of the critic he held to be to reproduce in the minds of his readers, as far as possible, the impressions which the music in question had produced on his own, and to this end he laid great stress on appropriate imagery. A single striking simile, no matter how fanciful, he thought more suggestive and helpful than pages of scientific analysis. As might naturally be expected, Schumann's estimates generally erred on the side of leniency and over-appreciativeness, but in some instances his insight was most acute. His famous prediction about Brahms—which gave considerable umbrage to other aspirants at the time—is at last being fulfilled in the completest manner, and those to whom, from patriotic or other motives such success is displeasing, have to content themselves with giving reasons for the praise which the unmistakable verdict of public opinion forces them to accord. Of Wagner's criticisms we prefer not to speak at all, merely remarking that anyone who wishes to familiarise himself with Wagner's method in the smallest compass, should read his masterly brochure—by turns admirably sympathetic and reprehensibly venomous—"Ueber das Dirigiren," of which an excellent translation has recently been made by Mr. Dannreuther.

Of all the great composers, none was more limited in his range of sympathy than Spohr. He was uncritical and actually ignorant to an extent that is almost incredible. His want of perception is best instanced by his celebrated strictures on the later works of Beethoven, for whom he had a strong personal liking, and of whose sincerity and friendliness he speaks in the highest terms. Spohr admired the Seventh Symphony immensely, particularly the slow movement; but what he thought of the Ninth may be gathered from the following passage (Autobiography, English version, pp. 188-9): "Up to this period (1815) there was no visible falling off in Beethoven's creative powers. But as from this time, owing to his constantly increasing deafness, he could no longer hear any music, that of necessity must have had a prejudicial influence upon his fancy. His constant endeavour to be original, and to open out new paths, could no longer, as formerly, be preserved from error by the guidance of the ear. Was it then to be wondered at that his works became more and more eccentric, incoherent, and incomprehensible? It is true there are people who imagine they can understand them, and in their pleasure at that, rank them far above his earlier masterpieces. But I am not of the number, and freely confess that I have never been able to relish the last works of Beethoven. Yes, I must even reckon the much admired Ninth Symphony among them, the three first movements of which, in spite of some solitary flashes of genius, are to me worse than all of the eight previous symphonies, the fourth movement being, in my opinion, so monstrous and tasteless, and, in its conception of Schiller's Ode, so trivial, that I cannot even now understand how a genius like Beethoven could have written it. I find in it another proof of what I already remarked in Vienna, that Beethoven was wanting in æsthetic feeling and in a sense of the beautiful."

Of Weber's "Freischütz" he writes, in reference to his stay in Dresden in the winter of 1827: "As up to that time I had not entertained a very high opinion of Weber's talent for composition, it may be readily imagined I was not a little desirous of becoming acquainted with that opera, in order to ascertain thoroughly how it had excited such an enthusiastic admiration in the two capitals of Germany. . . . The nearer acquaintance with the opera certainly did not solve for me the riddle of its enormous success; and I could alone account for it by Weber's peculiar gift and capacity for writing for the understanding of the mass." There is a delightfully naïve passage, which we cannot resist quoting, in which Spohr relates an incident of his visit to Düsseldorf, in 1835: "The next morning, when I paid a visit to Mendelssohn, and met his sister there, he played to me the first numbers of his Oratorio 'St. Paul,' with which I was not altogether quite pleased, because it was too much in the style of Handel. He and his sister, on the other hand, appeared greatly pleased with my Concertino in E major, in which there occurred a characteristic staccato in one long stroke, by way of novelty, such as he had never before heard from any other violinist. Accompanying me, then, in a very clever manner from the score, he could not hear this staccato often enough, and repeatedly requested me to begin it again, saying the while to his sister: 'See, this is Spohr's famous staccato, which no violinist can play like him!'"

Strange to say, it was Spohr—who found Beethoven eccentric and revolutionary, who had the greatest regard for "form" and proclaimed himself the disciple of Mozart—who, nevertheless, recognised in Wagner the most gifted of all contemporary composers of dramatic music. Of the "Flying Dutchman," which, after many difficulties, he eventually produced in 1842, he wrote to a friend: "This work, although somewhat approaching the new romantic music à la Berlioz, and although it has given me immense work on account of its extreme difficulty, interests me, nevertheless, in the highest degree, for it is written apparently with true inspiration, and, unlike so much of the modern opera music, does not display in every bar the striving after effect, or effort to please." Of "Tannhäuser," which he produced in 1853, he expressed himself in similar terms, although he asserts that in the second Finale "occasionally a truly horrible din is produced. What faces would Haydn and Mozart make were they obliged to hear the stunning noise that is now given to us as music!" He confessed also that "the want of rhythm and the frequent absence of rounded periods" was still very objectionable to him. Spohr's ignorance may be illustrated by one anecdote, which speaks volumes. A pupil played to him Beethoven's Sonata in E minor (Op. 90), on which Spohr, who was much impressed, propounded the strange question, "Have you composed much more in that style, Mr. —?"

Weber's attitude to Beethoven is well known, and is well summed up in the following passage in his son's biography: "Both the two composers valued each other. They both stood far too high to have felt any envy or hostility. They even afterwards (i.e., after 1814, when Weber produced "Fidelio" at Prague) became friends as far as their great difference of character could admit of friendship. But they never fully understood each other. Indeed, it cannot be denied that the more truly the tendency of any artist springs out of his own nature, the less he can admit the genuineness of any other's tendency; the less he can comprehend it. Genius cannot but be fanatical; its concessions can be but hypocrisy. Great artists, consequently, are the worst art-critics." It is pleasant to learn that the indifference with which "Fidelio" was received by the people of Prague exasperated Weber immensely. "They could not understand all that was really great in this music. It was enough to drive one mad. Tomfoolery would suit them far better." Weber's own account of his intercourse with Beethoven, in the autumn of 1823, is one of the most interesting things in his memoirs. It is painful to think that, as his son puts it, malicious mischief-making interposed to cool their friendship: "A criticism on Beethoven, written in Weber's very youthful days, was laid before the musical giant as a serious crime; and their cordiality was strangled in its birth, although enmity there never was between the two."

In regard to Spohr, who, as we have already seen, set down Weber as merely a master of ad captandum effects, Weber was more sinned against than sinning, so far as mutual criticism went. He "spoke with admiration of Spohr's 'Jessonda,' but avowed that he generally considered his works cold. He looked upon him as a composer for the learned; as a violin player he placed Spohr above all . . . and noted down in his diary the words, 'Certainly, Spohr is a great artist.'" Schubert was no more able than Spohr to appreciate the genius of Weber, and according to the latter's son he denounced "Euryanthe" as "utterly unmusical, deficient in all form or order, without any solid foundation for the display of real talent, and, when science was attempted, giving clear evidence that the composer had studied in the school of a mere mountebank [i.e., Vogler]." "The man abuses Rossini," continued the rival composer, "and yet, when he does contrive to catch a scrap of melody, he is sure to crush it to death, like a mouse in a trap, with his overwhelming orchestration." "The controversy was carried on with great outspokenness on both sides. Weber retorted, 'Let the fool learn something himself before he criticises me.'" "Schubert's answer to this"—we quote from Sir George Grove's admirable article—"was to go off to Weber with the score of 'Alfonso and Estrella.' When they had looked through this, Weber returned to Schubert's criticisms on 'Euryanthe,' and finding that the honest Franz stuck to his point, was absurd enough to lose his temper, and say, in the obvious belief that the score before him was Schubert's first attempt, 'I tell you the first puppies and the first operas are always drowned.' Franz, it is unnecessary to say, bore no malice, even for so galling a speech, and it is due to Weber to state that he took some pains later to have the work adopted at the Dresden Theatre."

From Schubert the transition to Mendelssohn is a natural one. For Mendelssohn's excessive regard for form and his fastidious taste led him to pass the most severe strictures on what, had he lived in these days, he would have styled the Buchholz element in Schubert. The D minor Quartet he actually went the length of calling "schlechte Musik," and there is a great gulf between the qualified appreciation which he bestowed on the great C major Symphony and the rhapsodies of Schumann over the "heavenly length" of that divine work, in which, as he fancifully says, the instruments seem to be endowed with human voices. Mendelssohn speaks of it as "most remarkable and interesting," and throughout "bright, fascinating, and original," a most curiously inadequate description of the volcanic energy of the last movement. "Truly Schubert has the divine fire in him," said Beethoven, after a perusal of some of his songs. What would he have said had he heard the C major!

Certainly not that it was "remarkable and interesting" or "bright, fascinating, and original."

The recently published correspondence between Mendelssohn and Moscheles and his wife abounds in these surprises. The two friends were entirely at one in their low estimate of Berlioz. "What cruel, wicked scoring!" writes Moscheles, of the "Francs Juges" Overture; "as if to prove that our ancestors were no better than pedants. And, oh! again for the contrast of the middle subject, that would console us with a vaudeville melody. . . . Then the mystic element—a progression of screeching harmonies, unintelligible to all but the March cats." Nor is Mendelssohn more complimentary in his reply: "It is a chaotic, prosaic piece. . . . His orchestration is such a frightful muddle, such an incongruous mess that one ought to wash one's hands after handling one of his scores. Besides, it really is a shame to set nothing but murder, misery, and wailing to music." Again, of the Mazurkas of Chopin, he writes: "They are so mannered that they are hard to stand"; and says of his Studies, that in spite of their charm, "there is a good deal in them that appears unscholarlike to me." Of Heller, too, he seems to have thought but poorly (see p. 129). Per contra, he held the compositions of Moscheles himself in the highest esteem, works which, though refined in taste and workmanlike in execution, have not stood the test of time, and are far more "mannered" in their way than the Mazurkas of Chopin.

With one final and famous instance of this want of critical perception we may close this brief attempt to illustrate the antithesis between creation and criticism. We allude to the well-known strictures of Handel on Gluck. Berlioz set it down to the inability of a homme de ventre to comprehend a homme de cœur. The sting of Handel's comparison of Gluck to his cook is, no doubt, considerably mitigated by the fact that the cook in question was something of a musician. But it does not acquit Handel of liability to the charge of ignorance and want of critical insight. In regard to Mendelssohn, it is only common justice to the memory of that admirable man to state that he was very chary of expressing himself publicly, and that these allusions only occur in his private correspondence. He hated the craze for publicity and scorned to wound people's feelings by gratuitously advertising his likes and dislikes. He disliked Berlioz's music sincerely, but the most ardent worshipper of the French composer's genius could not have laboured more devotedly than he did at Leipzig to secure a perfect interpretation of his guest's compositions. No musician ever displayed a more loyal esprit de corps. One obvious moral we think results from the inquiry. Professional critics, when they reflect on the fallibility of such great artists as those we have discussed, would do well to consider the probability that they too may be fallible, and this reflection ought to exert a restraining influence on the utterance of unqualified censure or approval.

THE GREAT COMPOSERS.

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

No. XXVII.—HANDEL (continued from page 717).

HANDEL's biographers are all in confusion about the dates and other particulars connected with the master's arrival and early sojourn in Italy. Chrysander has it that he spent the Christmas of 1706 with his mother at Halle, proceeding to Florence in January, 1707. Schœlcher, on the other hand, contends that he reached the Tuscan capital in June, 1706, remained there six months, went to Venice in January, 1707, and visited Rome in April of the same year. On his part, Mr. Rockstro claims the more "consistent" chronology for Crysander, but admits that Schœlcher's plan "agrees no less exactly with the few well-authenticated dates we possess than Crysander's." The matter, important in a full record of Handel's life, is not one for discussion here, and we pass on to more authenticated matter.

It seems pretty certain that Handel was at Rome in April, 1707, and during his stay in the Eternal City composed several sacred works—a "Dixit Dominus" for five voices and orchestra, and a "Laudate Pueri" for the same, a Chorus in which is now the "Glory to God" of "Joshua." Returning to Florence, as is stated, in July, 1707, he there brought out the first of his long series of Italian operas—"Rodrigo," the overture to which is that to "Almira," plus a number of dance measures. Mainwaring states that for this work he was presented with one hundred sequins and a service of plate, and adds, "This may serve for a sufficient testimony of its favourable reception." We must admit that the testimony is sufficient, if it be true, but there is no doubt that "Rodrigo" was a success. Its composer was a success also; at any rate, with the prima donna, Vittoria Tosi, who, according to the authority just cited, followed the young Saxon to Venice, although the "favourite" of the Grand Duke. Handel reached Venice in January, 1708 (most of these dates must be taken under all reserves), stayed there three months, and produced "Agrippina," his second Italian opera. Mainwaring, never at a loss for a story, tells one anent the master's first appearance at the Court of the Queen of the Adriatic. "He was first discovered there at a masquerade, while he was playing on a harpsichord in his vizor. Scarlatti happened to be there, and affirmed that it could be no one but the famous Saxon, or the devil. Being thus detected, he was strongly importuned to compose an opera," &c. We have here a stronger flavour of Italian romance than one expects to find connected with the person of a very practical young man from the north of Germany; but all biographers accept it, and there can be no doubt about "Agrippina," or the success it met with. The work had a "run" of twenty-seven nights, although two other opera-houses were open at the same time, and the audiences were so enchanted "that," writes Mainwaring, "a stranger who should have seen the manner in which they were affected would have imagined they had all been distracted. The theatre, at almost every pause, resounded with shouts and acclamations of viva il caro Sassone! and other expressions of approbation too extravagant to be mentioned. They were thunderstruck with the grandeur and sublimity of his style." Handel seems to have shared the good opinion of his effusion, and some of the airs in "Agrippina" did duty a second time in after compositions. The autograph score, incomplete and without an overture, is in the Buckingham Palace collection.

Handel was again at Rome in March, 1708 (let us not forget that a cloud obscures the dates of all these itineraries). His newly acquired fame having preceded him, he at once fell among good company. He became the guest of the Marquis of Ruspoli, a great leader of culture at the time, and the doors of the illustrious Cardinal Ottoboni's palace were open to him, as to every famous exponent of art. This Prince of the Church was also a princely man of the world. Mainwaring writes: "He had a large library of music and an excellent band of performers, which he kept in constant pay. The illustrious Corelli played the first violin, and had apartments in the Cardinal's palace." Handel was, of course, asked to write for the periodical Concerts in his Eminence's house, and equally, of course, he did so, to the no small astonishment of the Italians, whose southern softness and grace were, perhaps, a little shocked by the rough energy and Titanic strength of the musician from the North. So might the effeminate Romans of the moribund Empire have regarded the stalwart forms of Alaric's Goths. Again, to quote Mainwaring: "There was also something in his manner so very different from what the Italians had been used to, that those who were seldom or never at a loss in performing any other music, were frequently puzzled how to execute it." Then we have a story of Handel snatching the violin from Corelli to show him how a certain passage should be executed, while the sweet-tempered Italian professed his inability even to comprehend them. The Saxon master's works in Rome at this time were the Oratorios "La Resurrezione" and "Il Trionfo del Tempo e del Disinganno," the first written, it is surmised, at the instance of his host, Ruspoli, while the libretto of the second is by Cardinal Panfili, and both, we may assume, were first performed at Ottoboni's musical gatherings. After his manner, Handel used some of the "Agrippina" airs in "La Resurrezione"; but, as Mr. Rockstro points out, the new music "is certainly written in a more earnest spirit and with an infinitely greater amount of dramatic power." This can readily be credited by those who know the splendid air "O voi dell'Erebo," so often sung by Mr. Santley. Other works of this period are seven French songs, a number of Italian pieces, a Motet "Silete venti," and, as some say, the "Magnificat" (afterwards so largely drawn upon for "Israel in Egypt") which others contend was really composed by Erba.

Handel's next move was to Naples, and there, at the request of a certain Donna Laura, he composed a Serenata, "Aci, Galatea e Polifemo"; the subject, but not the music, being the same as that of the work "Acis and Galatea," written in England. This Donna Laura is somewhat of a mythical personage, and Mr. Rockstro, we observe, makes no mention of her, nor does Fétis, nor does Schœlcher. Her existence and influence is, however, asserted by Mattheson, and Mainwaring, speaking of her, says, "Whether a Portuguese or a Spanish princess, I will not be certain. But the pomp and magnificence of this lady should seem to speak of Spanish extraction, for she lived, acted, and conversed with a state truly regal." Schœlcher's description of the Serenata may be added: "In this everything takes place between the three personages; there is neither any division of acts nor chorus, nor even an overture, at least according to the present state of the MS. It is, indeed, more of a cantata for three voices with an orchestra, than a serenata; at any rate, it is not an opera, as Mr. Sterndale Bennett called it in his preface to the English Acis published by the Handel Society." Socially, Handel was as fortunate in Naples as everywhere else. "He received," writes Mainwaring, "invitations from most of the principal persons who lived within reach of that capital, and lucky was he esteemed who could engage him soonest and detain him longest." Retracing his steps northward, Handel spent Christmas in Rome, next revisited Florence, and finished his Italian experiences in Venice, staying there till the summer of 1710. The exact date of his quitting the "land of song" is as obscure as the precise time of his arrival there. Of the influence which the Italian tour had upon the expression of Handel's genius there can be no question. Naturally, he may have had a greater feeling for melody, and a higher power of melodic utterance than Sebastian Bach, but, while this remains uncertain, we know that a nature so receptive and a mind so alert could not be for a long time in direct contact with Italian art without catching a good deal both of its form and its spirit.

This, however, without loss of native northern energy and force.

Handel plunges into darkness on leaving Venice, reappearing next at Halle, and next at the Hanoverian Court, where the future George I. of England held sway as Elector. The dominant musician there, as in most German Courts of that day, was an Italian, Steffani by name, whom he had met in Venice. Steffani took kindly to his German brother in art. The master had a friend also in a Hanoverian nobleman, Baron Kilmansegge, a persona gratâ at the Palace. Through his influence, aided by Steffani, Elector George bestowed upon Handel a pension of 1,500 crowns, which, however, the sturdy Saxon would not accept till he understood that it left him free to carry out the scheme of travel on which he had set his heart. Next Steffani having resigned as Kapellmeister, Handel was offered the post, and took it on the same conditions. There surely must have been a personal attraction in the young Saxon, apart from his genius, to explain the good fortune that befel him everywhere. Mere musical gifts could hardly account for his easy access to men's hearts, or the facility with which he turned cold strangers into warm friends. Travelling from Hanover to Düsseldorf, and paying his respects to the Elector Palatine, who presented him with a silver dessert service, Handel pushed on through Holland to England; either late in November or early in December, 1710, then first treading the soil of what was to be his adopted country, the scene of his greatest glory, the place of his death, and the honoured custodian of his mortal remains.

With regard to the condition of music in this island when Handel arrived, Mainwaring has some remarks which should not be passed over: "Excepting a few good compositions in the church style, and of a very old date, I am afraid there was little to boast of which we could call our own. At this time operas were a sort of new acquaintance, but began to be established in the affections of the nobility, many of whom had heard and admired performances of this kind in the country which gave them birth. But the conduct of them here—i.e., all that regards the drama or plan, including also the machinery, scenes, and decorations—was foolish and absurd almost beyond imagination. The last Pope but one was so exceedingly entertained with Mr. Addison's humorous account,* that on reading his papers relating to it, he laughed till he shook his sides. Mr. Addison seems, a little unfairly, to impute this vitiated taste to the growing fondness for everything that was Italian. It is far from impossible that the Manager might have found his taste established here, and have been obliged to conform to it. Who or what the composers were we are not informed, nor is it very material to inquire. For, from the account of the commencement of the Italian opera here, as we find it in No. 18 of the Spectator, it is plain that, what with the confusion of languages and the transposition of passions and sentiments owing to that cause, the best composer could hardly be distinguished from the worst. The arrival of Handel put an end to this reign of nonsense." Pointing out, in passing, that Mainwaring, with a true biographer's zeal, exalts his hero by undue depreciation of the state of things he came to amend—he ignores Purcell, for example—it is interesting to contemplate the fact that he seems to know nothing of any music save that of the stage and the church. In effect there was no other, and Handel's best memorial lies in the difference, to which he so largely contributed, between the art in England when he arrived and when Death snatched him away. The master was heartily welcomed in this country. Queen Anne smiled graciously upon him, and opera-lovers of all ranks demanded a stage work from his pen. Handel's response was "Rinaldo," first, and many think the best, of his dramatic compositions. The libretto of "Rinaldo" was founded by Aaron Hill upon an episode in Tasso's "Jerusalem Delivered," and is an excellent example of the best work of the day in that line. The Italian version is from the pen of Giacomo Rossi, whose curious preface is worth quoting: "Signor Hendel (sic), the Orpheus of our age, in setting to music this lay from Parnassus, has scarcely given me time enough to write it, and I have beheld, to my great astonishment, an entire opera harmonised to the last degree of perfection in the short space of a fortnight by this sublime genius. I pray you then, discreet reader, to receive my rapid work and, if it does not merit all your praises, at least do not refuse it your compassion, I would rather say your justice, remembering how short a time I have had to write it in." "Rinaldo" was produced, in splendid style, on February 24, 1711, with immense success. This was the occasion, known to readers of the Spectator, when Hill filled the gardens of Armida with living birds. Addison ridiculed the "sparrows" in merciless fashion, but the public applauded, and Schœlcher very pertinently asks: "Do the laws of theatrical illusion require that theatrical birds should be of pasteboard?" The opera had a run of fifteen nights and was often revived. It is now best known, perhaps, by the air "Lascia ch' io pianga."

Handel could not prolong his pleasant English experiences. The Hanoverian cords were tugging at him, and he must do something for his annual twelve hundred crowns. But the London public were extremely loth to part with the musician who had so charmed them—a feeling to which even the Queen gave expression. Mainwaring writes: "When he took leave of the Queen at her Court, and expressed his sense of the favours conferred on him, her Majesty was pleased to add to them by large presents, and to intimate her desire of seeing him again. Not a little flattered by such marks of approbation from so illustrious a personage, he promised to return the moment he could obtain permission from the Prince in whose service he was retained." It was not on his way back to Hanover, as says Schœlcher, that the master paid another visit to his mother—now old and blind. He made direct for his Electoral master's Court, and there composed a number of small works, including, it is said, but not conclusively proved, thirteen Italian chamber duets and twelve cantatas, some songs, and, according to Crysander, the six hautboy concertos, to which most authorities assign a later date. These are matters that have never yet been satisfactorily cleared up. Of one thing we may be sure—namely, that Handel frequently longed for the larger stage of London. What could a musician of his calibre do within the narrow limits of a petty principedom? Hercules may hold a distaff, but only for love, and no feeling of that sort bound the great master to his small Hanoverian duties. It was not long, therefore, before he again asked leave to visit the birthplace of "Rinaldo." It was granted by the Elector, who desired, perhaps, to stand well with those that might some day be his subjects; but before setting out, Handel visited his mother at Halle, the time of that filial act being determined by the public register, where it appears that on November 23 he stood godfather to his niece, Johanna Friderica Michaelsen. The precise date of the master's re-appearance in London is a matter of doubt, into which it would be out of place to enter here. The certain thing is that in November, 1712, he brought out "Pastor Fido" at the Queen's Theatre. Rossi was again the librettist, but he had not the dramatic talent of Aaron Hill, and though the music was admired, the public did not crowd to hear it. After six performances it was withdrawn, but revived at various times in after years, and subjected to considerable alterations. "Pastor Fido" was followed by "Teseo" early in 1713, the libretto in this case being the work of Haym, a writer and even composer of recognised merit.

Handel's next appearance was as a composer of sacred music, his opportunity for playing that part coming with the Peace of Utrecht, which terminated what was for England, as the phrase goes, a "glorious war." It should be understood that he was chosen to write the official thanksgiving, and did not thrust himself forward in advance of men whose position gave them a sort of vested right to the function. One Eccles was at that time composer to the Chapel Royal, but, for reasons not difficult to imagine, the authorities preferred the great man who had so recently come amongst them, albeit not a British subject. In his remarks upon the Utrecht "Te Deum" and "Jubilate," Mr. Rockstro fairly acknowledges the influence of our great English master, Purcell—influence which cannot be denied, though its full extent is rarely admitted. Handel's latest biographer writes, after describing Purcell's "Te Deum" as "a great work adapted to the prevailing taste of the period": "No doubt Handel heard it there (in St. Paul's Cathedral), for his affection for Father Smith's beautiful organ attracted him to the Cathedral constantly; and, if so, he must have listened to Purcell's harmonious progressions with more than ordinary interest, since they represented the English school of Church music in the highest phase of development it had as yet attained in combination with instrumental support. And it was precisely at this point that he cast in his lot with the English School, and led it onwards towards a greatness, the full glories of which it was scarcely possible that he himself could then have distinctly foreseen." The same writer remarks further: "We may therefore regard it as Handel's first great English work (taking precedence, in point of time, over the "Birthday Ode") and we shall probably be not far wrong if we assume that the composer used the Ode as the means of testing the amount of sympathy upon which he could depend on the part of his audiences, and that, finding them ready to go with him as far as he was prepared to take them, he never afterwards wavered in his determination to pursue his new ideal to its legitimate end." The Utrecht "Te Deum" and "Jubilate" were composed in 1712, but not performed till July 7, 1713; the place probably being St. Paul's, though this has not been ascertained beyond a doubt. The first intention certainly was to hold the service in the Metropolitan Cathedral, and Schelcher quotes from the Post Boy of July 2 in proof: "Her Majesty, accompanied by the Houses of Lords and Commons, goes the 7th to St. Paul's, being the day appointed for the thanksgiving." The Queen, however, being a woman, had a right to change her mind and did so, as the same journal's next issue shows: "Her Majesty does not go to St. Paul's July the 7th, as she designed, but comes up from Windsor to St. James's, to return thanks to God for the blessings of peace." It would seem that the Post Boy and other journals of the period have vainly been searched to discover, as Schelcher puts it, "whether the music, and the Houses of Lords and Commons, left the Metropolitan Cathedral in order to follow the Queen to the Chapel of St. James's"—which, by the way, could not have accommodated a tithe of them, to say nothing of the band and chorus. In one respect the consequences to Handel were the same as though his victorious trumpets had actually sounded in the ears of Queen Anne, that amiable sovereign being pleased to bestow upon him a life pension of £200. Princely pay, this, for a "Te Deum," and the shrewd Saxon must have thought that his lines, thanks to a special Providence, had fallen to him in pleasant places. He was now fairly well to do. The annual £200—which represents much more than the same amount now—added to the Hanoverian 1,200 crowns, made up a nice little sum for a bachelor gentleman. What wonder, on comparing the possibilities of London with those of Hanover, that he was loth to go back to the dull German town? But, of course, it was wrong of him to break his engagement with the Elector, and stay on and on to, no doubt, the great annoyance of that important personage. It was impolitic also, for George was heir to the British throne, and Queen Anne might die any day. As a matter of fact, she did die, on August 1, 1714, and then Handel had to face in one and the same person an offended master and an English King.

THE meeting of the Bristol Festival guarantors passed off more peaceably than had been expected, thanks to the overwhelming majority in support of the status quo. A minority, nevertheless, stood up bravely for the principle of fostering native talent, and demanded the engagement of Mr. Riseley as Conductor, as well as the encouragement of resident orchestral performers. Into the pro and con of the Bristol dispute—especially as it has ended for the time being—we do not propose to enter, but the matter contrasted is one of widespread interest. It amounts to this—whether, in Festival towns, local talent shall be engaged, or whether the instrumentalists shall be brought from London. It seems to us that this question is not difficult to decide in the abstract; but, unfortunately, considerations of a very concrete nature interfere. At Birmingham, for example, the orchestral performers are selected by the Conductor, and the rule established there prevails, for the most part, in other places. Naturally, the Conductor prefers to engage men whom he knows, and of whose ability he is sure; the result being that a non-resident chief has a train of non-resident followers, to the exclusion of men, sufficiently qualified it may be, who reside on the spot. Hence the discontent which is by no means confined to Bristol. Efficiency must, of course, be the main thing kept in view. That consideration overrides all other, whether residents or strangers go to the wall; but, other things being equal, we are strongly of opinion that performers who live in the festival towns should have preference. Our reason is that the creation of orchestras all over the country is pre-eminently to be desired, and that the consummation is decidedly hindered when good men, living on the spot, are passed over in favour of Londoners at the most important musical solemnity known to the neighbourhood. This is a very simple position easily defended and impossible successfully to assail.

OUR readers need hardly be reminded that we rarely look with favour upon the various mechanical inventions for lessening the labour of children in acquiring independence of finger and clearness of touch on the keyboard of the pianoforte. Daily practice of scales and five-finger exercises can scarcely, we fear, be facilitated by the aid of the most ingenious machines ever invented, and young musical students should take heart when they reflect that, however slow their progress may be, they are travelling by the same road as that traversed by the great pianists of the world. But although nothing can be devised to mitigate the weariness of practice to the performer, surely something might be thought of to soften its effect upon the listener. Mendelssohn, in a letter to Fanny Hensel, says, "One of my Düsseldorf troubles is at this moment beginning; I mean my next door neighbour, who has placed her piano against the wall just on the other side of mine, and to my sorrow practises two hours a day, making every day the same mistakes." The torture this is, especially to musical ears, can scarcely be imagined; and it is well that those who, perhaps unconsciously, inflict such torment upon a helpless victim should know that means do exist for dulling the noise emitted during the time devoted to practice. A very simple contrivance, the efficacy of which we have ourselves tested, would at once restore that neighbourly feeling which has too often been interrupted by the proximity of an instrument constructed to promote, rather than to destroy, harmony. Why, then, should not this method of alleviating the misery caused by musical pupils be more generally adopted? It must be remembered that in the practice of purely technical exercises the young pianist becomes for the time almost an automaton; and that although persons may not object to a pianoforte when used as a musical instrument, they may reasonably wish to shut their ears to it when used as a machine. A semi-detached house calls up horrible anticipations of the sounds which are likely to be conveyed through the thin lath and plaster on the non-detached side; but although an incoming tenant may, as in the case of Mendelssohn, to which we have alluded, resign himself as a condemned man, he has at least a right to expect that he will be "recommended to mercy."

THE decease of the Sacred Harmonic Society cannot be said to involve a heavy appeal to sentiment. It was not the Sacred Harmonic Society which must ever live in the annals of English music, and around the death-bed of which gathered many regrets and a good deal of affectionate recollection. For all that, amateurs cannot but feel sorry that an institution bearing a great name, and animated by desire to prove worthy of it, has passed away. A landmark has undoubtedly been removed. Yet some consolation remains in regard of it. The public, ever distrustful of young enterprises, turned a cold shoulder to the new Sacred Harmonic at the first, and kept it there, even when a more friendly attitude had been earned; but the directors and members of the Society—now mere atoms in the world of music—can pride themselves upon the fact that the best was done to deserve success. This is their natural attitude in the last official document issued, pointing, with justifiable satisfaction, to more than thirty works produced in the space of six years. They have a good record, and it will be noted in after years by students of musical history that the Society accepted defeat as gallantly as its members strove for victory. It is said of Englishmen that they never know when they are beaten, and there may have been times when this form of national ignorance has served them well. But a practical people recognises accomplished facts. The Sacred Harmonic Society, ruled by practical people, saw that the unvarying experience of six years allowed of no hope for the future, so, as Julius Cæsar gathered his robe about him and died decently, it put an end to itself in a dignified manner. We unfeignedly regret the need for this, and ourselves allow, what we claim for it from others, cordial recognition of good service well rendered in the face of many obstacles.

A DAILY contemporary, looking about, as its manner is, for a holiday topic, has come upon the idea of supplying music to private houses. Both the editor and the correspondents who started the discussion assume that there are a multitude of young ladies, more or less trained in the practice of the art, who find difficulty in making their skill provide a living. We may take this as an absolute fact, and one which, if the present rush into the musical profession continues, will ere long assume portentous dimensions. But there is another assumption—that families of the middle and upper classes are ready and willing to engage such persons to come from time to time and sing and play in the domestic circle. This, of course, no one can absolutely prove, at any rate to the extent necessary. We can only speak of such individual cases as have come under personal notice; but there is reason to believe that such cases are more numerous than many suppose, and assuredly plentiful enough to warrant some trial being made of the value of the new idea. It is reasonable to suppose that there are thousands of households in these realms inclined to welcome the services of a young musician who can play or sing with correctness and feeling. The essential points are that the artist shall go as to a family circle, with no expense in the matter of dress, and on such moderate terms as will permit of frequent or periodical visits. If worked out in a practical manner, the plan may provide a field of congenial and honourable employment for the female musicians who are now with us in large and ever-growing numbers, and may also bring a pleasant and refined art to homes where it is now absent, or imperfectly, perhaps painfully, represented.

ON the first Tuesday in Advent it has been the custom for several years past to perform Spohr's "Last Judgment" at a special evening service in St. Paul's Cathedral. Hitherto the accompaniments have always been played by the late Organist, Dr. Stainer, and his representation of the intricate score on the fine instrument belonging to the church has always excited the highest admiration. At the repetition of the service, on the 4th ult., a small but complete band was employed, and as it was composed of some of the most experienced executants, the change was worthily carried out under the direction of Dr. Martin, who conducted. The organ was only used in accompanying the Psalms in the shortened form of service, Mr. Hodge presiding. There was no augmented choir, the whole of the solos and choruses being sung by the ordinary body assembled in full as for Sunday. The solos for treble and alto were sung by Masters Cockell and Townsend, those for tenor being divided between Messrs. Kenningham, Hanson, and Fryer, the several bass parts being sung by Messrs. Kempton, Grice, and Miles. There was an enormous congregation, and the reverent attention which was paid may be accepted as proof of the high appreciation of this most beautiful and impressive service.

AT a meeting of the guarantors of the Leeds Musical Festival, on the 6th ult., Alderman Frederick Spark, Hon. Sec., read the Report of the Provisional Committee, showing that several new works were arranged for next year's Festival. Four well-known composers had been invited to contribute novelties. Herr Brahms, however, declined with great regret, owing to his nervous condition. Dr. Hubert Parry accepted the invitation in August, 1887, when he afterwards consented to write an Oratorio for the Birmingham Festival of 1888. Dr. Parry's subject for Leeds is Pope's "Ode to St. Cecilia's Day." Mr. Frederick Corder will write a Dramatic Cantata, "The Sword of Argantyr," founded on a Scandinavian legend; and Sir Arthur Sullivan, who was applied to for a Symphony, was unable to promise to undertake so important a task, but will contribute a short work, either vocal or instrumental, according as he may find time. Dr. Creser, as representing Leeds art, has composed a one-scene Cantata, "Freia, Goddess of Spring," for chorus, with solo voices. The guarantee fund now reaches twenty-five thousand pounds, seven thousand in advance of the amount of three years ago.

THERE is to be a Spanish Exhibition next year, at Earl's Court, upon the site of the late Italian Exhibition. It is needless to say that music will be made a special feature; several bands are engaged, including a few belonging to Spanish regiments, the Estudiantina band of guitars, castanets, &c.; and a troupe of dancers will be provided, consisting of men and women in their native costumes. A regular series of evening Concerts will also be given, and ten noted players of the attractive game "Pelota" have been specially engaged from the Basque provinces. There will also be members of the Civil Guards in their attractive dresses, barbers in Figaro dresses, bandits in their picturesque attire, and various other attractions. The music will form an interesting and perhaps an educational attraction; but it is not quite certain that the presence of the bandits will prove that the directors are influenced by the highest canons of taste. The exhibition of a body of Spanish bandits in picturesque attire in England is almost equivalent to the display of a gang of ticket-of-leave men in government uniforms in another country.

A REGULAR attendant at the Pupils' Concerts of the Royal College of Music writes as follows:—"Premising that I have derived great pleasure and profit from these instructive and enjoyable gatherings, I may be perhaps allowed to call the attention of the directors, through the medium of your columns, to the scanty recognition they accord to the claims of concerted vocal music. Of solos, instrumental and vocal, there is always a plethora. The choir contains admirable material, but it is far too seldom heard. Latterly we have been treated to recitations, which is a perfectly defensible innovation, and a child-pianist, which at such an institution is a most reprehensible one. But the vast wealth of madrigal music, native and foreign, is left almost untouched and unexplored. If I may be allowed to make a suggestion, it is that part-songs should be regularly included in every programme, and that appearances of solo vocalists should be few and far between. The discrepancy between the standard observed in the selection of the songs and in that of the instrumental numbers, is the weak point in these otherwise admirable entertainments."

WE have been favoured with a prospectus of the new American "Cyclopædia of Music and Musicians," which, in the humble opinion of its editors, is to supersede in comprehensiveness and simplicity all previous works of the same character. This modest document sets forth, with the utmost ingenuousness, as novel features of the new work, methods of arrangement which are as old as the everlasting hills. Special stress is laid upon the number of portraits which are to appear in the Cyclopædia; but if we are to judge of their merits by the sample given on the specimen page, we should say that the aim of the artist had been to produce a set of likenesses worthy of the Chamber of Horrors. For the benefit of intending purchasers, we may add that the edition is limited to fifty numbered copies for England, price five guineas per volume.

THE third issue of Mr. Hermann Klein's "Musical Notes" Annual for 1889 is about to be published by Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co. It will contain a critical record of all Musical events of importance which have taken place during the past year, and so will serve as a handy record and book of reference in musical matters.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

THERE was a crowded audience at the Albert Hall, on the 15th ult., when Sullivan's "Golden Legend" exercised its constant and potent attraction. Very few words are necessary to record a generally good performance of that now most familiar work, especially as the principal solo parts were sustained by Madame Nordica, Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Henschel in a manner to which amateurs are accustomed. Mr. Hodge presided at the organ, and Mr. Barnby conducted. That the audience awarded to the work and its exponents abundant applause will be taken for granted.

NOVELLO'S ORATORIO CONCERTS.

"All's well that ends well," truly, but we must not undervalue a good beginning, such, for example, as was made by the new season of these Concerts in St. James's Hall, on the 6th ult. Its merit was two-fold: first, in the presentation of a work fresh to London; next, in performing it after a manner exceptionally near to an unattainable perfection. These are great matters, and the Concert made a mark not easily to be effaced from the record of musical doings in the Metropolis.

Dr. Parry's "Judith," the work referred to above, was produced, as all the world knows, at the Birmingham Festival, in August last, and had full discussion in these pages immediately afterwards. We have not now, therefore, to enter upon a formal criticism of Dr. Parry's Oratorio. Yet reference must be made to one important point. At the first performance of "Judith" many connoisseurs felt, in the midst of admiration for its high qualities, that improvement was possible. They took exception, on very practical grounds, to the length of the work, and the elaboration of some among its numbers, and they complained, for purely artistic reasons, that the section treating of the affliction of Jerusalem and the return of Manasseh tended somewhat to lack of interest and consequent weariness at a critical place in the development of the work. Composers are not always inclined to admit the justice of their censors, and pride sometimes prompts them to hold fast by mistakes even when they themselves see that mistakes have been made. In the matter of "Judith," Dr. Parry, to his credit be it said, took the earliest opportunity of amending his Oratorio in precisely the manner indicated by his friendly and discerning hearers at Birmingham. Preparing "Judith" for St. James's Hall performance, he removed a part of the opening chorus in the second act, and took away, also, the trio for the Queen, Manasseh, and Judith, the chorus "Woe, Woe," and a part of the final number. This "lightened the ship" wonderfully. It brought the work within reasonable dimensions, as the public now understand them, and it took away some of the music in which least interest was found. We are not sure that quite enough has yet been done in this direction. It may be that the tenor solo forming the intermezzo should follow the excised portions, for, though it contains some beautiful music, none of us greatly care to hear the pietistic utterances of a man who is making repentance his last stake in the game of life. But whether the intermezzo remain or no, the St. James's Hall version of the Oratorio is a vast improvement upon the original.

We have already characterised the performance, but some remarks in detail are essential to justice, and, first of all, we must praise the chorus for singing a great deal of trying music so that hypercriticism alone could find fault.

Only those who know intimately the concerted vocal pieces in "Judith" can estimate the merit of an achievement which has carried the Novello Choir far to the front with a rush. The orchestra took a full share of the general credit, playing up well and accurately from beginning to end, while the principal vocalists strove with conscientiousness and success to be worthy of their task. This remark specially applies to Miss Anna Williams (Judith), Madame Patey (Queen), and Mr. Lloyd (Manassch), who were entirely satisfactory: nor should praise be withheld from Mr. Plunket Greene (Priest), or Masters Wynne and Lambert, who sang the music of the young Princes. Mr. Lloyd, as may be supposed, had an "ovation" after the Handelian air in which Manassch rejoices over the discomfiture of his foes, and Madame Patey won cordial applause by her singing of the music in the scene with the Boys. Dr. Mackenzie, for whom the occasion was a triumph, conducted with decision and absolute knowledge of what he wanted.

A Christmas performance of "The Messiah" was given on the 18th ult., with Mrs. Hutchinson, Madame Antoinette Sterling, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley as soloists. The old Oratorio went smoothly, and had, indeed, a very fine performance, which, however, calls for no more than this general qualification.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

THE first of these performances was fully dealt with in the December issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES. We have therefore to commence our record this month with the second Concert, on November 27, at which there was an excellent attendance, the necessary stimulus having been provided by a good programme. At the outset everything was well, the first item, Weber's "Oberon" Overture, being rendered with much spirit. The favourable impression was continued by a magnificent performance of Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in D minor, by Miss Fanny Davies. This gifted young artist is evincing most satisfactory progress towards maturity of style, and she realised the beauty of Mozart's masterpiece in a manner impossible to surpass. Here, unfortunately, praise must end concerning this Concert. The Symphony was Brahms's in F (No. 3), the most concise and genial of the four yet given to the world by the German master. The work has been strangely neglected, and had the present performance been adequate Mr. Henschel would have deserved praise for a tardy act of justice. But, as it happened, the Symphony suffered more than it gained; whether from insufficient rehearsal, or for some other reason impossible to determine, the rendering was below mediocrity. The orchestra was painfully slipshod throughout, and nearly all the points by which the general effect of the work should have been made missed fire. Even the attractive Poco allegretto, which was encoired under Mr. Richter, fell flat. Those who remained for the popular "Tannhäuser" Overture were not rewarded for their pains. The dignity of this work was much impaired by Mr. Henschel's rapid tempi, the hurried close being especially objectionable. It is unpleasant to be compelled to adopt this tone, but no benefit can accrue from concealing the truth. The programme of this Concert was completed by a curious, if not very important, revival—namely, the music to a "Ritter-Ballet," or masked ball, composed by Beethoven at the instance of Count Waldstein, about 1790, and first published in the supplementary volume of the master's works recently issued. The movements are seven in number, and are bright and spirited, though of scarcely any real value.

At the third of these Concerts, given in St. James's Hall, on the 4th ult., some interesting works were presented, including the rarely-played Overture to Mozart's "Idomeneo," which Mr. Reinecke has provided with an ending in order that it may be taken as a separate piece. The noble prelude is in Mozart's best manner, and we trust it will remain on Mr. Henschel's active repertory. Miss Emily Shinner and Miss Geraldine Morgan made a decided "hit" with Bach's Concerto in D minor, for two violins—best known to connoisseurs by the lovely slow movement, which is as fresh as though written yesterday, and exists "not for an age, but for all time." The work as a whole is, of course, more or less familiar, and we need only say that the young soloists acquitted themselves very well, playing with precision, correct intonation, and admirable ensemble. Liszt's symphonic poem "Orpheus," Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony and the Overture to "The Mastersingers" completed the selection, and were, for the most part, efficiently rendered. In this respect, strange to say, the "Italian" Symphony was the least satisfactory, save for the Finale, which rushed through its course with all requisite dash and animation.

The fourth Concert took place on the 11th ult., opening with Beethoven's Overture "Coriolan—an example of the great master now too well known for comment. Madame Essipoff played a work by a composer for whose music she has a strong taste, but it is open to question whether the audience would not have preferred a classical Concerto to that of Saint-Saëns's in G minor. At the same time, there is no great profit in the continual presentation of a few great works, and amateurs should be appreciative rather than captious when an artist like Madame Essipoff goes off the beaten track. Besides, the French composer's music, with its many striking passages, is worth a divergence. The main feature in the programme was Berlioz's "Harold in Italy," the Symphony written for viola and orchestra at the express desire of Paganini, who, by the way, did not find himself greatly drawn to such of the music as came under his eye. Like all the larger works of Berlioz, "Harold in Italy" is a strange mixture of ravishing beauty and bewildering exaggeration, and leaves upon the mind a mixed impression with, perhaps, a preponderating feeling of annoyance that a master who could write so well when he chose did not always put a wholesome restraint upon his imagination and his style. The more favourite movements were admirably played under Mr. Henschel's direction, and the viola solo had an efficient exponent in Mr. Emil Krauz, of the Royal College of Music. Wagner's "Träume" and the Hungarian March from Berlioz's "Faust" completed the Concert.

The first of two morning Concerts was given on the 19th ult., with a programme largely made up of selections already heard during the season. Wagner's "A Faust Overture," and Grieg's pretty Suite, played at the opening Concert, were thus repeated, with them being given the Overture to "Tannhäuser" and Beethoven's C minor Symphony. These popular and well-known works may pass with simple mention. The attraction of the morning was greatly enhanced by Mrs. Henschel, who sang Handel's "Lusinghe più care" and her husband's "Adieux de l'Hôteesse Arabe" in charming style.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE chief novelty of the Concert of the 1st ult., Moszkowski's "Cortège," proved disappointingly commonplace, and suffered from its position between two such refined and romantic works as Bennett's "Paradise and the Peri" Overture—most poetically rendered by the band—and Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto. Madame Essipoff's rendering of the solo part in the latter work was not altogether satisfactory, lacking warmth and breadth in the first movement, the cadenza being taken so fast as to sound unintelligible. Later on Madame Essipoff contributed some trifles by Paderewski and Chopin with wonderful neatness and faultless technique. Schumann's "Rhenish" Symphony was, on the whole, finely interpreted by Mr. Manns, though the slow movement has gone better on former occasions. The vocalist was Miss Carlotta Badia, who sang "Bel raggio" between two of Schumann's ripest and finest masterpieces.

The programme of the ninth Concert opened brightly with the Overture to the "Yeomen of the Guard," to the piquant fancy and clever orchestration of which full justice was done by Mr. Manns. Mozart's G minor Symphony is always welcome, proving as it does that the element of "Sehnsucht" was not wanting in the composer's genius. Drawing-room critics who find Mozart too "tuney," may be recommended to go and study this work, which was an especial favourite of Schubert's. The melodious setting of the 23rd Psalm by the last-named composer, for female chorus, proved one of the most agreeable numbers in the programme. For the effective scoring of the original simple pianoforte accompaniment, Mr. Manns was responsible. If such things are to be done it is fortunate when, as in the present case, they are done by competent hands. Mr. MacCunn's spirited Ballad for orchestra and chorus, "Lord Ullin's Daughter," was performed for the second time on this occasion, and with the greatest success, though the declamation of the singers left a good deal to be desired. Mr. Praeger's Symphonic Prelude to "Manfred" was repeated after an interval of eight years. It is less dismal than other works of his, but narrowly escapes commonplaceness, thanks to the elaboration of its orchestration. M. Marsick, who played Wieniawski's Violin Concerto, is a clever performer, with an abundance of technique and sentiment and a sweet tone. The show-pieces he played later on were the most tawdry specimens of musical pyrotechny that we have heard for a long time. Mdlle. Antoinette Trebelli sang Mozart's "Non mi dir" ("Don Giovanni") and the Polacca from "Mignon," the latter very brilliantly, and the Concert ended with a fine performance of Berlioz's "Francs Juges" Overture, a work which roused the contempt and ire of Mendelssohn, but in regard to which the verdict of posterity has reversed that of the composer of the "Elijah."

On Saturday, the 15th ult., Dr. Parry's "Judith" was performed for the second time before a Metropolitan audience, which, when the adverse climatic conditions are taken into account, was of sufficiently imposing dimensions. As in St. James's Hall, the work awoke genuine enthusiasm by its dignity and virile force. The orchestra was occasionally very rough, but the Novello choir repeated their admirable performance, and Mr. McGuckin, who on this occasion took the tenor part, was much applauded for his delivery of the Handelian Aria. Mr. Brereton was a competent representative of the bass rôle. The other principals were the same, and Dr. Mackenzie again conducted.

The prospectus of the concluding ten of the thirty-third series of the Saturday Concerts has now been issued. Amongst the novelties set down for performance are Mr. Hamish MacCunn's new Cantata, "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," Dr. Stanford's new Symphony in F major, Berlioz's "Marche Funèbre," for the last scene in "Hamlet," Carl Schroeder's Violoncello Concerto, and a new Concert-Overture by Mr. Prout. Mr. Manns's benefit Concert is fixed for April 20.

MR. WALDEMAR MEYER'S CONCERTS.

MR. WALDEMAR MEYER, the violinist, gave a second Concert in St. James's Hall on the 12th ult., and as his share of the evening's work played Beethoven's Concerto and Romance in F, together with Dr. Mackenzie's Concerto. He again gave proof of very considerable powers, such, indeed, as may, after further experience and development, secure a foremost place among professors of his instrument. His tone, at present, lacks fullness and roundness, but how far that may be the fault of the violin we cannot say. His style, moreover, wants the nobility and distinction of a great artist; but that may come. The most important feature of the Concert was a new Overture written by Dr. Stanford to celebrate the defeat of the Spanish Armada three centuries ago, and entitled "Queen of the Seas." It may be that Dr. Stanford encumbered himself with 'thematic material in constructing his work, but this question is apart from that of its appositeness, which must be admitted. A strong English strain, a Spanish subject, light and characteristic, changing towards the close into a kind of pastoral, and an old English hymn-tune—these are the themes which the composer works up according to a plan that might almost be called a "programme." The scheme involves a good deal of elaboration, and has a large amount of musicianly skill devoted to it; but we miss in the work the strength, breadth, and grandeur of triumphant music such as the subject suggests and even demands. The composer conducted a very fair performance; Dr. Mackenzie's Concerto also having the advantage of its composer's direction.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THERE has been singularly little of importance to chronicle concerning these performances during the past month, but the attendances have been almost uniformly good—indeed, on Mondays above the average—and it would therefore seem that the public is content to traverse the old familiar ground once more, and cares not to wander into devious ways and unknown paths. That being so, our task is lightened, and a few words concerning each Concert will amply suffice. Brahms's "Gipsy Songs" were introduced to a Saturday audience for the first time on the 1st ult., and of course attracted a vast crowd of people anxious to make acquaintance with a set of lyrics about which so much of a favourable nature had already been said and written. We have nothing to add to our remarks last month concerning the cycle, except to record that a second hearing was a renewal of a pleasurable experience in a heightened form. The executants were the same as before—namely, Mr. and Mrs. Henschel, Miss Lena Little, and Mr. Shakespeare, with Miss Fanny Davies as accompanist. The artistic abnegation of self displayed by Miss Davies at this Concert calls for acknowledgment. She took part with Mr. Lazarus and Mr. Hollander in a singularly fine performance of Mozart's Trio in E flat, for pianoforte, clarinet, and viola, and with Signor Piatti in Beethoven's Sonata in F, for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 5, No. 1), but she did not play a solo. Beethoven's "Rasoumowski" Quartet in C (No. 3) completed the programme.

An indisposition, which unhappily proved more serious than was at first supposed, prevented Madame Néruda from appearing on the following Monday, and Herr Straus proved an able substitute on this and following occasions. The principal item was Mozart's Clarinet Quintet, which, now as ever, is one of the most popular pieces of chamber music. As a matter of course, Mr. Lazarus took the clarinet part as he has done on some thirty previous occasions. That most conscientious pianist, Miss Agnes Zimmermann, gave as pure and unaffected a reading of Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 31, No. 3) as could be desired. A performance of this kind affords a better lesson to students than the storm and stress in which pianists of the modern school indulge. Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in G minor (Op. 25), which is more frequently performed than its finer companion in A (Op. 26), was the only other instrumental item. Mrs. Henschel was welcome as the vocalist, and of course had the perfect accompaniment of her accomplished husband.

Spohr's Quartet in A (Op. 93), a great favourite with Madame Néruda, was in the programme of Saturday, the 8th ult., but owing to her continued absence Mendelssohn's in E flat (Op. 12) was substituted. The other concerted items, however, were retained—namely, Schumann's Sonata in A minor, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 105), and the same composer's Pianoforte Quartet in E flat (Op. 47). Mdlle. Janotha was the pianist, and she played in her best manner Beethoven's Sonata in E minor (Op. 90). There was a determined demand for an encore, and though the young artist returned to the platform three or four times, she was almost forced at last to comply. Thus the excellent rule which had prevailed so far this season was at last broken, and as Mr. Lloyd was also induced to repeat one of Dvorák's songs, we suppose the struggle is at an end. So much the worse.

In the following week the fog had a sinister influence on Mr. Chappell's enterprise. On Monday, the 10th ult., this and other malign circumstances seriously lowered the success of the Concert. The ensemble in Schumann's Quartet in A minor (Op. 41, No. 1) was far from perfect, and the performance of Rubinstein's Trio in B flat (Op. 52), with Madame Essipoff at the keyboard, was little better than an exhibition of muscular force. It is strange that a pianist so richly endowed by nature should vulgarise her art by such displays, and the problem is only rendered more difficult of solution by Madame Essipoff's light and delicate playing of such trifling solos as those of Gluck and Scarlatti, which she rendered on the present occasion to the supreme satisfaction of the audience. Mr. Gerard Cobb's elegant and expressive "Spanish Lullaby," one of two songs with violoncello obbligato recently published, was sung by Mr. Thorndike, who, however, was unable to do it justice, being evidently out of voice. M. Saint-Saëns's Variations for two pianofortes on a Theme by Beethoven, played by Madame Essipoff and Madame Fannie Bloomfield, completed the programme.

St. James's Hall was hardly more than half full on the 15th ult., a state of things almost unprecedented on a Saturday afternoon. But the sparse assemblage did not fail to give Madame Néruda a hearty reception on her welcome re-appearance. The great artist was evidently still suffering from much weakness, but her playing was not thereby affected. Mozart's favourite Quartet in D minor (No. 2) headed the scheme and was beautifully rendered. Schumann's Trio in G minor (Op. 110), an interesting work, though less inspired than the earlier Trios in D minor and F, and Mendelssohn's Tema con Variazioni in D (Op. 17), for pianoforte and violoncello, were the remaining concerted works. The pianist of the afternoon was Miss Zimmermann, who modestly contented herself with Schumann's Toccata in C (Op. 7) and the familiar Nachtstück in F (Op. 23, No. 4), and firmly declined the demand for another piece. Mr. Santley was scarcely in his best voice, which was not surprising considering the state of the atmosphere, but he sang two charming Lieder of Brahms's with his customary expression and feeling.

Of the last two Concerts before Christmas, on the 17th and 22nd ult., there is really nothing to say of a critical nature. Brahms's "Gipsy Songs" were repeated on both occasions, and were received with even more enthusiasm than before. Never, probably, in the history of these Concerts has an addition to the repertory been received with so much favour as this charming cycle of lyrics. The concerted instrumental works at the performance of the 17th were Mendelssohn's Quartet in D (Op. 44, No. 1) and Mozart's Trio in E flat, for pianoforte, clarinet, and viola; and on that of the 21st Schubert's Quartet in A minor (Op. 29) and Beethoven's Sonata in A, for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 69). Miss Fanny Davies was the pianist at both Concerts, her contributions, however, being limited to Mendelssohn's Prestoscherzando in F sharp minor, and the same composer's Prelude and Fugue in E minor (Op. 35, No. 1). The Concerts will be resumed on Monday, the 7th inst.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

FOR many years this ancient Society gave an annual performance of "The Messiah" in St. James's Hall. Ostensibly for the benefit of the charity, it really resulted in a monetary loss, as the subscribers had the right of free entry. At last it occurred to some one that it would be far more advantageous to hold a celebration in Westminster Abbey, and permission having been obtained, a performance was given of Handel's "Dettingen Te Deum" in 1885, and in the following year one of the "Lobgesang." The outcome being satisfactory, it was determined this year to revert to "The Messiah," and accordingly the Oratorio was performed in a somewhat abbreviated form on November 29. The event aroused very keen interest in the public mind, and although the charges for admission were higher than those at ordinary Concerts every part of the vast building was thronged with an eager crowd, who listened with rapt attention as the sublime strains were wafted along nave and aisle for the first time since 1834. From a strictly musical point of view, however, the rendering left something to be desired. With the invaluable co-operation of Madame Albani and Madame Patey the soprano and contralto airs, of course, received the fullest justice. Never, indeed, have these two eminent artists sung more impressively or with truer feeling. Messrs. Harper Kearton, Robert Hilton, and Brereton were placed at some disadvantage, but the tenor and bass airs were adequately rendered by them, and thus far there was no ground for complaint. The shortcomings arose from the inefficiency of the band and chorus. When the work was last given in Westminster Abbey fifty-four years ago the executants were imposing in numbers if not in musical efficiency, but on the present occasion a small scratch choir and band were considered sufficient. Dr. Bridge, who conducted, did his best with the force at his command, but he could not work impossibilities, and the tone was thin and unsatisfactory even when precision was maintained, which was not always the case. That the Society benefited substantially by the performance is matter for congratulation, but we hope that on the next occasion measures will be taken to make the celebration more complete in all matters of detail.

THE HECKMANN QUARTET.

SINCE its last visit to this country the personnel of this celebrated organisation has undergone a slight change. Three of its members remain the same as before, but the viola is now played by Herr Oushgorn, who appears to be as well qualified for his position as his predecessor. The two Concerts given at the Princes' Hall, on November 29 and the 12th ult., did not include any novelties nor any works that could be described as unfamiliar to lovers of chamber music. On the first occasion the most important items were Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in F minor (Op. 34), Schumann's Quartet in A minor (Op. 41, No. 1), and Beethoven's in C (Op. 59, No. 3); and on the second Mendelssohn's Quartet in E flat (Op. 12), Beethoven's in A minor (Op. 132), and the same composer's Sonata in D, for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 102, No. 2). The Quartets were played with unflinching precision and accuracy, and the ensemble was perfect, one spirit seeming to animate the whole of the performers. But the style was almost painfully cold and mechanical, the want of passion and true feeling being especially regrettable in Beethoven's marvellous work, with its "Hymn of Thanksgiving" in the Lydian mode. Madame Haas was the pianist, and merited warm commendation for her very refined method and clear, even execution in the concerted works, and also in the solos by Bach, Schumann, and Brahms.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

IT has been stated, on what authority we are ignorant, that Pianoforte Recitals are declining in popularity. At any rate, they are not yet decreasing in numbers, and seldom if ever have so many taken place before Christmas as we have had to chronicle this season. The first mention this month is due to the three performances given by Madame Essipoff, at the Steinway Hall, on November 29, and the 4th and 12th ult. The Russian pianist has been a tolerably frequent visitor to this country since her first appearance in 1874, and has always been received with interest, if not with enthusiasm. The number of capable performers has so largely increased of late that only executants of phenomenal powers can hope to obtain the universal suffrages of the public. Madame Essipoff is not one of these; her manipulative skill is far above the average, but her playing is marred by defects calculated to seriously offend sensitive ears. She is too apt to mistake mere noise for dignity of style, and the frequent exaggeration of accent, caused by playing the left-hand part an octave lower than the written text, has a harsh and unpleasant effect. Further, Madame Essipoff takes unpardonable liberties with the original, in passages requiring delicacy and refinement, the great masters seldom, if ever, being allowed to speak for themselves. These faults were most painfully in evidence in Schumann's Sonata in G minor (Op. 22) at the first Recital; in Beethoven's Sonatas in A flat (Op. 26) and F minor (Appassionata) (Op. 57) at the second; and in Schumann's Fantasia in C (Op. 17) at the third. The breadth and majesty which distinguish one and all of these masterpieces were partially disguised by the various eccentricities in which the pianist indulged, and her interpretation of them did not afford a satisfactory model for students to imitate. But in a number of pieces of a lighter calibre Madame Essipoff's command of the keyboard enabled her to present the audiences with some charming examples of executive art of a kind perfectly legitimate, though not perhaps of the highest order. We do not refer to her rendering of items by Chopin, Schubert, and Mendelssohn, but of genre pieces by such composers as Paderewski, Rubinstein, Schütt, Leschetizsky, Raff, and Moszkowski. At two of her Recitals she introduced her pupil, Madame Fannie Bloomfield, with whom she played Saint-Saëns's Variations on a Theme by Beethoven, Schumann's Theme and Variations in B flat (Op. 46), and other pieces of less value for two pianofortes. In the first-named of these works the ensemble was perfect, which is saying no little, for the French composer has not been sparing of difficulties in his clever piece.

Miss Jessie Bridge, a very clever young lady only fourteen, gave a Recital, at the Princes' Hall, on November 30. She is a pupil of Madame Jessie Morison, at the North London Institute, and must be already proficient in general musical knowledge, since she gained the Royal Academy of Music Certificate in 1885 and again this year with honours. Though of course not a finished artist, she displayed the results of good training in one of Mozart's Sonatas for two pianofortes, and various smaller pieces; while her powerful execution in Liszt's "Fantaisie Hongroise" fairly astonished her hearers. Beethoven's "Waldstein" Sonata was, perhaps, too severe a test, as it requires intellectual as well as mechanical force, but she played the first movement very creditably. The future of Miss Bridge will be watched with interest, more especially as she is evidently in good hands.

The next to seek the favour of the public was Mr. John A. Dykes, on the 7th ult., at the Princes' Hall. It will be remembered that Mr. Dykes made a single appearance at the Popular Concerts last season, and favourably impressed his audience. With considerable natural ability it would be strange indeed if he did not succeed in becoming a capable pianist under such an instructress as Madame Schumann. At present he must still be considered a student, but a student who is pursuing the right path. His faults are merely those of inexperience, and he has nothing to unlearn. In Bach's Organ Fugue in A minor, Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 27, No. 1), and Schumann's Fantasia in C (Op. 17) he displayed a neat style, the principal shortcoming being a lack of warmth and of sympathy with the music. Better this, however, than mere sound and fury, of which we have had so much of late.

An unusually interesting Recital was given on the 7th ult. at Steinway Hall, by Miss Marion Bateman and Miss Esther Mowbray. With the exception of a few well-chosen songs, sung by Miss Farmer and accompanied by Mr. John Farmer, the programme consisted exclusively of pianoforte duets, performed by the recital-givers. Two were compositions for two pianofortes—viz., Mozart's Sonata in D (which, by the way, little Josef Hofmann played at the Popular Concerts with his father a little more than a year ago) and Schumann's Andante and Variations in B flat. The remainder were pieces for four hands by Schubert, Schumann, Brahms, Gade, Dvorák, and Volkmann. We cannot praise too highly the intelligence and precision evinced by Misses Bateman and Mowbray in the interpretation of these various items. Both pianists revealed an excellent technique and played together as though inspired by an identical spirit. Their efforts were rewarded with hearty applause by a full audience.

We do not know any of the antecedents of M. Henri Falcke, who gave a Recital at the Steinway Hall on the 14th ult., but his style is thoroughly French, possessing brilliancy but little breadth and intellectuality. There was not much to commend in his rendering of Beethoven's Sonata in F minor (Appassionata), but he played some light pieces by Mathias, Moszkowski, Godard, and other composers of the same calibre in a very effective style. The audience was very small in point of numbers, which was not surprising, as the weather was unfavourable and the pianist entirely unknown to London musical circles.

WESTMINSTER ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY.

LARGE results sometimes accrue from small beginnings, and the history of the above-named Society is an instance in point. Originating in a business firm, it has steadily developed, and may now be regarded as one of the most important of our rapidly growing amateur associations for the cultivation of instrumental music. Its scheme of work for the present season is worthy of special attention and respect. Three Concerts are to be given, of which the programmes are to consist wholly of works by living English composers. We do not know whether this idea was initiated by the Society's energetic Conductor, Mr. C. S. Macpherson, or by others, but it deserves much praise, if only as calculated to show what native musicians are now doing to enhance the art reputation of their country. The first of the series of Concerts took place in the Westminster Town Hall, on the 5th ult., when the principal features of the programme were Professor Stanford's Prelude to "Œdipus Rex," Mr. J. F. Barnett's Pastoral Suite, Mr. Thomas Wingham's Pianoforte Concerto, creditably played by Miss Kuhe, and Mr. Prout's Symphony in F, conducted by the composer. We regret to be unable to speak in high terms of the performances of these works. It would seem that the ranks of the orchestra include some members who have not yet attained sufficient proficiency to render them desirable additions to an executive force, for the intonation of the strings was painfully uncertain, a difference of nearly a semitone being at times apparent between some of the players and others. There is but one remedy for this, though its application may be disagreeable alike to giver and receiver. The inefficient must be politely but firmly invited to content themselves with honorary membership, or, at any rate, to abstain for a while from taking part in the public performances. By such means alone can the Society realise the lofty aims it has in view.

HYDE PARK ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

THE Concert given by students of the Hyde Park Academy of Music at the Steinway Hall, on the 13th ult., was nowise inferior in excellence to those we have previously been called upon to notice in connection with this institution. As before, too, the most meritorious feature of the display was the singing of the young ladies' choir, which Mr. Henry F. Frost has now trained to a degree of proficiency that enables him to impose the most exacting tasks upon his charges without fear of over-weighting them. Their heaviest undertaking in the present instance was Henry Smart's Cantata for female voices "King René's Daughter," a melodious and well-written work and a characteristic example of Smart's talent for graceful lyrical composition. The suave and flowing choruses were sung with admirable intelligence; Mr. Frost's clear, decided beat was followed with the utmost precision, the various rhythms and contrasts of expression being well marked throughout. Loud applause was bestowed at the conclusion of the Cantata upon Conductor and singers alike; while of the soloists, Mrs. Lindley White, who creditably sustained the music of Iolanthe, came in for the largest share of congratulation. The choir was also heard during the evening in Raff's chorus "Vicissitude," Henry Leslie's part-song "The Swallow," and a part-song, "Melusine," by Miss Mary Carmichael. By-the-way, the lady just-named executed the whole of the pianoforte accompaniments with her accustomed taste, besides joining Miss Kate Willis in the Andante and Variations from the "Kreutzer" Sonata. Some of the professors of the Academy also took part in the Concert. Miss Mary Willis exhibited her flexible voice and finished method to rare advantage in the florid scena "Della rosa il bel vermiglio," from Rossini's "Bianca e Faliero"; Fräulein Ellenberger played pieces by Chopin, Rubinstein, and Henselt with admirable technical facility; and Mr. Charles Fry invested with characteristic point and sentiment, as well as a faultless elocutionary style, his delivery of Leigh Hunt's "Glove and the Lions" and a scene from Shakespeare's "Henry V." There was a numerous and appreciative audience, and the Concert was in every way a success.

THE MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

MR. E. H. TURPIN read a paper, on the 3rd ult., on "The Instincts of Musical Form." Broadly viewed, the outlines of form are presentation or exposition, development and recapitulation, or resultant attainment. Such processes have not only grown in the various arts in identically the same manner, but they characterise the operations of nature herself. Mr. Turpin then instituted a comparison between the methods of the poet, dramatist, and novelist, and that of the musician, showing how they were guided by the same principles of form, and pointed out that the lyric, epic, and dramatic qualities were as recognisable in music as in poetry. The reforms of Gluck were chiefly confined to deepening expression and preserving appropriate naturalness. Wagner grasped the truth that the arts had great principles in common, and his efforts to bring all the arts into one common focus of action were matters of history. So far as the instincts of musical form were based upon the strength and eternal action of natural laws, certain principles would ever remain for the guidance of coming generations of composers and deserved to be recognised as philosophic impulses, seeking by artistic methods to strengthen the memory, quicken mental perceptions, and enforce impressions by the exercise of logical power.

OBITUARY.

MR. DESMOND LUMLEY RYAN died on November 29, at Brixton, in the thirty-seventh year of his age. He was the son of the late Michael Desmond Ryan, a well-known critic, who died in 1868, and although only a boy of seventeen, was chosen to succeed his father in a great part of his newspaper duties on the Standard newspaper. Mr. D. L. Ryan, who was also an occasional contributor to THE MUSICAL TIMES, was the author of the libretto of Signor Schira's "Lord of Burleigh," produced at the Birmingham Festival of 1870; of Dr. Heap's "Maid of Astolat," given at the last Wolverhampton Festival, and of another work by the same composer which is announced for next year, besides various newspaper contributions. Mr. Ryan broke down a year ago, and was ordered by an eminent physician to take a sailing voyage to Australia and back as the only means of preserving his life. The remedy came too late, and when he resumed his labours he broke down once more, never to work again. The exhausting labours of his profession once more sent him to his bed, and the illness which ensued was destined to be his last. The public, of course, knew Mr. Ryan only as a critic, who, if it were his duty to condemn, penned his words in so kindly a spirit that the very obvious effort not to cause pain rendered his mild censure all the more convincing. He was much beloved in private life, and was esteemed by all who came in contact with him in public.

The Munich Fremden-Blatt announces the death of DR. FRANZ WITT, a Bavarian priest and prolific composer of Church music, at Landshut, in Lower Bavaria, on the 2nd ult. Witt was the founder and President-General of the "Cecilien-Verein for all countries speaking the German language." He has published upwards of twenty Masses, besides four Requiem Masses, four Te Deums, three "Stabat Mater," and innumerable Motets. Many of his compositions are in favour with disciplinarians in Church music in these countries and especially in the diocese of Dublin. The Dublin Lyra Ecclesiastica states that Dr. Witt suffered from a nervous complaint that prevented him from listening to music during several years; yet he continued to the day of his death to compose Church music, and to edit the Fliegende-Blätter (Ratisbon) and the Musica Sacra (Ratisbon), the organs of his Society. The immediate cause of his death was apoplexy, which carried him off in his fifty-fourth year.

We regret to have to announce the death, on the 18th ult., of Mr. FREDERICK N. LÖHR, for the past twenty years a Professor of Music in Plymouth. Mr. Löhr was born in the city of Norwich, in 1844, and received his musical training from Dr. Buck, Organist of Norwich Cathedral. Before he attained to manhood he removed to Leicester, thence to Helston, and at the age of twenty-two he took up his abode in Plymouth, where for the first twelve years he held the post of Organist at Sherwell Chapel. He set on foot the Plymouth Vocal Association, which greatly increased in numbers and efficiency until it has attained its present high position as a Choral Society. He was also the organiser of musical societies at Launceston and elsewhere. As a musical composer, Mr. Löhr was known elsewhere than in Plymouth. He leaves a widow and daughter and two sons, with a host of personal friends, to cherish his memory.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE closing days of November were signalised by the first production in Birmingham of two important operatic works, which, however, are not altogether new to the rest of the world. The first of these was Verdi's "Aida" and the other the same composer's "Ernani." The music of both works of course was more or less familiar already to the musical public, but it was reserved for the Italian Opera Company of Mr. Augustus Harris to produce the operas in their completeness on our local stage, and it is only fair to add that neither pains nor expense was spared in their presentation.

Messrs. Harrison's second Concert, which took place on the 3rd ult., though generally of a popular character, was a great improvement upon the first in point of musical interest, whilst a complete success as regards attendance. The artistic corps was an unusually strong one, comprising in the vocal department Madame Albani, Miss Whitacre, Miss Alice Gomes, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. C. Banks, and Mr. Santley, whilst the interests of instrumental art were entrusted to the competent hands of Miss Fanny Davies and the members of the Heckmann String Quartet.

Dr. Hubert Parry's new Oratorio "Judith" was performed here on the 13th ult., by the members of the local Festival Choral Society, for the first time since the Festival of August last at which it was produced. "Judith" is a work that grows upon the hearer, and deeply as it impressed the Festival audience it appeared to excite even more interest and admiration on this occasion, though the second performance was necessarily, in many respects, inferior to the first. The principal vocalists were Miss Anna Williams, who "created" the part of the heroine at the Festival performance; Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Charles Banks, and Mr. Henry Pope, who were joined in the scenes with the royal children by Masters Lionel Wynne and Frank Lambert, of Mr. Stedman's choir. There is no need to describe with what dramatic fervour, power, and charm of voice Miss Williams sings the very trying music of Judith. On this occasion she was in excellent voice and repeatedly roused the enthusiasm of her hearers. Miss Hilda Wilson sang the music of Queen Meshullemeth with much sweetness and expressiveness, especially charming the audience in the ballad "Long since in Egypt's plenteous land" and the touching air "The Lord is long suffering." Mr. Banks succeeded in imparting so much interest to the generally unpopular character of Manasseh as to evoke enthusiastic demonstrations from both chorus and audience, more especially after his singing of the bravura air "God breaketh the battle." Mr. Henry Pope sang the music of the Messenger conscientiously and well. The chorus singing generally was admirable, though wanting occasionally in dramatic expressiveness. Mr. Perkins rendered efficient service at the organ and Mr. Stockley conducted with much judgment.

Saturday is becoming quite a field day for Concerts here, of which two are usually given in the Town Hall alone—viz., one in the afternoon partaking of the character of an Organ Recital, with vocal selections intermixed; and an Oratorio or miscellaneous Popular Concert at night. On the 1st ult. a Concert of Scottish music was given under the auspices of the Birmingham and Midland Scottish Society, when the chief feature of the performance was the admirable part-singing of the Glasgow Select Choir. On the 15th ult. Mr. Perkins gave his sixth Organ Recital, which included Mendelssohn's Sonata, No. 1; Sterndale Bennett's Minuet, from the G minor Symphony; and a grand Concert Fantasia on old English music, arranged by Mr. W. T. Best. The vocalist was Mr. Gervase Cooper. In the evening an immense audience assembled at Mr. Alfred Gilmer's popular Concert, of which military band music formed the staple feature. In the absence through illness of Mr. Gilmer, the conducting devolved upon Mr. Rees.

The Midland Institute Madrigal Choir gave an interesting Concert on the 17th ult., with the assistance of Miss Linda Morton, who made her débüt as a pianist on this occasion; Miss Pauline Cramer (vocalist), and Mr. Carl Armbruster (pianist). The Madrigals and Part-songs, under the direction of Mr. Stockley, were admirably given by the choir; but public interest naturally centred in the débütante, who is a pupil of Miss Welchmann, of Handsworth.

At the Edgbaston Amateur Musical Union Concert, on the 20th ult., the principal orchestral items were Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony, the Golttermann Concerto for violoncello and orchestra, and the Overture "Im Hochlande," by Gade, and "Poet and Peasant," by Suppé. Mr. A. J. Priestley played the Golttermann Concerto very creditably. The vocalists were Miss Alice James and Mr. Leo Matthews.

The annual performance of "The Messiah" took place in the Town Hall on the evening of the 26th ult., when Mrs. Hutchinson, Miss Dews, Mr. Charles Banks, and Mr. Henry Pope were announced to take part in the performance, with Mr. C. W. Perkins as Organist and Mr. Stockley as Conductor. There is no need to expatiate upon the manner in which so familiar a work was rendered by so competent a body of performers.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Dublin Musical Society is dead—long live the Dublin Musical Society! The dissolution of this old and excellent Association by its committee has, it appears, been only understood as the resignation of the latter body, for at a special meeting of the members and subscribers, held at the Antient Concert Rooms on the 12th ult., a provisional committee was appointed to take measures for the immediate reconstruction of the Society. The evident concern of the general musical public at the threatened loss to musical art in Dublin, and its sympathy with those who are working to avert such a catastrophe, are strong earnest of the success which it is hoped awaits the Dublin Musical Society in the future. Of its inherent vitality no better evidence could be desired than the "final" performance given on the 6th ult., in the Concert Hall of the Royal University. The splendid hall was crowded in every part. Apparently there is no apathy on the part of the public. The chorus was well up to its high standard of excellence, and the band, though reduced in number, displayed no weakness beyond that which has on other occasions been more conspicuous—namely, in the first and second strings. The distinguished Conductor, Mr. Joseph Robinson, was in his best form, and every call which he made on his forces was intelligently responded to. Wherever lay the debility of the Society it did not seem to be in its musical organisation. A selection from Handel's "Samson" and a miscellaneous second part furnished the programme. The principal singer was Madame Nordica, whose charming voice and perfect vocalisation were heard to much advantage in "Let the bright Seraphim" (to the trumpet obbligato of Mr. O'Donnell), the conclusion of which was the signal for a tempestuous encore, which was gracefully responded to. Madame Nordica's interpretation of the solos in Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer" in the second part, and of the final piece of the programme, Rossini's "Inflammatus," was no less enthusiastically received. The other solo portions of the music were creditably sung by Miss Frederika Taylor, soprano; Miss Fanny Emerson, contralto; Mr. Melford d'Alton, a promising tenor; and Mr. John Horan, Jun., bass. The second part of the programme consisted of "By Babylon's Wave," Gounod, splendidly sung by the choir, and repeated in obedience to a unanimous demand; Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer" and "Judge me, O God"; two numbers of Mrs. Fanny Robinson's Cantata "God is love"; and Rossini's trio "Gratias agimus," from the "Messe Solennelle," and "Inflammatus," from the "Stabat Mater," before alluded to. Mr. John Horan, Sen., presided at the organ, and Mr. Joseph Robinson conducted.

The Chamber Music Recitals at the Royal Dublin Society continue to attract an assemblage of musical amateurs that overcrows the little theatre of the Institution every Monday. At the Recital of the 3rd ult. Schumann's Quartet in A minor, for two violins, viola, and violoncello (Op. 47, No. 1), and Brahms's G minor Quartet, for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello, with Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonata in D minor (Op. 31, No. 2) were performed with great taste and skill. The executants were Signor Papini, Mr. Newcome, Herr Lauer, Mr. Rudersdorff, and Signor Esposito, pianoforte. On the 10th ult. the above programme was repeated, and lost nothing in the repetition; and on the 17th ult. a most pleasing performance was given of Mendelssohn's Quartet in E flat, for strings; Rubinstein's Sonata for pianoforte and violoncello, in B flat (Op. 39); and Beethoven's Trio in B flat, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Op. 97).

The Dublin University Choral Society gave its first Concert for the season (its 52nd season and 179th performance) on the afternoon of the 15th ult., in the Examination Hall, Trinity College, under the direction of Sir Robert Stewart, Mus. D. Beethoven's Mass in C, Mendelssohn's 13th Psalm and Hymn "Eternal Ruler of the Skies," and the Sanctus and Benedictus from Mozart's First Mass were the chief items of the programme. The principal vocalists were Miss A. Craig, Mrs. Scott-Ffennell, Mr. Drummond Hamilton, and Mr. Benjamin Mullen. The chorus of this Society is somewhat of "an uncertain quantity," varying from seventy to 150 voices, and on the present occasion was rather inadequate to the work required of it, Beethoven's Mass appearing to painfully overtax the sopranos, who showed to better advantage in the miscellaneous items of the second part. The accompaniments were ably performed by Drs. Gater and Jozé, on a pianoforte and American organ, which, considering the numbers of the choir, made a tolerably effective substitute for the full band to which the Society has been accustomed to entrust its accompaniments. But it is to be hoped that the University Choral Society, which is the oldest Musical Society in Dublin, and which has always been remarkable for its enterprise in presenting new works to the Dublin music-lovers, and that, too, in an adequate manner, is not going to shrink into the proportions or disproportions which were observable at its last Concert.

Meanwhile, St. Patrick's Oratorio Society is coming well to the front. This body, which is conducted by Mr. Charles Marchant, for the last few seasons has had the largest record of performances in Dublin, of which it may be said that they were in all respects praiseworthy. It has now added a full band to its attractions, drawn chiefly from the members of the Dublin Orchestral Union, whose late Concert has been mentioned.

The usual Christmas performance of "The Messiah" took place in St. Patrick's Cathedral on the evening of the 18th ult., at which the attendance was so large that many failed to obtain places.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Choral Union chose as subject for its first Concert (November 26) Dr. Hubert Parry's "Judith," which choice in itself was all the more acceptable as for the two previous years at least novelties have been altogether absent from the programmes of this Society. The solo vocalists were Madame Bertha Moore, Miss Janet Sneddon, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Albert B. Bach, with Mr. Collinson as Conductor. The chorus, especially the sopranos, did their work admirably throughout, their best efforts being the rendering of the choruses "Hail, Moloch," and "Arise, O Israel."

At a Meeting of the Society of Musicians, on the 1st ult., it was proposed and unanimously accepted that a Benevolent Fund should be established in connection with the Society; that a managing committee be appointed, to whom discretionary power should be given for helping, temporarily or otherwise, musicians members of the Society in the first place, and, if necessary, outsiders, who, by no fault of their own, may have fallen into misfortune. To make a beginning, one-fourth of the yearly subscription was voted for this fund, the committee to arrange ways and means to enlarge the fund as much and as soon as possible.

The first Orchestral Concert, under the conductorship of Mr. Manns, took place in the Music Hall on the 11th ult., and proved by its success that the fears of the entrepreneurs, Messrs. Paterson and Sons, as to a possible financial failure, were perfectly groundless. The soloists of the evening were Miss Margaret Macintyre (vocalist) and M. Marsick (violinist). The lady excelled in the rendering of "Ah, fors è lui" (Verdi's "Traviata") and "Le retour des promiss" (Dessauer), giving as encores songs by Lassen and Sullivan; and M. Marsick showed himself completely at home in the reproduction of a Concerto for violin (No. 2), by Wieniawski; also in two numbers of a Suite "Tzigane," by Wörmser. Weber's Overture to "Oberon," Saint-Saëns's Symphonic Poem "The spinning wheel of Omphale," Beethoven's Symphony (No. 4, B flat), and Sullivan's "Ouverture di Ballo" were the orchestral pieces performed.

A good deal of interest was attached to the first performance of Mr. MacCunn's Cantata "Bonny Kilmeny," by Mr. Kirkhope's choir (13th ult.) in the Queen Street Hall. The libretto—an adaptation by the composer's father of a beautiful myth from "The Queen's Wake" of James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd—is well compiled, and lends itself admirably to the treatment of choruses and soli, which latter, with one exception, fall to the tenor and baritone. From a musical point of view, the work suffers from a want of declamatory variety in the soli, and from an absence of breadth in working out the choruses. The performance, especially with regard to the chorus singing, was all that could be wished; the accompaniments were rendered by a string quintet, with the aid of pianoforte and harmonium. The first part of the Concert consisted of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise."

The second Orchestral Concert took place on the 17th ult. The programme contained the Overture to "Ruy Blas," Raff's "Lenore" Symphony, the first movement of Wingham's Serenade, selections from Wagner's "Meistersinger," and a Fantasia for flute and orchestra, by Demersmann. Madame Nordica was the vocalist, and we had the good fortune to hear her in no less than five songs, owing to the orchestra being delayed a full hour by a railway accident, during which delay she kindly sang a Canzonetta from Gomez's "Salvator Rosa," Goring Thomas's "Summer Night," and Hartmann's "Ich liebe dich," besides the two songs announced in the programme, an aria from Mozart's "Seraglio" and Handel's "Let the bright seraphim," all of which were most enthusiastically received. Mr. Manns conducted, and the orchestra, in spite of their mishap, did very well, especially in the Raff Overture.

At the Lyceum Theatre the Carl Rosa Company, commencing on the 3rd ult., gave one very successful week of representations, the chief attractions being "Robert le Diable" and "La Juive," with Miss Fanny Moody, Miss Amanda Fabris, Mr. Barton McGuckin, and Mr. Charles Manners as principal actors. At the same theatre Mr. D'Oyley Carte's Company performed Sullivan's "Yeomen of the Guard."

At the University Sir Herbert Oakeley played a selection of pieces to the students and others, on the 6th ult., from the works of Handel, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Gounod, Wesley, Ravina, and Silas.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW AND THE WEST OF SCOTLAND.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE first Concert of the fifteenth annual series of Choral and Orchestral Concerts, under the management of the Glasgow Choral Union, took place in St. Andrew's Hall, on the 13th ult. It was an orchestral one, and the programme comprised, chiefly, the Overture to "Oberon," Beethoven's No. 4 Symphony, in B flat, Saint-Saëns's "The Spinning wheel of Omphale," and Wieniawski's Violin and Orchestral Concerto, No. 2, in D. The band gave splendid renderings of the two first-named important works and acquitted themselves with a fair measure of success in the two other pieces. The tone of the strings is decidedly superior to that of late years, and the orchestra generally promises to be very satisfactory. Mr. Manns, who conducted with his usual skill and animation, received a most hearty welcome from an audience which was unusually warm. Mr. Sons, the leading violin, was also heartily greeted on entering the orchestra. M. Marsick gave an acceptable interpretation of the solo part in the Concerto, and pleased equally in the Suite "Tzigane." Mr. Iver McKay was the vocalist of the evening, and sang "Deeper and deeper still" with dignity and taste, as also Schubert's "Serenade" and Schumann's "Message," the choice of these, in place of the usual royalty ballad class of songs, saying much for his artistic conscientiousness and judgment. There was a very fair attendance, the subscriptions, if not quite up to the desired standard, being somewhat higher than last year.

At the second Subscription Concert of the series, on the 18th ult., the main point of interest was the production for the first time of Mr. Hamish MacCunn's Cantata "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," commissioned by the Glasgow Choral Union. The book has been compiled by the composer's father, Mr. James MacCunn, from the first two cantos of Sir Walter Scott's poem, and consists of a series of scenes, which with the aid of the Argument prefixed tell the story, as far as related, very well. The new musical illustration of the stirring and interesting tale is as a whole eminently successful, rising in some places to a point of absolute genius. There is indeed a strong infusion of local colour all through, with much graceful writing of a general character, and little of what may be considered the conventional. Choral Societies everywhere will find the Cantata well worth their study. The performance, which was conducted by Mr. Joseph Bradley, and had Madame Nordica, Madame Damian, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Andrew Black for principals, was everything that could be desired. Mr. Black particularly distinguished himself on the occasion. Previous to the Cantata, Mr. E. Hecht's chorus "The Charge of the Light Brigade" was sung, with orchestral accompaniment, and Mr. Hamish MacCunn's Overture "The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow" was played, the composer conducting.

The programme of the second Popular Concert, which took place on the 22nd ult., included Beethoven's No. 8 Symphony, in F, of which a spirited performance was given by the band. The Overture to "Rienzi" (Wagner) was also played, as also three of a Suite of German Dances by Schubert, and other selections from Mendelssohn, Saint-Saëns, and others. Mr. Orlando Harley sang in place of Mr. Andrew Black, indisposed.

Mr. MacCunn was entertained at dinner by the Glasgow Society of Musicians in the Bath Hotel, on the 19th ult. There were about 150 gentlemen present.

A performance was given of Haydn's "Creation," by the Bridgeton Choral Society, in the City Hall, on the 6th ult. The Society is only in its second year, and now numbers between one and two hundred well selected voices. The result of this care in the choice of the choralists was a very excellent rendering of their share of the work, while with a good orchestra, which was under Mr. W. H. Cole, and a competent trio of soloists—Mrs. Taggart, Mr. H. A. L. Seligmann, and Mr. Riddell—all went well in every other respect. Mr. George Taggart, the Conductor, deserves much credit for his exertions on behalf of the Society.

The Glasgow Select Choir appeared at the Abstainers' Union Saturday Evening Concert of the 8th ult., in the City Hall. The programme was formed of Scotch music, and comprised part-songs and solos. Among the part-songs were arrangements by Patterson, Hume, and Macbeth. There was likewise an original setting of Burns's "Bonny Bell," by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, specially written for the choir, and previously sung by them in St. James's Hall, at the St. Andrew's Day Concert. The cast of the new melody to Burns's lyric is more after the English manner than the Scotch, but as the words contain nothing of the Doric, Dr. Mackenzie was undoubtedly right in treating them as he has chosen to do, and altogether the part-song or glee is very effective and pleased very much.

Van Bree's Cantata "St. Cecilia's Day" was included in the programme of a Concert given by the South-Western Choral Society, on the 18th ult., and in that of the Crosshill Musical Association, on the 21st ult.

Mr. Herbert T. Lewis has commenced a series of Historical Organ Recitals in Kelvinside Free Church, of which he is Organist. The Recitals are arranged similarly to those he gave last year, and range from Bach to the organ writers of the present generation.

ON the 11th ult. a Musical Conversazione was held in connection with the subscription series of Concerts. The Town Hall was florally decorated for the occasion on an elaborate scale, the programme was of a distinctly "light" character, the audience was large and fashionable, and the whole was, in its way, most enjoyable. The following evening (the 12th ult.

The lyrics are: 'rest! thy war-fare o'er, Dream of fight - ing fields no more;'. The piano accompaniment features a steady eighth-note pattern in the right hand and a more complex bass line in the left hand.

GAUL'S "JOAN OF ARC" AT PLYMOUTH.

"Few Cantatas are as rich in chaste melodies, charming choruses, and exquisite orchestration as Alfred R. Gaul's 'Joan of Arc,' performed for the first time in Plymouth by the Vocal Association in the Guildhall last evening. Mrs. Stanley Stubbs (Miss Robertson) sang the rôle, Mr. Henry Guy took the tenor solos, and Mr. Watkin Mills was engaged for the bass airs. Mr. John Pardew, as usual, led the orchestra. The singularly pretty and graceful introduction and the succeeding chorus, 'Hail to the beautiful morning of May,' were heard attentively and greeted with an applause that showed that thus early was the Cantata to the liking of the audience. The first solo, 'There is no one like her,' was sung by Mr. Guy. It is one of the gems of the piece—soft and passionate—and the well-known tenor admirably rendered its many beauties. A charming chorus of youths and maidens is followed by a duet for Philip and Joan in which the 'Voices' are heard softly calling Joan to her mission, and the effect of the low whispering accompaniment of the 'Voices' was indescribably sweet. A beautiful chorus, 'Our time of sorrow,' was followed by a trio for the chief vocalists, during which the spirits again call. Mr. Mills was next heard in his first solo, 'Who would not fight for freedom?' a spirited, martial air, sung with much force and precision, and gaining an encore. In the magnificent choruses 'A shepherd maid has passed' and 'The maid—she has come,' the choir splendidly sustained their reputation. They entered heart and soul into the music and produced a powerful result. The harmonies are rich, and the melodies roll onward with impressive grandeur. Mr. Guy and Mr. Mills were next associated in the duet 'Full flows the river.' This lovely number, replete with graceful phrases and delicate modulations, was charmingly rendered and received with much delight. Had time permitted it would have been redemanded. Joan's chief solo followed—'The memories of home.' Mrs. Stubbs sang the beautiful air very sweetly and tenderly, gaining an encore, but she wisely declined to repeat a number both long and trying. A wonderful bit of orchestration representing sleep troubled by dreams concluded the scene. An exceedingly dramatic chorus, 'On to the battle, on!' splendidly given, and a spirited trio for the soloists, 'Lead ye on the men-at-arms,' were succeeded by a deeply religious choral number, 'Ave Maria,' carefully and successfully rendered. After the dashing chorus 'She comes!' a delicate and weird intermezzo illustrated the change in Joan's fortunes from a conqueror to a prisoner, and the next number was for the choir—'She is lost'—a sad wail, and a bitter denunciation of Joan's betrayers. The Maid was then heard singing a farewell to her country, while the 'Spirit Voices' whispered comfort and promised her Paradise. The opening chorus of the work was, in part, repeated, and the Cantata ended with a triumphant song, 'Her deeds will live and remain.'—The Western News, December 6, 1888.

"The production of Alfred R. Gaul's historical Cantata 'Joan of Arc' proved an unqualified success. In its arrangement the composer probably determined to carry out all the conditions necessary for making it popular with provincial choral societies, for it requires only three soloists, and the bulk of the Cantata is allotted to the chorus. In fact, the choir of this Association has seldom had such a good opportunity for giving their sterling worth a good display. The recitative and song, 'There is no one like her,' which follows the opening chorus, was well sung by Mr. Guy, who brought out the many beauties of the composition very effectively. Miss Robertson, as Joan, then joined him in a duet, in which a chorus of 'Youths and maidens' and the chanting of the 'Voices' are interspersed, the latter with beautiful effect, and when this number concluded the audience testified in an enthusiastic style their satisfaction at the wealth of charming melody to which they had been treated. The pathetic chorus, in which the youths and maidens bewail Joan's departure to Vaucouleurs, followed; and here Mr. Watkin Mills was first heard, in the character of Robert de Baudricourt, to whom Joan and Philip had now come, and an opportunity is afforded the author of the Cantata to introduce a very melodious trio. Mr. Mills's fine baritone voice was highly appreciated when he sang in conjunction with Miss Robertson and Mr. Guy, but he had a better chance of displaying it in the recitative and patriotic ballad, 'Who would not fight for freedom?' which followed. This song has a very taking refrain, and was the first number of the Cantata which was accorded the honour of an encore, to which Mr. Mills replied. The scene then changed to Gien, being opened by a chorus of peasants. A duet for tenor and baritone was sung in excellent style by Mr. Guy and Mr. Mills. The next number showed Miss Robertson to advantage as a soprano soloist, and was a recitative and song in which Joan plaintively dwells on memories of home awakened by the touch of a ring which was an early gift of her mother's. The next scene is Orleans, where Joan is at the head of the French forces. A massive and stirring prelude fittingly introduces such a martial scene, which contains some of the best specimens of gorgeous orchestra colouring which is to be found in the Cantata. The thrilling chorus, 'On to the battle, on!' was subjected to a rendering by the choir which was simply perfect, as was shown by the storm of applause that it received, and which continued until it was repeated. Another trio followed, and was succeeded by a descriptive chorus admirably representing the English and French forces engaged in battle. Scarcely had its strains died away when the audience were listening to the beauties of the 'Ave Maria,' which is sung in the cathedral to express thankfulness for the French victory. The contrast of this deeply solemn and exquisitely beautiful composition to the fiercely martial character of the preceding chorus was very pleasing, and again another contrast was afforded in a joyous chorus which followed the 'Ave Maria.' Next came an effective instrumental intermezzo, representing the lapsing of the joy of the populace to sorrow. A chorus containing the wail for Joan's capture by the English is next heard, and here the idea is worked up to a very high pitch of dramatic intensity. Joan is taken to Rouen, and in a solo gives way to melancholy reflections over her doom, but her reverie is consolingly interrupted by the 'Voices,' who assure her that she is on the way to Paradise. The scene changes to Domremy, where the final chorus is sung, bewailing Joan's fate."—The Western Daily Mercury, December 6, 1888.

JOAN OF ARC AN HISTORICAL AND DRAMATIC CANTATA

WORDS BY

FREDERICK ENOCH

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"The particularly tuneful music to which Mr. Gaul has set the words drew forth enthusiastic plaudits. . . . Of the Cantata, as interpreted last evening (in the Town Hall, Leeds, with a band and chorus of 250 performers), it is impossible to speak in terms of anything but praise. Solos, part-songs, and choruses alike are full of melody, while the orchestration is descriptive to a degree. The opening chorus, illustrative of a May-day festival, is both bright and sparkling; while the music to 'The Voices' is full of passion. For each of the principal vocalists there is one song that singles itself out, and each received an encore. Joan's song—a retrospect—brimming over with pathos, was sung by Miss Leighton with an intensity of feeling that awoke all the enthusiasm of her hearers. The orchestra accompanied most efficiently, and a word of praise is due to Dr. Spark, who presided at the organ. Mr. Godson is to be congratulated upon having scored another great success."—Leeds Mercury, November 7, 1888.

"The theme is one of the most romantic in the pages of history. In the earlier and poetic passages there is something of the charm of Sir Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen.' The last chorus is set to music which would be not unworthy of the great masters."—Heris and Cambridge Reporter.

"An advance on the earlier work, 'The Holy City.' . . . The choruses are written with much knowledge of effect, and an 'Ave Maria' and a final chorus of the 'Spirit Voices' may be named as really charming."—Athenæum.

"Joan of Arc' is a work which is bound to be widely taken up, doubtless to attain which end the composer has employed but three soloists, and has given a more than usually large degree of importance to the choral work. . . . The 'Ave Maria' is singularly beautiful."—London Figaro.

"Obviously written with a special view to the requirements of choral societies, and likely to become highly popular."—Daily News.

"Calculated to delight performers and listeners, being full of melody and taking effects."—Referee.

"Must enhance the high reputation of its composer."—Liverpool Courier.

"The inspiration of a highly-refined musician. . . . The Cantata is even a more masterly and beautiful work than 'The Holy City.'"—Huddersfield Examiner.

"No more charming Cantata than 'Joan of Arc' could have been chosen. It abounds in delicious music. There is not a tedious note in it."—Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Chronicle.

"Gives the listener a vivid and realistic impression, its attractiveness being continuous instead of spasmodic."—Bradford Observer.

"The choruses are always effectively written—the solos are extremely melodious; deserves, and will probably achieve, great popularity."—Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Journal.

"It would not be surprising if it attained to even the almost phenomenal popularity of 'The Holy City'; contains a similar wealth of melody and effective part-writing."—Birmingham Daily Times.

"Reading the score convinces us that it is our townsman's greatest production. . . . Could have been originated by none but a born melodist."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"A distinct advance upon Mr. Gaul's previous work in cantata form. . . . A constant flow of exquisite melodies and effective choral writing."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"Now with matured experience and ripened scholarship he gives to the town which has received and welcomed his first triumphs his magnum opus, 'Joan of Arc.'"—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"The Cantata, from the first bar to the last, is rich in melody, beautiful harmonic combinations, and clever orchestration. The beautiful 'Ave Maria' is a splendid example of pure and fervent church music, but there are so many exquisite points of merit in Mr. Gaul's latest work that they hardly need detailing. Taking the work as a whole, it bids fair to become a great favourite with all choral societies."—Birmingham Weekly Post.

"A thoroughly melodious work, and should find favour with choral societies. It is not difficult to sing, and contains sufficient variety to keep up the interest to the end."—Manchester Guardian.

was devoted to more serious work. Sir Charles Hallé's orchestra occupied the platform, and a splendid programme was gone through, to the evident delight of the large audience which filled all parts of the hall. Weber's popular "Freischütz" Overture opened the Concert, and the ever-green Overture to "William Tell" (Rossini) closed it. The other purely orchestral items were Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, Liszt's Rhapsodie Hongroise (No. 4), Wagner's "Träume," and the Introduction to the third act of "Lohengrin," of the same master. These were all given with the spirit and careful attention to detail which we have been so long accustomed to associate with Sir Charles Hallé's well-trained body of musicians. Besides this feast of good things, the popular pianist-composer treated us to a delicious interpretation of Grieg's quaint "Aus dem Volksleben" Suite, for pianoforte solo; and Mr. Willy Hess (Sir Charles Hallé's new leader) gave a powerful "reading" of Beethoven's Violin Concerto. Miss Gertrude Turner successfully contributed two songs by Linley and Bishop respectively.

The Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society gave a most enjoyable Concert on the 4th ult., in the Town Hall. All the choral numbers were well rendered, under the able conductorship of Mr. John North, by the sixty or seventy ladies and gentlemen who compose the choir. Miss Wilkinson, Miss England, Mr. Herbert Haigh, and Mr. Lucas Williams contributed songs of a popular character, which were evidently to the taste of the audience. Master Hollingworth (violin) and Mr. J. E. Sykes (accompanist) were valuable assistants.

The Holmfirth and District Choral Society gave Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" on the 6th ult., at the Holmfirth Town Hall. The room was somewhat inconveniently crowded, but the attendant discomfort did not affect the pleasure which the great master's beautiful work evidently gave to the large assembly. The whole of the fine choruses were sung with care and attention to expression, and indeed the entire performance reflected the greatest credit upon Mr. John North, the efficient Conductor of the Society. Miss Sellars (of Knaresborough), Miss Sykes (a local vocalist), Mr. H. Hagyard, and Mr. A. S. Kinnel undertook the solo portions of the work, and acquitted themselves satisfactorily. The band performed an important share of the evening's work in a praiseworthy manner.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE fifth Concert of the Philharmonic Society—in this its Jubilee season—took place on the 4th ult. Its significance as a musical event was not very great, but at the same time the fare provided was interesting and enjoyable. The orchestral pieces comprised Beethoven's "Leonora" Overture (No. 3), a long selection from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream," and Wagner's "Kaiser-Marsch." Mr. Ondricek was solo violinist, and his performance of Paganini's Concerto in D demonstrated his breadth of tone, his thorough conception of the work, and his ability to dispose of its enormous difficulties. Mr. Ondricek also played one of his own compositions, a show piece, serving as an illustration of the performer's mastery of technique. Madame Marian-McKenzie and Mr. Charles Banks appeared as the solo vocalists. Mendelssohn's "Victor's Return" and Gounod's "Trumpet Blow" were both fairly well sung by the chorus.

The Art Congress, which Liverpool has had the enterprise and honour of inaugurating, took place during the week commencing the 3rd ult.; and whatever may be the opinions as to the result of this important gathering, it at least served to bring together in discussion the leading lights in the art world, both orthodox and heterodox. What little music figured in the course of the week's social entertainment was at least artistic. On the 5th ult. an imposing Soirée was held in St. George's Hall, when Mr. Best gave a Recital on the large organ. His programme was perfectly devised and carried out. It comprised, as some of the most prominent items, Mendelssohn's Organ Sonata in D major, Pastoral Symphony (from the "Christmas" Oratorio), Bach's Fugue in G minor, and a selection from Handel's "Water Music." On the 6th ult. an interesting programme was gone through at a Conversazione given at the Art Club, the performers being Mrs. Samuel, Miss Janet Russell, Mr. Thomas Barlow, and Dr. Meyer, with Miss Michaels and Miss Alice Rensburg at the pianoforte.

Birkenhead gave its second Subscription Concert on the 12th ult. Messrs. Straus, Bauerkeller, Jacoby, and Smith formed quite an unimpeachable quartet, and with Miss Fanny Davies at the pianoforte the success of the Concert was ensured. Prominence was given to a Quartet by Dvorák in E flat, which is a most valuable addition to this class of chamber music, each of the four movements being clearly defined and sparkling with delightful as well as original scoring. Schumann's Pianoforte Quintet also had a place in the programme, and, in addition, Miss Davies contributed Rubinstein's Toccata and the F minor Presto scherzando of Mendelssohn. Miss Antoinette Trebelli was the vocalist.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

AT Sir Charles Hallé's Concerts not many novelties have been produced during the month, but excellent performances of Mendelssohn's "Scotch" and of Beethoven's second Symphony have been given, and our acquaintance with the "Légendes" of Dvorák has been somewhat extended. I would, however, suggest the advisability of giving some hints as to the meaning of each allegory; for it is sometimes difficult fully to follow, without clue, the intention of the author; and with music avowedly of a descriptive character such aid ought to be possible. Among the vocalists we have again had Mr. Henschel, who persists in introducing into the Concert-room songs which their author (Wagner) so loudly declared to be inseparable from theatrical surroundings. Mr. Charles Banks still cannot lessen our regret that so fine a voice should be so uncertain. Surely the Royal College might have managed to secure the complete success of one so richly endowed. The amateur violinists of the district have been greatly favoured of late, for not only has Mr. Willy Hess—the new and admirably vigorous leader—appeared as a soloist, playing Spohr's Ninth Concerto (D minor) with clearness of phrasing and sufficiently brilliant execution, but Herr Ondricek has revived for them the Paganini eccentricities.

We have not yet reached any of the choral novelties of which hopes were held out, but having had Berlioz's "Faust" and the "Elijah," the customary two performances of "The Messiah" were given on the 20th and 21st ult. The efforts of the choir this season show a decided improvement. It is a pity that Sir Charles Hallé retains the somewhat theatrical idea originated by the late Sir M. Costa with regard to the opening of "For unto us," by which all the jubilant excitement of the phrase is lost. On the other hand, he is to be congratulated for having discarded the notion, started last year, that "He shall feed His flock" is a sort of graceful dance tune "Alla Siciliano." That we should go to the Trocadero Concerts to learn the tempi of Handel's songs is as absurd as that we should fly to Germany to estimate the capabilities of choralists. The notion of Robert Franz that the semiquaver passages in No. 12, and elsewhere, should be assigned to the solo singers will never prevail in a country where, for close upon a century and a-half, they have been successfully attacked by the best choristers in the world. In one of our local papers "Our London Correspondent" announces, as a fact that might be interesting, that before the end of the Christmas holidays our great festival will have been commemorated by no less than four performances of "The Messiah." In one room in Manchester our national Oratorio has been heard seven or eight times and probably a score of highly creditable celebrations of our "great festival" have been held in the city.

Mr. de Jong has not been forgetful of the interest of his subscribers. He always supplies vocal music in abundance, and labours to raise the taste of his audience for the orchestral music which he persistently cultivates. No duty of a Conductor could be happier or higher than that of gradually increasing the capacity of a popular assembly to receive and appreciate works of deeper meaning and more exalted tendency. For some Concert-givers the audience is already prepared, and is more disposed to demand to be led onward than to follow reluctantly. But on Saturday evenings the first wish is, probably, for amusement rather than for education and keener insight into the mysteries of art. Nevertheless, Dr. Mackenzie's Ballet music from "Colomba" and his "Burns Rhapsody" have stimulated the desire to know more of the efforts of our native composers in a direction somewhat new to them, and Mr. de Jong could not serve his generation better than by gratifying the wish.

The annual visit of the Glasgow Select Choir, under Mr. Millar Craig's direction, excited the utmost enthusiasm amongst our friends from North Britain, and the piquant rendering of the humorous selections charmed every member of a densely crowded assembly. In solo singers the choir is not rich, consequently the songs are wisely restricted to such as distinctly savour of the mountain and glen, and appeal to the remembrance of the listener.

The second Concert of the season of the Athenæum Musical Society was given on the 10th ult., in the large hall of the institution. There was a large attendance, and the Conductor and the choir could not but be gratified by the appreciative applause of the audience. Of the now rather numerous local amateur choral societies which invite the public to hear the results of their study and practice, not one has deserved better of this music-loving community than that which Dr. Hiles has conducted with so much courage and zeal for more than twenty years. The powerful work in last night's programme was Bottesini's "The Garden of Olivet," an Oratorio written for the last Norwich Festival. The performance was on the whole very satisfactory. The second part of the Concert included several attractive choruses, not the least successful of which was Barnett's lively "One morn a Peri," from "Paradise and the Peri." Miss Ada Lee sang Verdi's exacting cavatina "Ernani involami" with artistic skill and in excellent taste, Mr. Cleaver excited the enthusiasm of the audience in a new song "God sent His singers," by T. H. Kinsey, and Mr. Barlow sang the tenor music in "Alexander's Feast" very artistically.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE October Term that has just closed has been a period of remarkable activity in musical matters. A very great number of eminent performers have given Concerts, and the musical organisations of the place have also been fully occupied. The result is that it is scarcely possible even to notice all the Concerts that have taken place, and that the only course left is to attempt the somewhat invidious task of selecting what seem to be the most prominent events.

It seems very questionable whether the supply of music has not been somewhat in excess of the demand for it.

The reason for this undesirable state of things is, perhaps, to be found in the fact that during the month of November no fewer than five Concerts on the most extensive scale were given under the auspices of local musicians. On November 9 and 10 two exercises for the degree of D.Mus. were given in the Sheldonian Theatre, a "Missa Solennis," by the Rev. J. H. Mee, and a short Oratorio entitled "Daniel," by Mr. Plumridge. A notice of the former in last month's MUSICAL TIMES renders any further mention of it now superfluous. Mr. Plumridge's Oratorio deviated somewhat from familiar lines in its treatment of the recitatives and in the use of Oriental scales, but the result impressed the listeners as being more difficult than effective. On the other hand, the old English tune "Bedford" was employed as a sort of canto fermo throughout the work in a most scholarly and satisfactory manner, and the double chorus that opened the third part was eminently striking and powerful. Later in the month three important Concerts were given by local societies at intervals of a week. "The Messiah," by the Choral Society (November 15); Sullivan's music to the "Tempest," by the Orchestral Association, at a reading of Shakespeare's play by Mr. Brandram (November 22); and a miscellaneous Concert by the Madrigal Society, for the benefit of the Great Western Railway Benevolent Fund (November 29). The choruses in Handel's familiar work were, of course, child's play to the splendid chorus that the Choral Society now possesses; but considerable interest attached to the Concert from the fact that two local amateurs, Miss Price and Mr. Ferguson, of Magdalen College, sang the contralto and bass solos with very great credit to themselves. Mrs. Hutchinson and Mr. Banks took the soprano and tenor parts. The other two performances, though interesting enough, call for no special notice. All three succeeded in drawing a good audience.

There still remain three miscellaneous items to mention. On November 28 the Professor of Music delivered a public Lecture on "English Ballad Music," at which a number of illustrations were sung by Miss Anna Fremantle and Messrs. Jackson and Ferguson. On the 7th ult. a selection from Handel's "Messiah" was sung at a Special Advent Service in the Cathedral. The solos were entrusted to the gentlemen of the Cathedral Choir, which was reinforced in the choruses by the boys of New and Exeter Colleges, and by about forty amateurs. Advantage was taken of the opportunity to allow people to hear the little known numbers between "The trumpet shall sound" and "Worthy is the Lamb." Lastly, on the 4th ult. the Merton College Musical Society gave the only College Concert, not reckoning Smoking Concerts, that took place during the Term. The programme was quite unpretentious, but derived some interest from an efficient rendering of Macfarren's short Cantata "May Day."

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD.

THE advent of Christmas has temporarily interrupted the series of ballad and subscription Concerts which, during the last two months, have provided local musicians and music-lovers with diversified fare. Societies and entrepreneurs have seized with more than customary eagerness on "The Messiah," an unwonted number of performances of the work being given. Among these were Mr. W. Brown's annual Albert Hall performance, with Misses Julia Jones and L. Dews, Messrs. Orlando Harley and Elijah Jackson as principals; and renderings of the work by the Choral Union, the Upperthorpe Choral Society, and the Tonic Sol-fa Union.

An excellent performance of Beethoven's C minor Symphony was given, on the 4th ult., by the Amateur Instrumental Society. The quality of the strings was rich and full, the leads were taken up crisply by the wind instruments, and the entire rendering of the work was a distinct advance on the Society's previous efforts. Mozart's "Zauberflöte" and Auber's "Haydée" Overtures, and a lengthy selection from "Dinorah" were also given.

Miss Marie Schumann appeared at the Saturday Popular Concert on the 15th ult., playing Grieg's Sonata (Op. 18) and pieces by Wieniawski and Viouxtemps. Mr. Alfred Hollins (organist), Miss Louise Schumann, and others also took part in the Concert.

Mr. E. H. Lemare, F.C.O., the Organist of the Sheffield Parish Church, has established a series of fortnightly Organ Recitals at the church after evening service. The new organ recently built by Messrs. Brindley and Foster is a fine instrument, and Mr. Lemare has done a public service by enabling it to be heard to full advantage.

The Chesterfield Harmonic Society gave "The Messiah" on Christmas Day, under Mr. G. A. Seed. Performances of the work were also given by newly formed choral societies at Doncaster and Dronfield.

In connection with the Choir Festival of the Wesleyan Chapel, Heeley, Sheffield, a sacred Cantata "Immanuel," composed by Dr. Spark, of Leeds, was performed on the 10th ult., for the first time in Sheffield, before a large and appreciative audience. The principal vocalists were Miss Millicent Clark, Miss M. Pfeilschmidt, Mr. Joseph Turner, and Mr. J. B. Eaton. The composer of the work presided at the organ, and Mr. John R. Brown, the Organist and Choir-master of the Chapel, conducted.

The Amateur Musical Society gave their fiftieth Concert on the 19th ult., performing Macfarren's "St. John the Baptist" and Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion," under the direction of Herr Schollhammer. Both works were given in praiseworthy style. The excellent chorus-singing of the leading Society in the town was the main feature of the Concert, and re-established the prestige of the Society, which of late had somewhat fallen off. The principals were Miss Effie Thomas, Miss Henrietta Cooke, Mr. D. S. Macdonald (of Durham Cathedral), and three members of the Society. Mr. J. W. Phillips presided at the organ and Mr. J. Peck led the band.

MUSIC IN SOUTH WALES AND MONMOUTHSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

In regard to the last National Eisteddfod held at Wrexham, it appears that the Committee have now decided upon the disposition of part of their surplus of £900—£400 is to go to the local Free Library; £25 to the Wrexham Philharmonic Society; a similar sum to the Wrexham Choral Society; £30 to start an Art Class; £10 to Mr. Howell Davies (designer of the Pavilion); similar sums to the Gorsedd bards, and the National Eisteddfod Association put in a claim for the balance. As already set forth, the Eisteddfod this year will take place in Brecon. The Committee decided that the names of the adjudicators should not be published until the issue of the official programme of the Eisteddfod meeting. It is believed that the Prince of Wales will visit the Brecon Eisteddfod.

The announcement that Miss Meta Scott has been elected an associate of the Royal Academy of Music was received with some interest, especially in Merthyr, her home. She was originally a pupil of the late Walter Bache.

The Cardiff Orchestral Society's Concert at the Park Hall, Cardiff, on the 19th ult., was a gratifying success. The vocalists who assisted on the occasion were Mr. Charles Banks and Madame Mary Davies. The performance, by Mrs. Arthur Angle, of Mendelssohn's Concerto "Capriccio Brillant" (Op. 22) was very successful. The pianoforte accompaniments were played by Mr. J. E. Déacon.

The Concert given by the Zoar Harmonic Society at Merthyr, on the 20th ult., was largely attended by the public. In the rendering of "Paradise," an Oratorio by Fawcett, the choir, which was not large but was nicely balanced, sang several choruses effectively. The leading soloists, who rendered considerable service both in the performance of the Oratorio and in the Concert of miscellaneous music, which constituted the first part of the programme, were Miss S. A. Evans, Miss M. J. Thomas, Miss Mary Miles, Mr. W. A. Davies (in the absence of Mr. J. Thomas), and Mr. Sandford Jones.

MUSIC IN THE WEST OF ENGLAND.

If the West of England at Christmas time in matters musical plays the old fashioned game of "follow my leader" with its metropolis, Bristol, then the occupation of the musical critic of that part of the United Kingdom must be nothing more than a sinecure. At Bristol for the time being the voice of the divine art is silent, except when she be heard as the handmaiden of pantomime and panorama, for these two now reign supreme in the chief town of the West, the former at the two theatres and the latter at the only locale that can contain a paying audience—namely, the Colston Hall. Will it be credited that Bristol, with a population of over 250,000, does not amongst that number contain enough lovers of music to make it worth the while of any entrepreneur to give at Christmas a performance of "The Messiah." Surely Bristol occupies in this respect an almost unique position amongst the musical centres—so-called—of England. But our duty is perhaps less to find fault than to chronicle passing musical events. All Concerts at Bristol have during the past month been announced as either the "last of the present Season," or "the last before Christmas," so that there is really but little to notice.

On the 8th ult. the last of the present series of Mr. Theo. Carrington's Matinées was given. Owing to the wretched weather, the attendance was not what the programme provided should have attracted. The artists were Mrs. Pomeroy (pianoforte), Mr. Carrington

(violin), Mr. Gardner (viola), and Mr. Pomeroy (violoncello). Schumann's Quartet in E flat and the Adagio and Finale from Mendelssohn's C minor, Trio for pianoforte, viola, and violoncello were remarkably well rendered. Mr. Carrington, in solos by Wagner and Molique, evoked, as usual, great applause. Mrs. Pomeroy was heard to advantage in a Suite of Handel's. The vocalist on this occasion was Miss Eleanor Rees, who was deservedly awarded unstinted applause, and encored in Stephen Adams's "The silent highway."

On the evening of the 13th ult. the Bristol Gleemen gave their second annual open night, under the conductorship of Mr. Kidner. An attractive programme was provided, and rendered in such a manner as to show a decided and marked advance on last year's effort. It might, however, not be out of place to advise the Society to adhere more closely to that class of composition more directly associated with the name they have adopted.

The Bath Philharmonic Society gave an Orchestral and Choral Concert on the 10th ult. The first part of the programme consisted of what was announced as a performance of the "Creation," but which really proved to be a selection from that work. Dr. Bridge's Birmingham Cantata "Callirhoë" occupied the remainder of the evening, and under the conductorship of the composer was exceedingly well rendered, and at once found favour with the audience. The soloists during the evening were Miss Annie Marriott, Miss Ohren, Miss Hale, and Messrs. Banks, Page, and Reakes, who one and all gave a good account of themselves. It should be mentioned that Signor Visetti conducted the "Creation" selection.

The Bath Choral Union gave an excellent performance of "The Messiah," on the 20th ult., with Mrs. Osman-Wilson, Miss Rees, Mr. Newbury, and Mr. Bridson as principals. Herr Sondermann was the Conductor. The profits arising from this Concert were devoted to providing a Christmas dinner for poor and aged persons.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

New York, December 12, 1888.

THE only sensation of the musical season in New York so far has been the notably fine pianoforte playing of Herr Moritz Rosenthal. His first Concert was given over chiefly to the works of Liszt, but since hearing him play Schumann's "Carnaval," Chopin's First Concerto, and Beethoven's "Appassionata," the critics have unanimously agreed that he is a great artist. At the second Concert of the Symphony Society, on November 24, he played the Chopin Concerto mentioned, with the intelligence and feeling of a true interpreter. His exposition of the themes was matchless in its justice and eloquence. At a Recital in Steinway Hall, on December 4, Herr Rosenthal exhibited the inexhaustible resources of his technique in a performance of Brahms's "Variations on a Theme by Paganini." Joseff, from whom Rosenthal took lessons in his early days, Lambert, Winkler, Aus der Ohe, and other resident pianists led the audience in the outburst of enthusiasm which followed his amazing performance.

The second Concert of the Philharmonic Society took place at the Metropolitan Opera House, on December 8. The orchestral numbers of the programme were Schumann's "Overture, Scherzo, and Finale," and Rubinstein's "Ocean Symphony" (first edition). Madame Fursch-Madi was heard in the scene of the Valkyr's awakening from Reyser's "Sigurd" and a fragment from Massenet's "Herodiade," both of which were new here. The latter was the more admired. Richard Arnold, Concertmeister of the Society, played Spohr's Eighth Concerto ("Scena Concertante") excellently.

The season of grand opera in German, at the Metropolitan Opera House, began on the evening of November 28, with Meyerbeer's "Les Huguenots," introducing the following new members of the Company: Frau Moran-Olden as Valentine, Fräulein Alma Föhström as Marguerite de Valois, Fräulein Felicie Koschoska as Urban, Julius Perotti as Raoul, Ludwig Mödinger as St. Bris, and Alois Grinauer as De Nevers. Herr Fischer was the Marcel. On the second night of the opera, November 30, "Lohengrin" was given, introducing three more new-comers: Fräulein Katti Bettaque as Elsa, Fräulein Hedwig Reil as Ortrud, and Herr Joseph Beck as the Herald.

On December 3 "William Tell" was given with Perotti as Arnold, Robinson as Tell, Fischer as Walter, Alvary as the Fisherman, Beck as Melchthal, Grinauer as Leuthold, Föhstroem as Mathilde, Koschoka as Jemmy, and Reil as Tell's wife. Perotti acquitted himself with great credit as Arnold several times. On December 5 an uncommonly fine performance of "Fidelio" was given, with Moran-Olden as Leonora, Bettaque as Marcellina, Alvary as Florestan, Fischer as Rocco, and Beck as Pizzaro. On December 7 "L'Africaine," which had been prepared as the spectacular opera of the season, was produced, with Perotti as Vasco di Gama, Moran-Olden as Selika, Robinson as Nelusko, Fischer as Pedro, and Traubmann as Inez. The opera was mounted superbly, and was repeated on December 10, and "William Tell" was heard for the second time on December 12. "Faust" was to be sung on Friday evening of this week. There has been an abundance of minor musical entertainments in New York.

At the seventh Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Boston Music Hall, on November 17, a new Pianoforte Concerto, by Arthur Whiting, a young American composer, was produced, the composer playing the pianoforte part. This young man has turned out a Concert-Overture, written under the eye of his master, Rheinberger, but the Concerto is his first independent work. One of the best reviews of the Concert said that he had aimed not to elevate the solo instrument at the expense of the orchestra, but to preserve a mutual relation and close juxtaposition between both. His thematic material is well chosen, but his work suffers from frequent episodic digressions. The instrumentation is excellent, and the harmonies show good schooling. The young composer's clear touch and fluent style of playing brought out the best points of the pianoforte portions, while Mr. Gericke and his admirable orchestra attended to their share of the work with great care.

At the next Concert of the same orchestra, Mr. C. M. Loeffler, violinist, played Max Bruch's Fantaisie, which was introduced to patrons of the London Philharmonic Concerts about five years ago as a Scotch Concerto, Sarasate being the soloist. The work was new here and Bruch was criticised for his free treatment of the familiar Scotch airs. Mr. Loeffler's playing was highly successful. He held the attention of the audience and was very warmly applauded. At the Concert of December 1 Mr. Gericke's programme consisted of Lachner's Suite in D minor, Volkmann's Serenade in F major, and the "Eroica" Symphony. On December 8 Carl Baerman, the pianist, played Brahms's B flat Concerto, and the orchestra performed Wagner's "Faust" Overture and Berlioz's "Childe Harold" Symphony, Franz Kneisel playing the viola obbligato.

The Cecilia Society, of Boston, gave Brahms's "German Requiem," at the Music Hall, on Monday evening, December 10. The soloists were Elizabeth C. Hamlin (soprano), and Eliot Hubbard (baritone). Dvorák's "Patriotic Hymn," for chorus and orchestra, was also given.

The first of the season's Concerts by the Boylston Club, of Boston, was given at the Music Hall on Friday evening, when the programme was "Bridal Chorus" (Jensen), for mixed voices, tenor and soprano solos, horns and pianoforte; "Journey Song" (Rheinberger), mixed voices; (a) Song (Loewe), (b) "The Sprite" (Schumann), female voices; "Parting" (Appel), male voices and baritone solo; an Adagio (Mozart) for solo horn and pianoforte; Glee, "Rustic Coquette" (English), mixed voices; "Snow Bells" (Thieser), female voices; "The Dying Trumpeter" (Mohring), male voices; Glee, "Kitty Fell" (Sir John Goss), altos and male voices; Carol, "A hunter would a-hunting" (Brahms). The Christmas legend "Yule Tide," by Anderton, formed the second part. The Club had the assistance of Mr. Warren A. Locke (pianist), Mr. H. O. Johnson (tenor), Mr. Clarence E. Hay (bass), and two horn soloists from the Symphony orchestra.

A successful performance of Gounod's "Redemption" was given by the Arion Society, of Providence, on Wednesday evening, November 21. Mr. Gardner Lamson was much praised for his singing of the bass Narrator. The choruses were well sung by the Society, and the work made a fine impression on the audience.

The Rochester Musical Festival, conducted by Theodore Thomas, was a great success in every way.

The first Concert of the Chicago Symphony Society, under the direction of Hans Balatka, took place at the Central Music Hall, on November 23. Weber's "Jubal" Overture, a new Suite in D major, by Arthur Bird, a young American composer, and Liszt's "Tasso" were the principal numbers on the programme, which was of a fragmentary character. Madame Fursch-Madi sang "Ocean, thou mighty monster."

In Pittsburg the Festival Chorus is considering the advisability of studying Ritter's "Te Deum," Nicholl's "Cloister Scene," and the "Creation," for the May Music Festival.

In Baltimore the only important news is that the Philharmonic Orchestra, owing to the long illness of its Conductor, W. E. Heimendahl, and the apathy of the public, has disbanded.

The French opera season in New Orleans has been remarkably successful thus far. Madame Scheweyer-Lematte, the dramatic soprano of the company, has distinguished herself in several rôles, notably as Rachel in "La Juive" and Marguerite in "Faust." M. Berger has sung, with applause, such parts as Marrico, Eleazar, and others, while Lafarge has been praised for his Faust.

It is announced that Theodore Thomas will give a series of Concerts at Chickering Hall, New York, beginning in January.

AN excellent Concert was given at the Surbiton Park Lecture Hall, on the 17th ult., by the Surbiton Choral Society, when Mendelssohn's "Athalie" was performed. The Society deserves high praise for the admirable result of its first effort, singing throughout with precision and intelligence, and Mr. R. Sebastian Hart, the Conductor, should be congratulated on the success of his training. The solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Winn, who sang with much spirit, Miss Amelia Gruhn, and Miss Mary Willis, whose refined singing and admirable enunciation were especially noticeable. Mr. Charles Fry recited the verses with dramatic force. The accompaniments were efficiently played by Mrs. Seaman and Mr. Basil H. Philpott (pianoforte), and Mr. F. T. V. Honeywell (harmonium). In the second part of the Concert Herr Julius Herner charmed the audience by his admirable playing in Goltermann's violoncello solo, Miss Winn gained a hearty encore for her piquant rendering of a song from "Dorothy," and Mr. Charles Fry's humorous delivery of "The Charity Dinner" met with hearty recognition. The choir sang two part-songs by Pinsuti with effect.

A CONCERT by the students of the Hampstead Conservatoire was given under the direction of the Principal, Mr. G. F. Geaussen, at the Hampstead Vestry Hall, on the 8th ult. A special feature of the Concert was the appearance of a large section of the new Conservatoire Choir. Judging from the quality of tone and admirable expression of light and shade shown in the rendering of Bach's Motet "Blessing, glory," it is evident that the residents of the locality may look forward with anticipation to excellent renderings of the works announced for performance in the Hall attached to the new building, which is to be opened on the 28th inst. The students who appeared as soloists were Miss Waite, Miss Mildred Harwood, Miss Walton, Miss Alice Carr, and Miss Tombleson, the last-named lady also and Mr. Arthur Fry giving recitations. Special mention should be made of the admirable pianoforte playing of Miss Louisa Pyne—indeed, the students generally gave evidence of the sound training they had received.

So far from showing symptoms of diminution, the popularity of Madame Patti continues to increase, and the success of the recent Concerts at the Albert Hall was so great that two more performances have been fixed for the 8th and 22nd inst. A few words concerning the Concert of the 11th ult. will suffice. The great vocalist was in magnificent voice, and Bellini's "Ah, non credea," with its florid sequel, and Gounod's "Ave Maria" were rendered in a manner that may fairly be described as matchless. The duet "Tornami a dir," from "Don Pasquale," in which Mr. Lloyd took part, probably never before received so fine an interpretation. Madame Sterling, Miss Marianne Eissler, and Mr. Santley also appeared, and a small orchestra was ably conducted by Mr. Ganz. With the exception of Miss Eissler's violin solos, however, the instrumental items in the programme were received with general indifference by the immense audience.

THE 238th consecutive Monthly Concert of the St. George's Glee Union took place at the Pimlico Rooms, Warwick Street, on the 7th ult. The short first part comprised a song each from Miss Kate Fusselle, Miss Annie Matthews, and Madame Osborne Williams; a recitation from Mr. G. Howard Coveney, and the part-songs "Sweet Stream" (Bennett) and "When winds breathe soft" (Webbe) from the choir. The great feature of the Concert, however, was the music to Racine's "Tragedy of Athalie," composed by Mendelssohn. The soli parts were well sung by the above-mentioned vocalists, and the choruses were vigorously rendered by the choir. The reciting of the lyrics was entrusted to Mr. G. Howard Coveney, of the Lyceum Theatre. The Overture and "War March of the Priests" were played by Mrs. Edmonds and Mr. J. Henry Leipold (pianoforte), and Mr. Herbert Schartau (harmonium). Mr. Monday conducted.

THE Messrs. Hann gave the last Concert of the present series on the 12th ult. An especial feature of the programme was an exceedingly good performance of Brahms's Sextet in B flat major, for two violins, two violas, and two violoncellos, played by the father and his five sons. Haydn's Quartet in F was also capably played, and an excellent reading of Mozart's Sonata in A major (No. 7), for pianoforte and violin, was given by Messrs. Sidney and Lewis Hann. Mr. William C. Hann also contributed two violoncello solos by Lachner and Popper in a finished manner, and Miss Annie Marriott sang two songs. The Messrs. Hann must be congratulated at the close of their third season on their artistic success, and also on the unusual excellence of their Concerts.

RISEING talent was plentifully exhibited at the Concert given by Miss Dora Barnard at Steinway Hall, on the 6th ult. Miss Barnard is herself a vocalist of no slight promise, and her rendering of some well-known pieces created an excellent impression, her voice and style being much liked. Mr. Frank May displayed a capital deep baritone voice; Miss Cecilia Gates played some violin solos in an artistic manner; Mr. Septimus Webbe's executive powers were admired in a Study by Liszt and a Mazurka by Godard, and Mr. C. H. Allen Gill gave some violoncello solos; while the three performers last-named were heard together in Mozart's E major Trio. Mr. W. H. Cummings also appeared and sang in his best manner a couple of songs by Sterndale Bennett.

IN spite of the fog which prevailed in the North of London on Tuesday evening, the 18th ult., there was a full attendance at the Tufnell Park Choral Society's performance of "Judith," by Dr. Hubert Parry. Miss Marianne Fenna sang the music allotted to Judith with such dramatic power as to secure a genuine success. Mr. Edwin Bryant was a good representative of King Manasseh, whilst the remaining characters were undertaken by Miss Bayley, Miss Cloudesley, Miss Stephenson, and Mr. F. W. Partridge. The choral numbers were all exceedingly well sung. Mr. F. Lewis Thomas was the accompanist, and he was assisted by a professional string quartet, Messrs. Frye, Packer, Hann, and Maney; the Conductor being, as usual, Mr. W. Henry Thomas.

MR. HARRY E. WARNER, Organist of the Parish Church, Kew, gave his fourteenth annual Students' Concert at the College Hall, Richmond, on the 11th ult. The programme contained Schubert's "Impromptu" (Op. 90), played by Miss Chapman; Weber's "Polacca" in E, played by Miss W. Thompson; and Mendelssohn's Andante and Rondo, of which Miss Mabel Edwards gave a most spirited rendering. The singing of Miss Cullum and the Misses Edmunds was much appreciated. Master Willie Randall gained an encore for his violin solo. Mr. Warner's Pupils' String Band played Handel's Overture to "Saul" and an "Intermezzo" of his own composition, which was well received.

A PERFORMANCE of Barnby's "Rebekah" was given in St. Barnabas' Church, South Kennington, after evensong on Sunday, the 16th ult. The choir was reinforced by the members of the St. Barnabas Choral Society, and the accompaniments were sustained by an orchestra of twenty-six performers, in addition to the organ. The solo parts, taken by Miss Jecks, Mr. R. Evans, and the Rev. St. Clare Hill, were effectively rendered. The hymns were scored for orchestra by Mr. Fred. W. Lacey, the Organist of the Church, and the Canticles were sung to Tours in F, also accompanied by orchestra. Mr. J. W. Ling presided at the organ, and Mr. Fred. W. Lacey conducted.

A CONCERT was given by the St. Peter's Park Choral Society (Paddington) on the 18th ult., under the Conductorship of Mr. Edwin D. Lloyds. The first part consisted of Gaul's Cantata "Ruth," with solos by Miss Jenny Eddison, Miss Annie Dweley, Miss Eveleen Carlton, and Mr. Stanley Smith. This work was followed by Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," the solo part being taken by Miss Eveleen Carlton. The second part consisted of vocal solos and part-songs. Messrs. Sinclair Mantell and F. R. Kinkee were the accompanists, and the choruses were given with great precision and taste by about fifty members of the Society.

THE Leytonstone Choral Society gave their first Subscription Concert of the present season at the Elliott Rooms, on the 17th ult. The programme included Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," "Lord, bow down Thine ear," Sir Herbert Oakeley's "Who is this that cometh from Edom?" and choruses from "The Messiah," "Creation," "Judas Maccabæus," and other works. The soloists were Mrs. J. R. Tannahill, Miss J. Dakin, Mr. Frank Fairfax, and Mr. Cuttle. The choir was assisted by a well trained orchestra. Miss Dakin and Mr. H. Riding, F.C.O., were the accompanists, and Mr. J. W. Ulyett the Conductor.

MR. FREDERIC PENNA gave a Vocal and Dramatic Recital at Steinway Hall, on November 30, assisted by several artists of repute, including Madame Frickenhaus, Miss Clementine Ward, Mr. Trelawney Cobham, and Mr. John C. Ward. Mr. Penna showed his versatility by contributing to both sections of the programme. He sang with considerable charm Purcell's "I attempt from love's sickness to fly" and Dr. Blow's "Self-banished"; also songs by Schubert, Méhul, and Maude White. Later on he gave a number of recitations in a manner that equally met with the approval of his auditors.

ON the evening of Tuesday, the 18th ult., the Richmond Choral Society gave a performance of Haydn's "Creation" at the College Hall, Richmond Green, under the direction of Mr. J. Maude Crament, Mus. Bac., Oxon., the Conductor of the Society. The choral numbers of the Oratorio were, on the whole, delivered with precision and vigour. The accompaniments were played by a quintet of strings and the organ of the hall, at which Mr. Thomas Pettit presided. The solos were entrusted to Madame Catherine Penna, Mr. Alfred Kenningham, and Mr. Musgrove Tufnail. The leader of the small orchestra was Mr. W. A. Easton.

MR. NORFOLK MEGONE may be congratulated on the efficiency of the orchestra at the Concert of the Strolling Players on the 16th ult., at St. James's Hall. Haydn's Symphony in D, No. 7 of the Salomon set, did not overtax the amateur instrumentalists, and the ballet music from Massenet's "Le Cid" went even better. The Strollers must certainly be ranked among the best of our amateur orchestral societies. Madame Belle Cole and Mr. Watkin Mills were the vocalists at this Concert. There was, as usual, a crowded and brilliant audience, and the music received rather more attention than on former occasions.

THE Kensington Orchestral and Choral Society gave a performance of Cowen's Cantata "The Rose Maiden" at the Kensington Town Hall, on the 14th ult., under the direction of Mr. William Buels. On the whole, this charming and fanciful work was creditably rendered; but there was a good deal of roughness and uncertainty both in the band and chorus, the impression left upon the mind being that the Cantata had not been sufficiently rehearsed. The Wedding chorus went very well, and was encored. Of the soloists, the most commendable was Miss Annie Dwelley.

MR. LE FÈVRE, of King Street, St. James's, has published an etching by Lowenstam of the picture by Bruck Lajos representing a rehearsal for a Monday Popular Concert. It contains portraits of Joachim, Ries, Straus, and Piatti in an elegant salon, about to commence the trial of a quartet. The pose of the figures is life-like, and the likenesses are undeniably good, though the least happy of the group is by comparison the portrait of Ries. The picture possesses not only a musical, but also an artistic value, and will be esteemed by amateurs for the likenesses of the artists and of three of the finest Straduarii instruments in existence.

AN Evening Ballad Concert was given in the Addison Hall, Kensington, on Friday, the 14th ult., in aid of the fund for providing Christmas dinners for poor children. The performers were Miss Alice Mary Smith (harp), Miss Annie Magna Crisp (pianoforte), Mrs. Albert Barker (reciter); the vocalists being Miss Edith Marriott, Miss Lucie Johnstone, Mr. Claude Ravenhill, and Mr. Wilfred Jones. The programme was highly attractive, and the execution of every item was very successful. Mr. S. H. E. Jackson was the Conductor.

SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S "Martyr of Antioch" and Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night" were the works selected for the first Concert given by the Woodside Park Musical Society on the 13th ult., at Woodside Hall, North Finchley. The soloists were Miss Eveleen Carlton, Madame Florence Winn, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Frank Ward, all of whom were very efficient. Mr. E. Halfpenny was leader of the orchestra, Mr. C. E. Jolley, Mus. Bac., Oxon., presided at the organ, and Mrs. Williams at the pianoforte. Mr. Alfred J. Dye conducted.

THE members of the Grosvenor Choral Society gave their 202nd monthly Concert at the Grosvenor Hall, on Friday evening, the 21st ult., when Cowen's Cantata "Sleeping Beauty" was performed for the first time by this Society. Williams. Mr. George Winny presided at the Mustel organ and Mrs. T. P. Frame at the pianoforte. Mr. David Woodhouse conducted.

THE first Concert of the third season of the Streatham Choral Society, which now numbers about one hundred active members, took place at the Town Hall, Streatham, on Friday, the 14th ult., when Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm and Gade's "Erl-King's Daughter" were performed. The solo vocalists were Miss Annie Marriott, Miss Blanche Powell, and Mr. John Gritton. Mr. C. S. Macpherson conducted, and the accompanists were: pianoforte, Messrs. H. Lake and H. E. Macpherson; harmonium, Mr. Arthur Lake.

THE first Concert of the Wandsworth Philharmonic Society took place at the Town Hall, Wandsworth, on Monday, the 3rd ult., when the programme included Gaul's "Joan of Arc" and a miscellaneous selection. Madame Wilson-Osman, Mr. Andrew Black, and Mr. Dyved Lewys were the vocalists engaged, and Mr. H. W. Weston, F.C.O., conducted an admirable performance. There was a full band and chorus of 150 performers, and the Society has cause to congratulate itself upon a very successful first appearance.

A CONCERT of vocal and instrumental music was given at St. George's Institute, W., on Tuesday evening, the 4th ult. The vocalists were Madame Clara West, Miss Emilie Holt, Miss Lottie West, Mr. Edwin Bryant, and Mr. Herbert Budge. Violoncello, Miss Lilian Watson; pianoforte, Miss Margaret Gyde; accompanist, Mr. John E. West. Some very effective part-songs, &c., were sung by the Choir of St. Mary's, Bourdon Street. There was a large and appreciative audience, and the Concert was altogether a great success.

THE St. Mark's Choral Society gave a Concert at St. Mark's Vestry Room, Battersea Rise, on the 12th ult., when Hiller's "Song of Victory" and Costa's "The Dream" were well rendered by the excellent choir under the conductorship of Mr. H. Bray. Soloists: Madame Isabel George, Madame Schlüter, Mr. James Gawthrop, and Mr. E. Bowles. The second part of the programme consisted of part-songs and solos by the same artists and the choir. Miss Grace Smith presided at the pianoforte and Mr. E. P. Atkins at the harmonium.

Mullerhausen, and Mr. Thornton Colvin. A small orchestra of professional musicians played the accompaniments, and the choir of some eighty voices gave a very good rendering of the choruses. Mr. H. H. Lawson presided at the organ and Mr. Waldo Morell conducted.

MENDELSSOHN'S "Hear my prayer," with Spohr's "Last Judgment," were given by the Kyrle Choir on Wednesday, the 5th ult., at St. Katharine's, Rotherhithe. The soloists were Madame Edith Touzeau, Mrs. Edwards, Mr. Ager Grover, and Mr. Morgan Wilkinson. The same works were sung by the Kyrle Choir at the Congregational Church, Canning Town, E., on the 12th ult. Soloists: Mrs. Stanesby, Miss Edith Kelly, Mr. William Foxon, and Mr. James Blackney.

MADAME SOPHIE TUESKI gave an evening Concert at the Portman Rooms, on the 4th ult., when a most attractive programme was provided by the following artists: Madame Vaudrey, Miss Maud Martin, Miss Alice Cranz, Mr. F. Landor Scates, Mr. L. von Kollem, Herr Oberthür (harp), M. Henri Logé (pianoforte), M. Victor Buziau (violin), Mr. Hambleton (violoncello), and Miss Glamoye, the latter giving some choice recitations. Mr. Alfred Allen officiated as accompanist.

THE Popular Musical Union has given three performances of "Judas Maccabæus" in November, and five performances of "The Messiah" during the last month in various parts of London, the most successful Concert being given at the Town Hall, Bermondsey, on Saturday evening, the 15th ult. There was a full band and chorus, and a really capital performance was the result. The soloists on this occasion were Madame Wilson-Osman, Miss Josephine Cravino, Messrs. Cox and Kempton. The Conductor was Mr. W. Henry Thomas.

THE first Examination for the Degree of Bachelor in Music in the University of Oxford will commence on Wednesday, the 30th inst., at ten o'clock, in the Schools. The names of gentlemen who intend to present themselves will be received by Mr. George Parker, the Clerk of the Schools, on or before the 17th inst., on payment of the statutable fee of £2. Candidates who are not already members of the University must matriculate before the Examination.

MR. EDWARD DANNREUTHER is engaged on a work which will be of great value to musicians generally and pianists in particular. He is writing a History of Musical Graces and Ornaments, with copious illustrations and examples. The work will consist of two parts, the first from Diruta (1593) to Seb. Bach (1685-1750); the second from Emanuel Bach (1714-88) to the present day. It will be issued in the course of this year as one of Novello, Ewer and Co's Primers edited by Sir J. Stainer.

THE Orchestral Concert in connection with Trinity College, given at Princes' Hall on the 17th ult., proved that the Institution is doing creditable work in the department of musical training. Of the vocalists, Miss Bowley (mezzo-soprano), and of the pianists, Miss E. Idle, showed special promise. An Air with Variations, for orchestra, by Mr. F. Swinford, deserves mention. Mr. George Mount conducted the Concert.

MR. F. H. COWEN lately visited Sydney and was entertained at dinner by the professional and amateur musicians. Sir Patrick Jennings took the chair, and the Minister for Public Instruction was also present. Mr. Cowen, in reply to the toast of his health, enlarged upon the great appreciation of music in the capital of the sister colony, and mentioned the success he had attained as Conductor of the music at the Melbourne Exhibition.

AN interesting Concert has been arranged on behalf of the three sisters of the late John Leech, the well-known artist of Punch. These three ladies are in somewhat straitened circumstances, which it is hoped will be relieved by the Concert which is fixed for the afternoon of the 21st inst. Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley have promised to help on the occasion.

MEDELSSOHN'S "Hymn of Praise" was sung with full orchestral accompaniment at the Parish Church (St. George's), Beckenham, on Wednesday, the 5th ult. The solos were taken by Masters F. Ayling and W. REVIEWS.

A Dictionary of Musical Terms. Edited by Sir John Stainer and W. A. Barrett. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE present issue of this already well-known Dictionary is the third, and it has given the Editors an opportunity of correcting several inaccuracies which had crept into the earlier issues. The general excellence of this Dictionary is proved by the amount of welcome it has met with since its first appearance in 1875, and doubtless it will, by favour of the emendations of this new edition, increase in popularity. The work is the result of a large amount of thoughtful research, and its varied articles are contributed by the most learned men in the respective subjects treated. As a book of reference it is most valuable, for, besides containing articles which are naturally expected of it, there are comprehensive and lucid explanations of terms not commonly used which, being relative to the subject, should command the attention of those who study the origin and progress of musical terms. The Treatise on Harmony, one of many excellent demonstrations, is especially good; its history and growth are lucidly given, and it traces back the first use of the word as a general term for music amongst the Greeks; then, from its meaning of "fitting together," it came to be applied to the proper arrangement of sounds in a scale. It further shows that the Grecian books on music (harmonia) "dealt with the monochord, the three genera, the sounds proper to the different modes, the shape and position of the letters representing musical sounds, and, to a limited extent, of the art of tune-making." The article then goes on to refer to the progress of treatises on harmony from the time when they were founded on the Greek system until the introduction of the hexachord, and from thence onwards.

A full account of the various stages through which harmony passed in mediæval times is given under the heading of "Descant and Counterpoint." Each of these articles is written in such a manner as not only to make the subject intelligible, but interesting as well, and further explanation under their respective headings is given of chords. A comprehensive account is given of "Chant," "Plain-Song," "Madrigal," "Glee," and "Part-Song." The "Ballad" is treated with great skill, as is also the "Country Dance," "Gavotte," "Jig," and "Hornpipe." "Dancing" is made the subject of a most able and interesting article. An explanation of "Temperament" is included such as will satisfy the deepest searcher for knowledge on the subject, while in an essay on "Acoustics" every detail that can be desired is given. The historical account of "Opera" is terse and clear, and it states in explanation of the term that it is "a dramatic entertainment in which music forms an essential and not merely an accessory part." It further tells of Rousseau's inconsistency to his own definition, which was "that opera does not mean so much a musical work, as a musical, poetical, and spectacular work all at once," a definition claimed for the Wagnerian music-drama. It goes on to give its history and origin, and points out the varieties of operas and affords complete and valuable information on the subject. "Oratorio" is explained in an equally finished fashion. The "Ear" is also given both with a musical and anatomical explanation, both tending to help one another. And "Fingering" is treated in a manner at once scientific and practical. Under the heading of "Organ" a complete account is presented. It traces the origin of the present organ back to Pan's pipes, and shows how that the slide, which was necessarily used to prevent all the pipes sounding at once, has developed into the pallet and key-action. It further relates the difficulty met with formerly by the unequal pressure of the bellows, and its removal by the introduction of water. An interesting account is given of the first organs that existed, of the introduction of pedals, of the key-boards and shape of keys; besides a lucid explanation, with diagrams, of organ construction. An interesting account of the "Troubadour" tells us that "unlike the Jongleur he was a musical poet who did not wander about the country," and further that in the days when all classes of the community were equally unrefined, there was no such distinction, and that every verse maker was called a Troubadour. The article, which shows a thorough knowledge of the subject, gives, in comparatively few words, the complete history of the Troubadours, their probable derivation of their art from the East, and their influence upon European and especially English literature. A particular charm which characterises the whole Dictionary is the interest which is imparted even to the most commonplace subjects. In many cases humorous but, at the same time, dignified explanations are given. The article on "Applause" is an instance of this, and by the witty manner in which it is treated avoids any tendency to become "as dry as dust." "Anthem" receives exhaustive treatment. There are excellent explanations of "Form," "Sonata," "Fugue," "Figured-Bass," &c., while the article on "Instrumentation," without being exhaustive, is written in such a manner as to satisfy all calls upon it. Under "Greek Music" an account is given of the musical genera from Homer to Terpander, every detail being made clear and particularised. "Hymns" and "Metre" have explanation and description, as well as "Neumes," "Class," and "Notation." There are useful articles on "Copyright" and "Licensing," brought down to date. In an instructive article on "Pianoforte" it distinctly shows its descent from the "Dulcimer" and "Harpichord" (of which explanations are given as well), and illustrates the actions of the modern upright and grand pianoforte. An excellent definition is given of the term "chest of viols," as well as articles on the family of "viols." "Cathedral Music" is made the subject of a special article, and is treated with great ability. It illustrates most pointedly one of the many good features of the Dictionary—the amount of valuable information afforded in a small space.

A comprehensive account is given of the "Carillons," with illustrations of the ancient ways of playing them; of "Bells," a history and an explanation of the technical terms for peals as well as a comparative table of the proportions of metal in English and foreign bells. The whole book is exceedingly carefully edited, and the slight alterations that have been made are but an addition to a work which was already good beyond comparison. To be interesting and trustworthy seems to have been the motto of the compilers, and it has been strictly adhered to, therefore the result is that it is not only of use and great value as a reliable work of reference, but of attractiveness and entertainment as well. Besides the fact that the book has been revised for this edition, it is gratifying to note that the price has been revised also by being reduced by one-half. It will now find its way into many places that it could not reach before.

The Beauty of Holiness. An Oratorio. The words selected and the music composed by William Statham, B.A., Mus. Doc., Dunelm. [Liverpool: James Smith.]

PROBABLY with the intention of finding something new in the form of work fitted to represent modern oratorio, each composer strives to make a design hitherto unattempted. That design may possibly be the point of a new departure, or it may remain an isolated effort. There is much that is new in the plan of Mr. Statham's libretto, which may be briefly described as illustrating by praise and worship "the beauty of holiness." The words are chiefly selected from the Scriptures, and there are verses of hymns by well-known writers added to augment the lessons conveyed in the extracts from the sacred writings. The oratorio is arranged in forty-two numbers, vocal and instrumental solos, duets, quartets, choruses, and recitatives following each other in unbroken continuity. Much might be written about the various numbers in their musical treatment could space be spared. It must suffice to say that the solos are melodious but somewhat formal in character, and the choruses are both clever and ingenious. All portions of the work are written with regularity and symmetry, and the composer seems anxious to place this fact well before notice, inasmuch as he has numbered the bars of all the movements except recitatives, and thereby shows that he has preserved a due balance of arrangement. If the music owes little to the inspiration of genius, it may be sincerely commended for its efforts of scholarship as displayed in the writing of the choruses, some of which are clever. The employment of a motto phrase or Leitmotiv expresses the composer's concord with certain modern views. His use of familiar and conventional passages in the recitatives, coupled with the repetition of words, unusual in this convenient musical means, shows that he has independent views on the subject of ancient resources of oratorio. The work would probably be found too long and of too much similarity of character to become popular without excisions, though if taken separately or in sections there is much that might be attractive.

Missa Solennis in B flat major. By John H. Mee. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE performance of this Mass at Oxford, was recently noticed in these columns. Apart from the interest of the music of the several numbers, an interest which grows with each succeeding page, there is much that is attractive in the ingenuity displayed by the composer. The opening Kyrie is in good honest eight-part writing, in which the ideas presented by the opening symphony are intensified by the voices, and duly elaborated, or rather emphasised, by the orchestral accompaniments. The form or model upon which the composer has chosen to construct his various movements shows a complete knowledge of, and perhaps admiration for, the writers of the latter part of the last century. This is well shown in the Gloria, alike in the treatment of the voices as in the accompaniments. The unity of character is well sustained throughout the opening movement. The third number is headed "Qui tollis," but it begins as a quartet with the words "Domine Fili unigenite" in pure, simple, and expressive harmonies. The solo voices are relieved by a short effective Tutti, leading to the "Qui tollis," sung by soli voices, with an independent accompanying figure. The quartet and chorus to the words "Quoniam tu solus sanctus" is one of the most striking and effective of the portions of the Gloria. The responsive, or "conversational" passages as they have been described, which form one of the marked characteristics of music of the last century, when composers dedicated their best thoughts to the service of the Church, are here happily employed, fugal and free passages being cleverly intertwined. The opening of the Credo by a single soprano voice, and a like declaration relative to the three Persons of the Trinity, is a novel effect, and gives a zest to the massiveness of the declaration of belief by the whole choir which follows. Between the first and final announcement comes a beautiful solo for soprano, "Et incarnatus est," with an expressive chorus and a broadly written "Et resurrexit," in which canonic device enhances the effect of the music. The setting of the Sanctus is bold and striking, the "Benedictus" is a beautiful piece of work, most melodious and vocal; the "Agnus Dei" is no less creditable to the musicianship of the author, and the "Dona Nobis," the final number of the Mass, with its bright accompaniment and ingenious vocal writing, though extended to a little more than ordinary length, never loses any point of the interest it excites. Of the instrumental colouring nothing can be gleaned from the excellent pianoforte arrangement, but the figures point to high aims. The whole work is full of scholarly contrivances, but we have preferred to dwell upon its musical rather than upon its academical qualifications, and as these are somewhat above the average found in University exercises, those who are attracted by the labours of English musicians will doubtless be gratified with the result of Mr. Mee's efforts.

Twelve Lyrics. Words by Harold Boulton. Music by A. Goring Thomas. [J. B. Cramer and Co.]

THE duty of writing songs which shall exhibit the powers of the musician and the condition of art has for the most part been neglected by some of our native composers of late years. They may have feared to tread the paths on which so many of those who are proverbial for the action have rushed in large numbers and still occupy. They may have been content with ministering to ephemeral demands, and have lost sight of higher needs. The series of elegant songs by a composer whose name has always been associated with elevated aspirations should be gladly received. They are beautiful as melodies, and bear evidence of careful workmanship as well as of that quality which is described as inspiration. They are well adapted for vocalisation, and are capable of much expression. The music happily fits the words, and the accompaniments, allowing for a little bias on the part of the composer for the forms of treatment proposed by Gounod, are clever if not thoroughly original. There are two beautiful duets, "Contentment" and "Sunset," for soprano and tenor, the two kinds of voices for which the rest of the songs seem suitable. These songs are called "The Viking's Daughter," "The heart's fancies," "Time's Garden," "Voices of Spring," "Under thy window," "A river dream," "A love lullaby," "The Willow," "A Song of Sunshine," and "The countryman's love song," titles which to the intelligent suggest their own character. This character is so pleasantly set forth that the performer is impressed with the thought that the union of "voice and verse" is most fitting and natural, and therefore that the composer has followed his duty, guided by the light of genius.

Presto! from The Singing School to the May Musical Festival. [F. E. Tunison, Cincinnati.]

THIS is a highly interesting account of the rise and progress of music in Cincinnati. The advance made by small degrees to an eminent position, as shown in these pages, offers a warm encouragement to the establishment of societies who propose to set themselves tasks of a like character for the furtherance and encouragement of musical art.

Mary Stuart. A Cantata for ladies' voices.

Blessed is he. Let the Heavens rejoice. Anthems. By Gustav Ernest. [J. and J. Hopkinson.]

SINCE he secured a prize offered some years ago by the Philharmonic Society, Mr. Ernest has produced a fair number of compositions of unquestionable merit, but his name has not again come prominently before the public. His ladies' Cantata is founded on the escape of Queen Mary from Lochleven Castle, and the librettist, Mr. J. Stewart, "would respectfully submit that it will add greatly to the effective rendering of the Cantata if the charming dresses of the period are worn." With this we venture wholly to disagree; in the first place, it is uncomplimentary to the composer, and further, a cantata is not an opera, and the effect should be derived solely from the music. If this fails, no amount of "dressing up," as the children term it, will save the work. This remark applies emphatically to the present Cantata; the book is totally devoid of dramatic interest, and the verses are extremely feeble; but Mr. Ernest's music is expressive and well written, while difficulties with which young ladies' classes would be unable to cope are studiously avoided. Three solo voices and a three-part chorus are required.

The composer's Anthems show that he has made himself acquainted with the style in which English church music is written. They are both simple and pleasing examples, without much distinctiveness of character. Mr. Ernest, however, appears to be under the impression that the word "trouble" has only one syllable. He either gives it to one note, or, if to two, carefully slurs them. The error is quite unaccountable.

Offertoire in G. By John Franeis Barnett. (Original Compositions for the Organ, No. 103.) [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

MR. BARNETT commences with a Poco maestoso, noteworthy for some startling harmonic transitions, and leading into the principal movement, which opens quietly with a very melodious, flowing theme, Allegretto ma non troppo. Shortly, however, the tempo quickens, and we have a lively and somewhat agitated episode in C. Then the principal subject returns and an extended Coda brings the Offertoire to an end. If not remarkable for elaboration, Mr. Barnett's piece is unquestionably pleasing, and the very sparing use he has made of the pedals helps to bring it within the means of all ordinarily competent players. It will be remembered that the composer played this Offertoire at one of the Crystal Palace Concerts early this season, when it was very favourably received.

A Poet's Love. A Cycle of Songs. By R. Schumann (Op. 48). [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

SCHUMANN produced these now well-known songs in 1840. The poems were written by Heinrich Heine, and the whole cycle was dedicated to Wilhelmine Schroeder Devrient. The original words, together with a translation by Lady Macfarren, make this edition particularly valuable. There is no need to speak in detail of the sixteen songs which form the cycle, as they are fortunately familiar to students and admirers of Schumann throughout the world. The present beautiful and cheap edition will commend itself with special force to English musicians, both professional and amateur.

Wagner's "Parsifal": A Pilgrimage to Bayreuth, August, 1888. By N. Kilburn, M.B., Cantab.

[Bishop Auckland: Cummins.]

MR. KILBURN'S account of his visit to Bayreuth, and his impressions and comments upon the musical performance, may be read with interest, if not with pleasure, by all to whom the subject appeals with any degree of force. It was originally written for a local newspaper, but it is not unworthy of being rescued from a newspaper grave and issued in pamphlet form.

Romance in D, for Violin and Pianoforte. By Joseph L. Roedel. [Weekes and Co.]

THIS composition, dedicated to Mr. Carrodus, is somewhat conventional in style, and at the same time the theme is by no means new. It is, however, interesting as a means for the display of the "singing" powers of the performer, and of his capabilities of deep expression.

Original Compositions for the Organ. Nos. 104, 105, 106, and 107. Pieces by Albert Renaud. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

WE have here a series of compositions by a French composer, whose name is not yet very familiar to English organists. The first glance shows that they are neither so brilliant as those of Wély and Batiste nor as elaborate and difficult as those of Guilman. The first of the four numbers consists of a Scherzo Symphonique, a piece in D major, in ordinary minuet form, based on a lively theme, the rhythm of which is dominant throughout the principal section. It is perhaps too secular for a service Voluntary, but it would certainly please at a Recital. The next, a March Solennelle in E flat, is perhaps less pleasing, as the themes are wanting in melodic interest. No. 106 is called a Meditation, but it has nothing of the slow dream-like character generally associated with pieces bearing this title. On the contrary, it is piquant and fanciful, and if carefully registered could not fail to please. The last of the series is an Andante Religioso in D, 3-4 time, flowing and melodious, and if not particularly church-like, is at any rate not too secular. M. Renaud's efforts are noticeable for their welcome freedom from labour and dryness. The ideas are not always of first-rate value, but they are expressed in a thoroughly natural manner, which in itself is pleasing, and organists of ordinary capacity will find no serious difficulties with which to contend.

Overture to Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night." Composed by A. C. Mackenzie (Op. 40). Full Score. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THERE is no need again to discuss the character and merits of this work, as to which connoisseurs and the public formed an adequately favourable opinion on the occasion of its first production at the Richter Concerts. We will only say that leisurely perusal of the score confirms an impression that the "Twelfth Night" Overture is one of the happiest effusions inspired by the genius of Shakespeare. In studying for the work Dr. Mackenzie caught the very spirit of the comedy, and has musically "hit off" the characters so well that it was hardly needful to label the passages with their names and sentiments. The Overture is eminently thoughtful and happy, while to all who have a sense of mingled humour and tenderness in art, it must ever be a source of enjoyment. The publication of the score now places this truly Shakesperian Overture in the hands of all who care for it, and it is to be hoped, as a measure of justice to a gifted composer and to native music, that the result will be its performance wherever an adequate orchestra exists. As an example of orchestration this may be accepted as an improving study, especially on account of the fact that the composer never falls into the error of using more means than are necessary for effect. The score is as clear as daylight, and in these days of overdoing, quite refreshing to look upon.

Six Christmas Carols. Edited by the Rev. James Baden Powell. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE composers of these excellent Carols, Alfred King, J. E. Vernham, the Rev. J. B. Gray, and the Editor, have done their work well, and have produced a welcome addition to the stores of Christmas music. The three Carols by the Editor are especially good. There is all the quaintness of the older melodies with a specially attractive modern character in the themes, and they are so happily written that the ear must be dull indeed which would not be pleased by their vigorous simplicity.

The National Choir. Vol. I.

[Paisley: J. and R. Parlane.]

THIS is a collection of well-known songs, chiefly Scotch, interspersed with a few originals adapted for choirs, classes, and the home circle, with notes to the songs, historical, personal, and critical, and a Preface by Professor John Stuart Blackie particularly interesting to lovers of national melody. The various tunes are arranged in simple form by local professors, and the publication is one which deserves to be well supported by those for whom it is designed. It is well printed and remarkably cheap.

Mendelssohn. By J. Cuthbert Hadden.
[W. H. Allen and Co.]

THE author of this little book gives certain of the known facts of the life and labours of Mendelssohn in a pleasant and appreciative style, but he advances nothing that has not already been told by the previous authors who have made the great musician the theme of their writings. It is an art to condense without becoming obscure, and to present all that is needed for those who desire to know enough upon a subject which the general reader is expected to be acquainted with. In the face of the recent publication of Mendelssohn's letters to Moscheles, the book is "born out of due time." Those letters, however, though they let in new light upon the composer's character, do not change the facts of his career as known to the public and the world of art. These things, forming as they do the subject of Mr. Hadden's book, mark its chief value, and as they are told in an agreeable form, will doubtless secure as hearty a welcome for it as for its predecessor in the series, George Frederick Handel.

Twelve Original Pieces for the Organ or Harmonium.
Composed by Arthur Page, F.C.O. [Forsyth Brothers.]

ALL these pieces show that the composer has studied in a good school, and that he understands how to evidence the result of such study without the display of any undue pedantry. Were we called upon to name our favourites from the twelve Sketches here given, we should certainly select No. 2 ("Elegy"), No. 3 ("Barcarolle"), No. 6 ("Berceuse"), No. 9 ("Spring Song"), and No. 12 ("In Memoriam"), though all the rest have very considerable merit. We have said that Mr. Page evinces no "undue pedantry"; but although this is certainly true with respect to his music, we cannot acquit him of this fault on reading his eccentric time-signatures. Even admitting that all rhythms must be four, two, or three, surely there should be some sign to show whether each division of the bar moves in twos or threes. If it be said that this is sufficiently proved by the music itself, what occasion would there be for any time-signature at all?

Trois Morceaux de Salon. For Violin and Pianoforte (Op. 95). By Guido Papini. [E. Ascherberg and Co.]

UNDER this title Signor Papini has added three more compositions to the number already published for a like combination of instruments. The first, "Dolce far niente" (an Episode), does not belie its title, it being technically easy and practically in the first position, and may be considered as pleasure gained with very little trouble. The melody is pretty and flowing, and, if fingered as directed, will be found most effective.

The second, "Sérénade Italien," with its guitar-like accompaniment, tells a little story in itself, and will be found an excellent means for a display both of artistic feeling and execution.

The last of this collection of pieces, entitled "Lily of the Valley," in valse measure, is not the least attractive in any way, and will form an excellent contrast to the other two, if all three be played together in sequential order. The air, melodious in itself, is rendered more so by the excellent accompanying harmonies, and will make a very good solo for a not too ambitious violinist.

Six Two-part Songs. Composed by Ernest Clair Ford.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THERE is a most pleasant stream of agreeable melody in each one of these duets, with a spontaneity of treatment which is particularly refreshing. The parts are so set out as to keep up the interest announced in the first phrase of each song. There is no apparent straining after effect, yet all that is needed, according to the character of the several verses, is not missing when it is wanted. Such characteristic touches of colouring as the themes demand are artistically and even cleverly made. The nature of the treatment may be guessed by the titles of the songs, which are "A Summer Night," "Ever onward, time, thou speedest," "Twilight," "The sky is blushing deeply red," "The birds in council," and "The flowers I love the best." The words are good though not of equal excellence, but the music is of a commendable quality throughout.

Five Love Songs. By Arthur M. Layard.
[Charles Woolhouse.]

THE original words of these songs are by Heine, and are given, together with an English translation by an anonymous hand, which we must commend as being well fitted to the music, and elegant in itself. Mr. Layard writes very charmingly, and the only fault we can find with his songs is that they are too fragmentary. The themes and accompaniments are full of interest so far as they go, but that is not saying very much when the most extended of the five lyrics does not contain thirty bars. Diffuseness is a common fault with composers, but Mr. Layard has erred in an opposite direction.

Lord Ullin's Daughter. Trio for Soprano, Tenor, and Bass. The poetry by Thomas Campbell. Composed by John Armour-Haydn, LL.D. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

ALTHOUGH this is not a forcible setting of Campbell's well-known words, the music flows smoothly with the poetry, and those who are not distressed by such consecutive octaves and fifths as occur between treble and bass of the accompaniment—bar 6, page 5—may listen to it with pleasure. Perhaps, however, the composer may tell us that such effects are "Scottish."

FOREIGN NOTES.

AMONGST the papers of the late Princess Wittgenstein, the friend of Franz Liszt, a very interesting letter has just been discovered, and published in German papers, written by the great pianist-composer, whereof the following is a translation:—"The death of Overbeck"—the celebrated historical painter—"has made me think of my own. I desire, entreat, and emphatically insist upon, that my burial shall take place without ostentation; let it be as simple and as economical as possible. I protest against a funeral like that accorded to Rossini, and even against any gathering together of friends and acquaintances from afar, as in the case of Overbeck. No pomp, no music, no special mourning procession, no superfluous burning of candles nor any orations whatsoever. My body should be interred, not in a sacred edifice, but in some churchyard; and let them take heed that they do not thereafter remove my remains to any other resting place. I do not desire to have my grave anywhere else but in the churchyard in common use at the place where I may die; nor any other religious ceremony beyond a silent mass (no vocal Requiem) read at the parish church. The stone over my grave might bear the inscription: 'Et habitabunt recti cum vultu suo' (Psalm 139)." This remarkable letter is dated November 27, 1869.

During the just completed first performance at the Berlin Opera of the entire "Nibelungen" Tetralogy, "Die Walküre" was given in its pristine form—i.e., without any curtailment whatsoever, and created a profound impression. Alluding to this fact, the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung maintains that it is really the "cuts," more or less illogical as they needs must be, which are responsible for the reputed tedious movements in Wagner's music-dramas. "Produce Wagner's works as he wrote them and all fits together admirably, every bar will prove but the development of its preceding one, the attention of the listener becomes arrested without any special effort on his part, and all appearance of 'undue length' vanishes."

The Allgemeine Musikzeitung, referring to a new setting of Goethe's "Faust" by Herr Max Zeuger, recently produced at the Königsberg Stadt-Theater, enumerates the composers who have treated the subject for the purpose of stage representation—i.e., irrespective of overtures, symphonies, cantatas, &c., as follows: Spohr, Voss, Bishop, Beaucourt, Blum, Bertin, Meyer, Kugler, De Pallaert, Gordigiani, Werstowsky, Zaitz, Gounod, Boito, Zöllner, and Zeuger—sixteen in all. It must be added, however, that at least two of the above composers—viz., Spohr and Bishop—have set their music to librettos which have scarcely anything in common with Goethe's "world-drama" except the name. We refer our readers to the very interesting articles on this subject, published in this journal some years since, from the pen of Mr. F. Corder.

The programme of the first Concert of the present season at the Leipzig Gewandhaus, included some hitherto ance of this work in Bournemouth. The excellence of the band and their ready obedience to the Conductor's bâton materially contributed to the success of the performances. The soloists were Madame Wilson-Osman, Madame Patey, Mr. P. Newbury, and Mr. Brereton. The work was conducted with great ability by Signor G. D. la Camera.

BRADFORD, YORKSHIRE.—The organ at White Abbey Wesleyan Chapel has been rebuilt and enlarged, and was formally opened by Dr. C. J. Frost, of London, on the 1st ult., when he gave a Recital of organ music, consisting of pieces by Saint-Saëns, Smart, Gigout, Neukomm, Rossini, Petrali, Capocci, Morandi, and his own Variations upon Mendelssohn's "Hark, the herald angels sing." Two Anthems were sung by the choir, and several solos from oratorios by Miss E. Norton and Madame Armitage.

BROUGHTY FERRY.—On Monday, the 4th ult., Spohr's Last Judgment and Rossini's Stabat Mater were performed by the Choral Union, under the direction of Mr. George Neale. The choir and orchestra were most efficient, the latter being led by Mr. W. Cole, of the Glasgow Choral Union Concerts. The soloists were Miss Annie Swinfen, Miss Minnie Kirton, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Musgrove Tufinal. Miss Minnie Kirton's beautiful rendering of "Fac ut portem" and Mr. John Probert's singing of "Cujus Animam" were especially noticeable.

BURY ST. EDMUNDS.—The Choral Society gave its first Concert in the Athenæum Hall, on the 4th ult., when Costa's Eli was performed. The principal vocalists were Miss Jessie Griffin, Madame Florence Winn, Mr. Maudwyn Humphreys, Mr. Franklin Clive, and Mr. Frederick Pattle. The choruses were also well sung, reflecting credit upon the Conductor of the Society, Mr. T. B. Richardson. Dr. Henry led the band, and Mr. E. Iles, F.C.O., was an efficient accompanist.

CHELMSFORD.—The Musical Society scored a complete success by its admirable rendering of Handel's Judas Maccabeus on Tuesday, the 18th ult. Miss Jessie Griffin, Miss Coyte Turner, Mr. Gawthrop, and Mr. Broughton Black were the principals. The chorus singing was good, the volume of tone produced being very fine. Mr. F. R. Frye, Mus. Bac., F.C.O., conducted. The orchestra played the accompaniments effectively throughout. Mr. C. Byford was principal violinist. Miss B. Copland accompanied the recitatives on the pianoforte.

CHESTWOT.—The Choral Society gave two Concerts on the 11th and 12th ult. The first part of the programme of the Concert on the 11th consisted of Sir W. Sterndale Bennett's May Queen, the soli parts being admirably sustained by Miss Julia Jones, and Messrs. Lawrence Fryer and R. E. Miles (of St. Paul's Cathedral), the chorus parts being creditably rendered by the members of the Society, under the bâton of Mr. A. E. Kingsford. The Concert on the 12th ult. was a selection from the May Queen, and some songs by Miss Julia Jones and several local amateurs.

CHRISTCHURCH, N.Z.—On October 26 the music-loving public of Christchurch owed a debt of gratitude to the Musical Society for having made them acquainted with so beautiful a work as Gade's Psyche. The performance was successful, and speaks volumes in favour of the zealous work which must have been bestowed upon the rehearsals by the Conductor, Mr. F. M. Wallace. The chorus was numerous and effective. The voices were well balanced, and there was a careful attention to expression, which made the choruses the feature of the performance. The orchestra played throughout sympathetically and well. To Miss Spensley was assigned the very arduous part of Psyche, and she is to be congratulated on having succeeded so well. Mrs. Wilson, in the character of Proserpine, sang both carefully and effectively. Mr. Day deserves credit for the manner in which he sang the music allotted to him. Mr. Wallace conducted, and did so exceedingly well.

CLECKHEATON.—The Philharmonic Society (which is one of the oldest institutions in Spen Valley), numbering seventy performers, in the Victoria Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 18th ult., performed Haydn's Creation. The three divisions were taken by separate relays of amateur soloists, all connected with the Society, Mr. J. S. Wright, tenor, appearing in both the second and third parts. The other vocalists were Miss Wardle, Mrs. F. Cooper, Mr. Wm. Downend, Miss F. Wood, Messrs. W. and F. Naylor, and Fred. Wood. The choruses, particularly "Awake the harp," "Achieved is the glorious work," and "Sing the Lord," &c., were finely sung. The band did their work well; and Master C. Stott fittingly accompanied nearly all the recitatives. Mr. S. Midgley, of Bradford, conducted.

CROYDON.—The annual Concert at the Whitgift Grammar School, on the 12th ult., saw the production of a very pleasing operetta called Elinore, or the Border Bride, written by Mr. E. Oxenford, and composed by Mr. Edmund Rogers. Mr. Griffith, the Musicmaster and Conductor, had provided for a thorough interpretation of the work, with a complete band and chorus, and, be it said, to the credit of the school and to Croydon, all amateurs. Two of Mr. Griffith's old pupils—Mr. H. L. Turner and Mr. L. Smith—did excellent service at the pianoforte and organ respectively. The eleventh of the series of Classical Concerts under the direction of Mr. Pusey Keith was given on the 18th ult., when the Concert-giver was assisted by Herr Gompertz (violin), Herr Adolph Brouil (violinello), and Mr. Ellis Roberts (viola). The programme included Brahms's Quartet (Op. 25) and Rheinberger's Quartet (Op. 38), admirably rendered by the artists named. Herr Brouil delighted the audience with two well-contrasted violinello solos, and Mr. Pusey Keith's facility of execution and sympathetic expression were fully displayed in Liszt's "Liebestraum" and Godard's "En courant." An interesting feature in the Concert was the recitation, by Miss Edith Pusey, of two pieces for declamation, with pianoforte accompaniment, by Schumann, and Mr. Corder's Ballad "The Minstrel's Curse," produced last season at the Crystal Palace. To recite with facility to music is by no means an easy task, but Miss Pusey's capabilities as a musician stood her in good stead, and with the aid of a well-modulated voice and the sympathetic accompaniment of her brother she thoroughly interested her audience.

DISS.—The first Concert of the season took place on Thursday evening, the 13th ult., when A. R. Gaul's sacred Cantata The Holy City was performed. The soloists were Miss Pullen, Miss Gertrude Nunn, Mr. Holberry Hagyard, and Mr. Frank May. The band was led by Mr. C. Cook, and the harp played by Mrs. Wilkinson. The work was well rendered and much appreciated. Mr. Pullen conducted. The second part of the programme opened with the Overture to Samson, followed by sacred songs by the principals. The "Hallelujah Chorus" from The Messiah brought a very successful Concert to a close. Mr. Hemstock presided at the organ and pianoforte.

DROYLSDEN.—An Organ Recital was given on the 9th ult. by Mr. R. Thornhill in the Independent Chapel. The choir gave some choruses from The Messiah, and were assisted by Miss Marjorie Eaton and Mr. G. Robson, B.A., of Ashton-under-Lyne, as principals.

EALING.—The new Victoria Hall was opened here on Saturday, the 15th ult., by their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. The musical portion of the ceremony was conducted by Mr. Harold Savery, who, with an excellent band and chorus of 140, gave the "Hallelujah Chorus" (Handel) and "God save the Queen" (Costa's Arrangement), with excellent effect. Mr. Augarde led the band. Mr. Victor Gollmich presided at the organ.

GLOUCESTER.—The Choral Society gave its first Concert of the season on Tuesday, the 11th ult., at the Shire Hall, with a performance of Elijah. The band consisted of about forty members, and among the eighteen violinists were no fewer than eight ladies. The wind parts were supplied, as adequately as could be, by the organ, at which Mr. Capener presided. The chief singers were Miss Ellicott, Miss Lucy Franklin Higgs, and Mr. Greenwood of the Cathedral Choir. The music of the Prophet was sung by Mr. W. H. Brereton. The chorus was effective throughout. The Conductor was Mr. C. Lee Williams, and all concerned may be congratulated on a musical and financial success.

GRAVESEND.—On Friday evening, the 7th ult., Mr. G. R. Ceiley gave a Recital on the organ, in the Parish Church, in aid of the choir and organ fund. His programme was selected from the works of Mendelssohn, Smart, Bennett, Batiste, Spark, and Bunnett. Some vocal pieces were contributed by Miss E. Rose and Mr. T. G. Wakeling.

GREAT BERKHAMPTON.—The Church Choral Society gave a performance of Hiller's Song of Victory on November 30, in the Parish Church. THE MONTHS

TWELVE VOCAL DUETS FOR SCHOOL USE

Words by EDWARD OXFORD

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL

(Composer of the "Holy City," "Ruth," &c.)

"There are in this series of duets the sweetest things of the kind we have ever met with. No. 4, 'April,' and No. 5, 'May,' are our special favourites, the one being delightfully playful, the other tenderly melodious. Things to be treasured in households where sisters or friends delight in joining voices. The pianoforte accompaniments are well written, and such as an ordinary pianist may successfully undertake."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"Altogether this composition of the Leeds borough organist reflects the greatest credit on his skill as a musician, and I doubt not, as it is tolerably easy of execution, that it will become extremely popular."—Musical Standard.

"The work is simple in so far as its execution lies within the power of those of modest vocal accomplishment; while at the same time it has a refinement and a dignity which can only be the result of careful elaboration, exhibiting as it does great artistic charm and sound musical scholarship."—Scotsman.

THE PSALMS

BY THE

REV. DR. TROUTBECK.

CLOTH, ONE SHILLING.

The principles on which the pointing has been done are mainly those of the Cathedral Psalter, of which Dr. Troutbeck was Co-Editor, a Psalter which has now successfully endured the test of long experience. The book is not, of course, divided into daily portions like the Prayer Book Psalter, as it is intended for the use of those Christian bodies in which the Psalms are not sung throughout a monthly course, but it can easily be so divided by those who use it.

BY

HAYDN GROVER

OF THE TEMPLE CHOIR, LONDON.

Sung in Westminster Abbey; the Temple Church; St. Stephen's, Westbourne Park; Christ Church, Down Street, Piccadilly, W.; also in several Provincial Cathedrals and Collegiate Choirs.

The Musical Review, May 30, 1885, says: "Mr. Haydn Grover has written a good Service, and has succeeded in his evident intention to give due effect to the varying expression of the words. The Gloria to the Magnificat is in unison with free organ accompaniment, the melody being bold and coming in with fine effect after the 'verse' preceding. Mr. Grover has evidently profited by the traditions of the Temple Church, and has given us an Evening Service of sterling merit."

THE CHRISTIAN PILGRIM

COMPOSED BY

J. E. NEWELL.

PREFACE.

The growing custom of performing complete works in places of public worship has led the composer of "The Christian Pilgrim" to hope that his Cantata may be found acceptable in choirs, where the larger and more difficult works of the great masters are often inadmissible; it contains twenty-four numbers of solo and concerted pieces, and can be effectively rendered, with either Pianoforte or Organ accompaniment.

The words are selected passages of Holy Writ and well-known hymns, and are intended to portray the life of the Christian Pilgrim through the many trials and temptations that beset him on his Heavenly way, to the final triumph of eternal life.

1. Prelude.
 2. Pilgrims here and strangers we (Chorus & Soprano Solo).
 3. Grant that in the stranger's land (Chorale).

 6. Love not the world (Quartet).

"'Ruth' has been set to music by several composers; none, however, has become so worthily popular as the Cantata under notice. . . . It contains some charming music, and is highly characteristic of the story it so vividly illustrates."—South Wilts Express.

"Full of flowing melody."—Salisbury Times.

SIX PIECES FOR VIOLIN

COMPOSED BY

A. C. MACKENZIE.

(Op. 37.)

Full Score, 5s.; Orchestral Parts, 3s. 6d.;

Also, as originally written for Violin Solo with Pianoforte
Accompaniment, 1s. 6d.

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.

As an exceptional case, this movement absolutely gains by the change to which it has been subjected, the impassioned religious melody acquiring force by being played in chorus, and added beauty by a rich accompaniment of strings, horns, and wood-wind. The audience at once pronounced the piece a success, and the composer bowed his thanks for sustained applause from his place in the gallery.

STANDARD.

Dr. Mackenzie's "Benedictus" was originally written for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment. Since then the author has appreciated the capabilities of the music in an orchestral sense, and after several attempts—this composer, like Mendelssohn, never being satisfied at the offset—has written his score for a small orchestra. . . . So charming did this piece prove that the applause was unanimous, and was maintained until the composer had appeared at the end gallery and bowed his acknowledgment.

DAILY NEWS.

The remaining novelty was a brief but charming "Benedictus," originally written by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, as one of a set of violin pieces which Lady Hallé last summer introduced to London. The pianoforte accompaniment has, however, now been scored for wind orchestra by the composer, and the solo is given to all the violins of the orchestra.

MORNING POST.

There are beautiful harmonies accompanying the phases of melody, and the whole piece, which is replete with dignity and distinguished by originality, forms a most grateful addition to orchestral répertoires.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The clever musician has since scored it for a small orchestra, assigning the violin solo to the whole of the violins, and providing work for the other strings, flutes, clarinets, bassoons, and horns, in which form it is likely to obtain as much popularity on the platform as the first setting in the salon. It is a beautiful, quietly flowing melody, with such an elegant accompaniment as only a composer of genuine taste and sympathetic nature, having a perfect knowledge of the means of the instruments he introduces, could place upon paper.

THE OBSERVER.

The two leading themes are in themselves beautiful, and their scenic beauty is enhanced by exquisite orchestration, in which the wind instruments above-named, in conjunction with the violas, violoncellos, and double-basses, are happily employed. . . . This "Benedictus" is likely to become popular throughout the musical world.

THE GLOBE.

Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's new "Benedictus" for violins and orchestra (first public performance) is short and comparatively simple, but will add to his fame. . . . The "Benedictus" is a polished gem.

SUNDAY TIMES.

Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's new "Benedictus for Orchestra," a transcription of one of his "Six Pieces for Violin and Piano," Op. 37, is a gem of melody encased in a beautiful instrumental setting.

EXTRACTS FROM PREFACE.

My guiding principle has been to place before the reader the facts collected by me as well as the conclusions at which I arrived. This will enable him to see the subject in all its bearings, with all its pros and cons, and to draw his own conclusions, should mine not obtain his approval.

Whatever the defects of the present volumes may be—and, no doubt, they are both great and many—I have laboured to the full extent of my humble abilities to group and present my material perspicuously, and to avoid diffuseness and rhapsody, those besetting sins of writers on music.

My researches had for their object the whole life of Chopin and his historical, political, artistical, social, and personal surroundings, but they were chiefly directed to the least known and most interesting period of his career—his life in France, and his visits to Germany and Great Britain. My chief sources of information are divisible into two classes—newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, correspondences, and books; and conversations I held with, and letters I received from, Chopin's pupils, friends, and acquaintances.

The Chopin letters will, no doubt, be regarded as a special feature of the present biography. They may, I think, be called numerous, if we consider the master's dislike to letter-writing. Ferdinand Hiller—whose almost unique collection of letters addressed to him by his famous friends in art and literature is now, and will be for years to come, under lock and key among the municipal archives at Cologne—allowed me to copy two letters by Chopin, one of them written conjointly with Liszt. Franchomme, too, granted me the privilege of copying his friend's epistolary communications. Besides a number of letters that have here and there been published, I include, further, a translation of Chopin's letters to Fontana, which in Karasowski's book (i.e., the Polish edition) lose much of their value, owing to his inability to assign approximately correct dates to them.

Prefixed to the first volume of the present biography the reader will find one of the portraits by Kwiatkowski, an etching after a charming pencil drawing in my possession, the reproduction of which the artist has kindly permitted. M. Kwiatkowski has portrayed Chopin frequently, and in many ways and under various circumstances, alive and dead. Messrs. Novello, Ewer & Co. have in their possession a clever water-colour drawing by Kwiatkowski of Chopin on his death-bed. A more elaborate picture by the same artist represents Chopin on his death-bed surrounded by his sister, the Princess Marceline Czartoryska, Grzymala, the Abbé Jelowicki, and the portrayer. On page 321 of this volume will be found M. Charles Gavard's opinion of two portrayals of Chopin, respectively by Clésinger and Kwiatkowski. In conclusion, I recall to the reader's attention what has been said of the master's appearance and its pictorial and literary reproductions on p. 63 of Vol. I. and pp. 10—11 of Vol. II.

REV. W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON, M.A.

SET TO MUSIC BY

J. STAINER.

This Work is an attempt to supply the want long felt of an easy and short form of Passion Music suitable for use in ordinary parish churches. It is composed for two solo voices, a Tenor and a Bass, and for the church choir. At intervals hymns occur, in which the whole congregation can join. The performance will probably not extend over forty minutes in duration, thus giving an opportunity for a suitable "address" if thought advisable. No orchestra is required, the accompaniments being specially adapted for the organ only; much of the expense usually attending Passion Services will therefore be avoided. The book of the words, for distribution among the congregation, will contain the music of the Hymns; by this means it is hoped that the congregation will be induced to take part heartily in the service.

FEBRUARY 1, 1889.

NIECKS'S "CHOPIN."*

THIS new and valuable biography of Chopin has been compiled with characteristic Teutonic patience and exhaustiveness. The author tells us that the work of gathering together his materials, sifting them, and placing them in order, occupied all the available hours of ten years. We can well believe it, but not a moment of that time has been wasted. The result is a two-fold satisfaction. In the first place, we now know all there is to know about the Polish musician, and next, the author has done that which loudly called for doing. We have no desire to disparage unduly other works on the same subject. Liszt's rhapsodical production is of value to a certain extent, beyond the revelation it makes of the writer's own individuality, and Karasowski's "Life," with all its faults and shortcomings, will ever be entitled to a place in the bibliography of its theme. But both Liszt and Karasowski lived too near their hero, and lacked the comprehensiveness of view which takes in all, and sees things in their true proportion. Mr. Niecks has had the advantage of writing from a better standpoint, while not so distant as that he was unable to search for facts in a clear and favourable light. The author gives us particulars of the sources whence his information has been gathered. These are not limited to books, pamphlets, and newspapers, but extend to Chopin's pupils, friends, and acquaintances, many of whom are mentioned by name. Mr. Niecks consulted eight pupils, including Brinley Richards and Lindsay Sloper, while of the master's friends he obtained information from fifteen—Liszt, Hiller, Heller, Hallé, Jenny Lind, and others of equal authority. We thus have Chopin as he exists in written history and as his acquaintances remember him—a happy combination not always possible when a biography has to be written. There remains to state, with regard to the initial advantages of the work, that Mr. Niecks obviously entered upon his task in an impartial spirit. He does not shrink from giving his opinion, or from expressing it with emphasis; but we cannot fail to see that the conclusions stated are the result of a judicial inquiry, and transparently honest in their origin and object. We have here, in fact, a standard work entitled to the respect which an authority commands. Saying this, we do not pledge ourselves to every statement of fact and opinion. Our meaning simply is that the character of the biography entitles it to the highest consideration.

For the purpose of the present article, we shall confine our attention to a few salient points, and, in the first place, passing over a readable introductory chapter on "Poland and the Poles," also that on Chopin's ancestry, birth, and childhood, pause at our author's remarks upon the social, literary, and artistic influences which worked upon the future composer during his most impressionable years. Naturally sensitive, Chopin must have been affected in an unusual degree by the conditions of his youth, and Mr. Niecks would, in our opinion, have done better had he devoted more space to this very important part of his subject. As it is, however, we get glimpses of the sympathies and tendencies of Polish society during the early decades of the century. We find the vivacious and imaginative Sarmatian nature developing, under the stimulus of quickening life, in the direction of romanticism—elegant, refined, aristocratic, but none the less vigorous, while all the more fascinating to a constitution like that of Chopin. It was this change that largely moulded the composer into the likeness by which we recognise him, and made him, cradled in the arms of a literary and artistic nationalism, a perfect embodiment of his country's genius and sympathies.

What more natural, under the circumstances just indicated, than that Chopin's inborn musical feeling should incline him towards one particular form of national life. Patriotism and romance alike found satisfaction in his country's music, which he drank at its very source. "Chopin," writes Mr. Niecks, "was fond of listening to the singing and fiddling of the country people. . . His wonder always was who could have composed the quaint and beautiful strains of those mazurkas, polonaises, and krakowiaks, and who had taught these simple men and women to play and sing so truly in tune." Our author goes on to show that circumstances were very favourable to the process then moulding Chopin's artistic nature. "Art-music had not yet corrupted folk-music; indeed, it could hardly be said that civilisation had affected the lower strata of society at all. . . But the peasants, although steeped in superstition and ignorance, and too much addicted to brandy-drinking with its consequences—quarrelsomeness and revengefulness—had not altogether lost the happier features of their original character—hospitality, patriotism, good-naturedness, and, above all, cheerfulness and love of song and dance. It has been said that a Slavonic peasant can be enticed by his national songs from one end of the world to the other." It is not too much to add that Chopin was, in all musical respects, the Polish peasant refined and sublimated to the last degree. No man was ever more strictly a representative of his own musical people, and it is interesting to see him at an early age going to the fountain head of national art for his inspiration.

Mr. Niecks has something to say on the question of Chopin's health when a young man. Hitherto, we have had to choose between Liszt, with his portrait of the master as a fragile and delicate being, and Karasowski, who represents him as, if not robust, fairly strong and well. Mr. Niecks inclines, in colloquial phrase, to "split the difference." He says: "The delicate build of Chopin's body, his early death, preceded by many years of ill-health, and the character of his music, have led people into the belief that he was always sickly in body, and for the most part, also, melancholy in disposition. But as the poverty and melancholy, so also disappears on closer investigation the sickliness of the child and youth. To jump, however, from this to the other extreme, and assert that he enjoyed vigorous health, would be as great a mistake." Our author plainly inclines rather to the weakness than the strength, and gives several reasons in support of the first theory. Some of these amount to very little. A lad is not necessarily delicate because affectionate female relatives wrap him up well, or because he likes to stretch out on the grass under trees and dream away the shining hours, or because he does not care for tobacco. Nor does the existence of pulmonary and heart disease in the family go far as direct evidence. On the other hand, Mr. Niecks is able to quote Stephen Heller, who saw Chopin at Warsaw, in 1830, and described him as "in delicate health, thin, and with sunken cheeks, and that the people of Warsaw said that he could not live long, but would, like so many geniuses, die young." This is all the new evidence brought to bear upon a subject which Chopin's biographer thus sums up: "Although Chopin, in his youth, was at no time troubled with any serious illness, he enjoyed but fragile health, and if his frame did not already contain the seeds of the disease to which he later fell a prey, it was a favourable soil for their reception." "Fragile" is, perhaps, too emphatic a word, but, taking it in a modified sense, we are disposed to accept Mr. Niecks's conclusions as correct.

From Chopin as a youth to Chopin as a lover is not only an easy but a graceful transition, and Mr. Niecks has given proper attention to his hero under the tender passion. A biographer, especially when he writes of an artist, cannot well do otherwise; but in this case the full significance of the situation is recognised. Here is a passage in proof: "Who could recount all the happy and hapless loves that have made poets? Countless is the number of those recorded in histories, biographies, and anecdotes; greater still the number of those buried in literature and art, the graves whence they rise again as flowers, matchless in beauty, unfading, and of sweetest perfume. Love is, indeed, the sun that by its warmth unfolds the multitudinous possibilities that lie hidden, often unsuspected, in the depths of the human soul." This language may be florid, but the ideas it expresses are philosophical, and we are glad to find Mr. Niecks recognising and acting upon them. The love of Chopin's youth, as everybody knows, was a pupil at the Warsaw Conservatorium, by name Constantia Gladkowska, whom, it appears, the composer first met in April, 1829. His passion for this lady was strong. "This is proved," writes our author, "by his frequent allusions to her whom he never names, and by those words of restless yearning and heart-rending despair that cannot be read without a pitiful sympathy." How his passion kept him near its object in Warsaw, to the derangement of his artistic plans, is matter of common knowledge, as is Chopin's departure at last, and Constantia's marriage, three years later, to another man. Mr. Niecks calls it a "sad fact" that "inconstant Constantia Gladkowska married a merchant of the name of Joseph Grabowski, at Warsaw," and goes on to say: "As the circumstances of the case and the motives of the parties are unknown to me, and as a biographer ought not to take the same liberties as a novelist, I shall neither expatiate on the fickleness and mercenariness of woman nor attempt to describe the feelings of our unfortunate hero robbed of his ideal, but leave the reader to make his own reflections and draw his own moral." We cannot, let us say in passing, entirely subscribe to the view of a biographer's duties contained in the foregoing sentence. He who simply records the facts of a career can scarcely be called a biographer at all, since he neglects the far higher duty, discharged by combined reason and imagination, of exposing the inner life of his subject. The biographer needs imagination almost as much as the novelist, not, it is true, to invent characters and circumstances, but, under the guidance of reflection, to penetrate below the surface and reveal hidden things. That which Washington Irving called the "divine attribute" is sometimes, in its exercise, akin to inspiration. But to return. It is highly probable that Constantia had a much more practical nature than her lover. The merchant was, so to speak, "in the hand," Chopin was very much "in the bush," and the worldly-wise maiden drew the proverbial conclusion. It may be, on the other hand, that the musician himself was not an ideal lover. Mr. Niecks tells us that "the tender passion was necessary to his existence," but he transferred his affections from one fair object to another with singular ease. According to George Sand, he would have five or six affections in one evening, then go away and forget them all. "In short," as Mr. Niecks puts it, "Chopin was of a very impressionable nature; beauty and grace, nay, even a mere smile, kindled his enthusiasm at first sight, and an awkward word or equivocal glance was enough to disconcert him. But although he was not at all exclusive in his own affections, he was so in a high degree with regard to those which he demanded from others." Mr. Niecks here quotes George Sand's story of Chopin and a young lady whom he thought of asking in marriage, but whom he discarded and forgot, simply because she invited another male visitor to take a seat before extending a like hospitality to himself. Constantia Gladkowska may have known more of Chopin than is suspected, and we are not going to blame her for accepting the Warsaw merchant, honest and faithful man as we hope he was.

Mr. Niecks examines carefully the various accounts of Chopin's subsequent love affair with Maria Wodzinski, whom the composer seems to have regarded quite au sérieux. He accepts the version of Count Wodzinski in his "Les Trois Romans de Frédéric Chopin," from which it appears that Chopin's love lasted a year, and was strong enough to bring about a proposal, rejected by the girl on account of the opposition of her family. Chopin's third love romance was, of course, the affair with George Sand (Madame Dudevant). Into that we may not enter here for want of space, and must refer the curious to Mr. Niecks himself, who tells the story in much detail, and arrives at a conclusion extremely unfavourable to the lady. We cannot see exactly eye to eye with Mr. Niecks in this matter. George Sand was neither an angel of purity nor a model of veracity, but there is no reason to believe that she acted as she did without some provocation on Chopin's part—a provocation to be easily conceived by those who have studied the whole question with some experience of life and character. On the whole, Chopin, in his relations with women, does not come out well.

Our author has a scarcely nobler theme when he goes on to discuss Chopin's social position, and his weak, effeminate predilection for a butterfly life in the gilded salons of aristocracy. We are glad to find Mr. Niecks expressing an opinion that the atmosphere of such places is not favourable to an artist. "Without going so far as to say, with a great contemporary of Chopin, Stephen Heller, that the higher you go in society, the greater is the ignorance you find, I think that little, if any, good for either heart or mind can come from intercourse with that section of people which proudly styles itself 'society' (le monde). Many individuals that belong to it possess, no doubt, true nobility, wisdom, and learning, nay, even the majority may possess one, or the other, or all of them in some degree, but these qualities are so out of keeping with the prevailing frivolity that few have the moral courage to show their better nature." Well and bravely said. We get also an opinion from Mr. Niecks, based on the observation of Liszt and Heller, that Chopin was appreciated among the crème de la crème simply for his virtuosity, his elegance, and his delicacy. These qualities le monde could perceive and value, but his higher attributes were beyond them. In the degree of the master's preference for Society (with a capital "S") was, naturally, his distaste for the company of fellow artists. Mr. Niecks is very plain on this point. "Chopin's predilection for the fashionable salon society led him to neglect the society of artists. That he carried this odii profanum vulgus, et arceo too far, cannot for a moment be doubted. For many of those who sought to have intercourse with him were men of no less nobility of sentiment and striving than himself. Chopin offended even Ary Scheffer, the great painter, who admired and loved him, by promising to spend an evening with him, and again and again disappointing him.

Musicians, with a few exceptions, Chopin seems always to have been careful to keep at a distance, at least after the first years of his arrival in Paris. This is regrettable, especially in the case of the young men who looked up to him with veneration and enthusiasm, and whose feelings were cruelly hurt by the polite but unsympathetic reception he gave them." Instances are not wanting, among them that of Schulhoff, who first met Chopin at a party. On his introducer begging Chopin to allow the young Bohemian to play something to him, "the renowned master, who was much bothered by dilletante tormentors, signified, somewhat displeased, his consent by a slight nod of the head. Schulhoff seated himself at the pianoforte, while Chopin, with his back turned to him, was leaning against it." Mr. Niecks very properly adds: "The ungracious manner in which he granted the young musician permission to play to him, and especially his turning his back to Schulhoff when the latter began to play, are not excused by the fact that he was often bothered by dilletante tormentors." Excuses have been made for the Polish master's indifferent behaviour to his own class, on the ground of his physical condition, but Mr. Niecks will have none of them. He writes: "Would it not have been possible to live in retirement without drawing upon himself the accusation of supercilious hauteur? Moreover, as Chopin was strong enough to frequent fashionable salons, he cannot have been altogether unable to hold intercourse with his brother artists." Our author sums up thus: "Fastidious by nature and education, he became more so, partly in consequence of his growing physical weakness, and still more through the influence of the society with which, in the exercise of his profession and otherwise, he was in constant contact. His pupils, and many of his other admirers, mostly of the female sex and the aristocratic class, accustomed him to adulation and adoration to such an extent as to make these to be regarded by him as necessities of life."

Mr. Niecks brings against Chopin a much more serious charge than weakness for aristocratic society. He makes us doubt whether the master had either a heart or sincerity. Chopin is described as "more loved than loving." "But he knew how to conceal his deficiencies in this respect under the blandness of his manners and the coaxing affectionateness of his language. There is something really tragic, and comic too, in the fact that every friend of Chopin thought that he had more of the composer's love and confidence than any other friend. . . . Of Chopin's procedures in friendship much may be learned from his letters, in them is to be seen something of his insinuating cajoling ways, of his endeavours to make the person addressed believe himself a privileged favourite, and of his habit of speaking not only ungenerously and unlovingly, but even unjustly of other persons with whom he was apparently on cordial terms. In fact, it is only too clear that Chopin spoke differently before the faces and behind the backs of people. You remember how, in his letters to Fontana, he abuses Camille Pleyel in a manner irreconcilable with genuine love and esteem. . . . And again, how atrociously he reviles, in the same letters, the banker Leo, who lends him money, often takes charge of his manuscripts, procures payment for them, and in whose house he has been for years a frequent visitor. . . . Taking a general view of the letters written by him during the last twelve years of his life, one is struck by the absence of generous judgments, and the extreme rareness of sympathetic sentiments concerning third persons."

Upon a related subject—namely, the quarrel which separated Chopin and Liszt—Mr. Niecks makes some interesting statements. It would appear that the men themselves rather evaded explanations. Once, when interrogated on the matter, Chopin replied: "We are friends; we were comrades." Answering a similar question, Liszt said: "Our lady-loves had quarrelled, and, as good cavaliers, we were in duty bound to side with them." Now let us hear our author: "When the comradeship came to an end I do not know, but I think I do know how it came to an end. . . . Franchomme explained the mystery to me, and his explanation was confirmed by what I learned from Madame Rubio. The circumstances are of too delicate a nature to be set forth in detail. But the long and short of the affair is that Liszt, accompanied by another person, invaded Chopin's lodgings during his absence, and made himself quite at home there. The discovery of traces of the use to which his rooms had been put justly enraged Chopin. One day, I do not know how long after the occurrence, Liszt asked Madame Rubio to tell her master that he hoped the past would be forgotten and the young man's trick wiped out. Chopin then said that he could not forget, and was much better as he was, and, further, that Liszt was not open enough, having always secrets and intrigues, and had written in some newspapers notices unfavourable to him." It is not unlikely that Liszt's great success as a concert-pianist tended to keep the two men apart. To this an expression—"He will give me a little kingdom in his empire"—once made use of by Chopin, certainly points.

We have reached the limit of our space, but a hundred subjects in these most interesting volumes have as great a right to notice as those touched upon above. The index bristles with them, as, for example, "The chief influences that helped to form his (Chopin's) style of composition"; "Chopin's aims as an artist"; "What influences had Liszt on Chopin's development?" "Chopin as a public performer"; "His musical sympathies and antipathies"; "Polish national music and its influence on Chopin." All these matters are of interest, and upon all Mr. Niecks has something to say that is worthy of note and study. Our readers will have observed strong indications of the author's impartiality and zeal for truth. These qualities, in combination with industrious and patient research, have given the new "Life of Chopin" the salt which will preserve it for many years to come, sustaining it in its proper place as a standard authority upon the subject of which it treats.

THE GREAT MUSICAL REFORMERS.

By W. S. ROCKSTRO.

II.—GUIDO D'AREZZO.

HUCBALD's bold attempt to reform the vague system of musical notation peculiar to the ninth and tenth centuries was forgotten within a very few years after his death, and nearly a century elapsed before any farther endeavour to remedy its self-evident defects was made by his learned successors, who seem, for the most part, to have been quite content to leave the subject in the condition in which they found it.

The next courageous reformer was Guido D'Arezzo—the Guido Aretinus of the monkish historians—of whose so-called inventions so many fabulous stories have been told that it is now no easy matter to separate the truth from fiction. That he really did propose some very valuable improvements upon the system he found in general use is certain; and, for these, his name became justly celebrated in every country in Europe. But the misfortune was, that the fame of his discoveries led his admiring successors to credit him, not only with inventions of later date, but also with many others which can be proved to have been in general use long before he came into existence.

That Guido, or Guittone—as the Italians love to call him—was a native of Arezzo, in Tuscany, there can be no reasonable doubt; and this circumstance has tempted more than one writer of eminence to confuse his identity with that of another Guittone, also of Arezzo, a famous poet, and one of the most celebrated reformers of the Italian language.* Mersenne and Vossius, on the other hand, identified him with Guitmond of Evreux, a noted ecclesiastic of the Monastery of St. Lufred, who was afterwards consecrated Bishop of Aversa, and wrote with much effect against the heresies of his day. Furthermore, on the authority of a MS. copy of the "Micrologus" in the collection of the Queen of Sweden, headed Tractatus Guidonis Augiensis, D. Paolo Serra imagined that the learned monk came from Auge, in Normandy. These mistakes seem almost too foolish to call for serious refutation, yet they have served materially to increase the confusion in which the subject was at one time involved.

It seems impossible, now, to ascertain the exact, or even the approximate date of Guido's birth; which, however, must necessarily have occurred during the second half of the tenth century, and probably some considerable time before its conclusion, since he had attained a high reputation for his musical learning before the time of Pope Benedict VIII., who filled the Chair of St. Peter between the years 1012 and 1024. The nearest approach to certainty that can be attained on this point rests upon the authority of a memorandum, found upon the back of the oldest known MS. copy of the "Micrologus," to the effect that Guido completed this work in the thirty-fourth year of his age. If, as is generally believed, the "Micrologus" was written in or about the year 1024, this would place his birth in the year 990—sixty years after the death of Hucbald. But we have no proof, either of the date, or the authorship, of the annotation in question. We do know, however, that Pope Benedict VIII., hearing that a learned monk of the Benedictine Monastery at Arezzo had invented a new method of singing, invited him to Rome—according to Baronius, in 1022—and, during the short time that he remained there, treated him with marked honour and deference. Guido, however, was of so retiring a disposition, that he took the earliest possible opportunity of returning to the solitude of his beloved monastery; and it was not until he had received reiterated invitations from the succeeding Pope, John XIX., whose Pontificate extended from 1024 to 1033, that he consented to visit the Eternal City a second time. This second visit was, indeed, a memorable one. It marks a momentous epoch, not only in the personal history of Guido himself, but in the annals of the art he practised. He took with him a copy of his then newly-completed, and now most celebrated "Antiphonarium," constructed upon the principle of the system he had invented; and the merits of the work made so deep an impression upon the Pontiff's mind that, at his first interview with its author, he refused to let him leave his presence until he had himself so far mastered the difficulties of the method as to be able to sing an antiphon in accordance with its rules. So pleased was he with the result thus attained, that he at once proposed to retain the learned monk in his own service. But Guido's retiring habits were altogether unfitted for continual residence amongst the splendours of the Papal Court, and, faute de mieux, he urged his delicate health as an excuse for quitting

Rome as quickly as possible. The Pope acceded to his demand, upon condition that he should return during the following winter. He accepted the compromise, but, whether from failing strength, or from some other cause, he appears never to have complied with its provisions. He alludes to these circumstances in an epistle of great interest—and fortunately preserved to us—addressed to a certain Brother Michael, of the Benedictine Monastery at Pomposo, in the Duchy of Ferrara. On leaving Rome, he visited this monastery; and, at the invitation of the Abbot, remained there for some considerable time, employing his leisure in instructing the monks in his new system, and in teaching the children of the choir to sing by aid of its rules. Here too, in all probability, he found time to write some of his most important works; among them the "Micrologus," with its formal dedication to Teobaldo, Bishop of Arezzo. The date of his return to Arezzo is uncertain, nor is it possible to ascertain how long he remained there before he was elected Abbot of the Monastery of Santa Croce, at Avellano, a religious house of some importance, in the immediate neighbourhood. In the exercise of this high office he spent the remainder of his life, seeking relief from the burthen of his ecclesiastical duties—as St. Gregory had done before him—in the exercise of the art for which he had so conscientiously and successfully laboured. Of the work accomplished during the closing years of his life no record remains, but there is strong reason for believing that he died at the Monastery of Santa Croce about the year 1050.

These few details are all that we have been able to gather, concerning the personal history of Guido d'Arezzo; and they amply suffice for our present purpose—the consideration of his work as a Reformer; first, of the constitution of the scale; secondly, of the rude system of part-writing which, at that period, did duty for counterpoint, as yet not invented; and thirdly, of the then prevailing system of notation which, as we have already said, remained very much in the condition in which it had been found by Hucbaldus, whose proposed reformation exercised no appreciable influence upon its subsequent progress.

And here we are met by a diversity of opinions so glaring that we must ask the reader to weigh carefully the evidence we have to lay before him, and the arguments we venture to deduce from it, in order that he may form his own conclusions as to the reasonableness—or the reverse—of the conclusions at which, after much laborious study, and long and careful consideration, we have ourselves arrived.

F. Kircher*—who, like the famous green caterpillar in the "Parables from Nature," seems to have "believed everything he was told"—would have his readers believe that Guido d'Arezzo invented, not only the gamut, the hexachords with their several mutations, the syllables of solmisation, the harmonic hand, diaphonia or discant, and the monochord, but also counterpoint, the modern stave of five lines, and the polypectrum, or spinet!

By a not unnatural reaction, more than one later critic has denied that he ever invented anything at all; referring all his remarks to a careful resumé of the various methods in general use at the time he wrote.

It must be confessed that the vagueness of his language sometimes—though by no means everywhere—tends to countenance this extreme view. His constitutional humility naturally forbade him to write in the first person singular; but he interchanges the first and third persons plural with bewildering perplexity, using indiscriminately such expressions as nos ponimus, illi dicunt, nostris notis, and other like forms, which alternate with each other without apparent reason through nearly all his works.

These works are—

1. The "Antiphonarium,"* written before Guido's second visit to Rome, and shown to Pope John XIX., as nearly as can be ascertained, in the year 1024.

2. "Epistola Guidonis ad Michaellem Monachum," the letter written by Guido, during his second visit to Rome; to his friend, Brother Michael, at the Monastery of Pomposo.

3. The "Micrologus," supposed to have been written at the Monastery of Pomposo immediately after Guido's second visit to Rome, that is to say, about the year 1024.

4. "De artificio novi Cantus."†

5. "De divisione Monochordi, secundum Boëtium."‡

6. "Quid est Musica."§

7. "Guidonis Aretini Dialogus." "Quid est Musica."||

The authenticity of the following is less clearly proved—

The "Antiphonarium," the "Micrologus," and the "Epistle to Brother Michael," chiefly known through early MS. copies in the Vatican and Paris Libraries, and in that of the British Museum, were first printed by Gerbert von Hornau, Abbot of St. Blaise, in 1784;¶ and the "Micrologus" was reprinted by Hermesdorff, at Treves, in 1876, with a German translation placed side by side with the Latin text. Early MSS. of Nos. 4 and 5 are preserved in the Medicean Library at Florence; and of Nos. 6, 7, and 8, in the Paris Library. Nos. 9 and 10 are in the British Museum, bound up in a small volume, with an imperfect copy of the "Micrologus" (Chapters i. to xv. only).

The "Micrologus" is generally quoted as the chief authority for most of Guido's inventions, but so few of them are mentioned in it, that it is difficult to avoid the conviction that some of the historians who have written most positively upon the subject never even so much as saw the work at all.

With regard to the addition, at the bottom of the scale, of the note Gamma, from which the gamut derives its name, he distinctly says "In primis ponitur Γ Græcum à modernis adjectum." And the addition was not really a modern one even in his day, for Aristides Quintilianus had represented the note by the recumbent Omega (Ω) as early as A.D. 110, and St. Odo had represented it in the tenth century by the Γ itself, exactly as Guido did.††

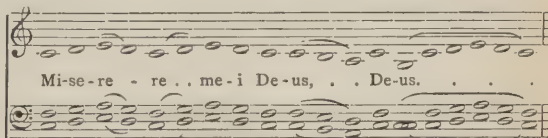

But this chronological blunder in no wise affects the reformation of the scale by means of the hexachords; neither does it concern the principle of solmisation, which depends upon the recognition of the hexachords so closely that it is difficult to believe that the two methods were invented by two different reformers. Guido does not mention the hexachords by name in any of his works, but in the "Epistle to Brother Michael" he proposes the employment of the initial syllables of the hymn, Ut queant laxis, as a useful form of memoria technica, in terms so distinct that we are almost compelled to believe that he himself was the originator of the invention. If this really was the case he must have known of the hexachords, for without them the method of solmisation, based upon the syllables Ut, re, mi, fa, sol, la, could never have come into existence; and, if he knew of them, the inference that he invented them is inevitable, for no other musician of the age has had a word to say upon the subject.

We believe, then, that we are indebted to Guido d'Arezzo both for the system of solmisation that has been in general use from the eleventh century until now and for the division of the scale into hexachords, in place of the mathematically false system of tetrachords adopted by the Greeks. But there is no evidence to show that he originated the complicated system of mutations with which the employment of the hexachords was afterwards associated. This, therefore, can only be regarded as a later development, naturally springing from his invention, but neither proposed nor foreseen by him.

But Guido is also accredited with the invention of diaphonia and counterpoint.

It is quite true that he gives minute directions for the construction of discant, in an important chapter of the "Micrologus," headed "De Diaphonia, et Organi jura," but this chapter contains nothing that had not been previously explained by his predecessors, Hucbaldus and St. Odo. One of his examples, indeed, so closely coincides, in principle, with one which we have already quoted from Hucbald,* that both might easily have been written by the same master; the only difference being that, in Hucbald's example, both the Cantus firmus and the Organum are doubled in the octave above, while in Guido's the Organum alone is doubled:—

But for this form of discant—evidently prevalent in his day—Guido proposes to substitute another, which he considers softer †—

But this, again, coincides exactly in principle with Hucbald's Te humiles, already quoted.‡ Both are constructed upon what we should now call a pedal-point, and in both the Organum is made to end in unison with the Cantus firmus.

A third example resembles that of Hucbald still more closely—

†† As an instance of the absurd lengths to which the stories of Guido's inventions were carried by careless historians, we may mention that the author of a work called Regole di Musica, published at Rome in 1657, coolly asserts that St. Gregory, who died four hundred years before the "Micrologus" was written, ordained that no other gamut than that of Guido should be used in the Church!

In this, as in Hucbald's Te humiles, the major third plays a somewhat prominent part. Now, both Hucbald and Guido adhered to the Pythagorean system, which divided the perfect fourth into two greater tones and a limma, in preference to that of Ptolomy, which divided it into a greater tone, a lesser tone, and a diatonic semitone. In the system of Pythagoras, the major third is so atrociously sharp that it was classed among the discords, and considered too harsh for use. Nevertheless, both Hucbald and Guido use it in their examples, though it is worthy of note that Hucbald set the example which Guido followed.

We must therefore conclude that Guido did nothing at all towards the advancement of the rude forms of part-writing which preceded the invention of counterpoint, but that, as far as this point is concerned, he left the development of art exactly in the condition in which he found it.

It remains to see how far he reformed the system of notation generally employed in the tenth and eleventh centuries. He is credited with the invention both of the clefs—Claves signatæ—and of the lines and spaces of the stave; and we confess that in our opinion his claim is supported by almost irrefragable evidence.

Departing from his usual modest form of expression, he distinctly tells Brother Michael, in the epistle prefixed to his "Antiphonarium," that by the help of God he has written it in such wise that henceforth any intelligent or studious person may easily learn to sing.* And afterwards, in the clearest possible language, he goes on to say that whatsoever notes are written upon the same lines, or in the same space, have the same sound; and that lines or spaces, distinguished by the same letter, or the same colour, indicate the same notes,† inasmuch that if a song or Neuma be written without a letter or a coloured line, it will be as useless as a well with plenty of water but without a rope to draw it by.‡

Here, then, we have a perfectly intelligible description of the lines and spaces of the stave, and of the clefs or colours by which they were to be distinguished, and these things Guido distinctly claims to have invented.

In the earliest MSS. in which these new appliances are introduced we find a single red line only. All points or Neumæ written upon that line represented the note F. Signs written above or below it represented G or E respectively. A and D were indicated by Neumæ written at a greater distance above or below. Later on the matter was rendered more certain by the addition of a yellow line representing the note C, at a little distance above the red one." In MSS. written wholly in black, the Gothic forms of the letters F and C were placed at the beginning of their respective lines as a substitute for the colours. Evidently Guido used the letters as well as the lines, and here we have a perfect embodiment of the principle of a regular stave, with lines, spaces, and clefs complete. The development of this into the four-lined stave afterwards universally employed in the notation of Church Music was an inevitable consequence of the promulgation of the first idea. And surely we cannot doubt that that idea was first given to the world by Guido d'Arezzo.

Dismissing then, as absurd fables, the stories which attribute to Guido the invention of diaphonia, discant, organum, and counterpoint, the monochord, the spinet, the five-lined stave, and the Γ from which the gamut derives its name, we may fairly admit the probability that he was the first to assign to the gamut the important place it has since held in relation to the science of music; that he endeavoured to simplify its teaching by means of the Harmonic or Guidonian Hand, attributed to him by Sigebertus Gemblacensis;* and that he used the monochord with a fretted neck—as Dr. Burney suggests—as an aid to intonation, with a freedom which may possibly have given rise to the fable of the polyplectrum. But these things are as nothing compared with his greater inventions. For we believe it to be proved, beyond all reasonable doubt, that he first rendered the perfection of the scale possible by arranging it in hexachords; that he taught us the system of solmisation still practised every day; and that he invented the single line which forms the germ of the stave, and renders possible that system of notation by means of which we are now able to present to the eye, at one single view, the most brilliant passages in the Rhapsodies of Liszt or the most elaborate combinations in the scores of Wagner.

And this alone was quite enough for one Reformer to accomplish. For that single line effected a greater revolution than would be produced to-day by the universal acceptance of the Janka keyboard. Yet, more remained to be done. No provision had, as yet, been made for determining the proportionate length of the notes indicated upon the new-born stave. In the eleventh century all notes were sung of the same length, unless the singer thought fit to vary them in order to accommodate the varying accent or expression of the words he sang. To remedy this manifest defect a new Reformer was needed, and of him we propose to speak in our next chapter.

SULLIVAN AND SHAKESPEARE.

It was a happy thought which suggested to Mr. Irving the propriety of enlisting the genius of one of our foremost English composers, Sir Arthur Sullivan, to adorn the revival of "Macbeth" at the Lyceum Theatre. Few among modern musicians of any nation are more thoroughly imbued with what may be called the Shakespearean spirit of the art of music than he. His "Tempest" music, brought as the firstfruits of his studies in Germany, stands as a monumental evidence of his aptitude. His music to "Henry VIII.," to "The Merchant of Venice," and so forth, represent his maturer mind. His latest Opera, "The Yeomen of the Guard," owes no little of its success with the public to that quaintness of style which can be defined by no other term than that of English, and the definition being accepted, of the English of one of the brightest periods in literary and artistic history. It must not be understood by this that his music is a mere formal repetition of recognisable catch-phrases peculiar to the presumed date of production. On the contrary, it is essentially modern. The character it possesses is parallel to a long extent with that which has given the poetry of the period its power and influence in all time. That this quality is distinctly appreciated, is sufficiently proved by the favour which attends any performance of the extracts from the works just alluded to either in public or private. The songs with words by the "Bard of Avon" which Sir Arthur Sullivan set to music, "O mistress mine," "Orpheus with his lute," "A poor soul sat sighing," and others made for him a name as a song writer out of the common and inaugurated for him that reign of popularity which has perhaps not yet attained its flood tide. The Shakespearian quality in these songs commended them to all for their happy expression and fit unity of sentiment, characteristics which seem to be at the command of the composer.

The "Macbeth" music is not deficient in this peculiar power, although the exigencies of the stage rather stand in the way of their full appreciation. The music supplied for these special performances consists of an overture and preludes to the several acts, and some melodies for the verses which stand in the play. Sir Arthur Sullivan has accomplished his task without imparting to it any of that character which is supposed to distinguish the music of "the land of the mountain and the flood," yet it effectually completes its design, which is to emphasise the sentiments of these several scenes without oppressing the mind by what may be called its personal obtrusiveness, and so detracting from the effect which the lines of the poet should produce. Those who expect music in imitation of the productions of the century in which the action of the play is supposed to take place, like those who think that a Scottish play should be accompanied by Scottish music, will be disappointed. There is not the faintest suggestion of the bagpipe, and but the most chance reference to the pentatonic scale in which ancient Caledonian music is for the most part cast. Sir Arthur Sullivan knows that the bagpipe was not heard in Scotland before the time of the Battle of Bannockburn, in 1314, and that any suggestion of its characteristics would savour of an anachronism which even a musician would not dare to propose. He trusts, and wisely, to the general effect which can be produced by the skilful employment of musical resources and the grace of his fancy, and the charm which lovely melody exercises over the mind. The weirdness of the Witches' scene, and the supernatural stage illusions, are enhanced by the power of the music. The senses of the spectator are taken captive by means which surround but never oppress him. In all places, whether in the music of a pageant, in the melodramatic strains which accompany certain definite actions, there is an appropriateness of character which cannot be defined by any other term than that which was applied at the outset of this reference. The colour of the orchestration is always delicate, tender, yet vigorous and attractive. It fits the tragedy of "Macbeth," yet it might possibly, like the extracts from the "Tempest" and "Henry VIII." music—which are added to the list of pieces played during the performance of the play—bring with it an especial amount of musical interest if it were to be occasionally transferred to the Concert-room, it is so full of the expressions of happy imagery and musical poetry. If the "Macbeth" music is not the most important of all the productions of the gifted composer, it is without doubt no "unfit mate" for the several beautiful additions to the Shakespeare music which have from time to time flowed from his expressive, fanciful, and skilful pen.

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

No. XXVII.—HANDEL (continued from page 19).

HANDEL was certainly in an awkward position when that irate Hanoverian master of his came over to England as King. We, who live in the present day, can hardly conceive the extent and nature of his dilemma. It matters, now, little or nothing to an artist whether he be in favour at Court or not. Royalty is no longer the arbiter of such men's fate; its power, in England at any rate, passed away long ago, and is now vested in King Public, whom alone composers and singers have to fear. Handel occupied a very different position. To say nothing about the peril of his pension, his success, if not his actual stay in the country, depended upon reconciliation with King George. We cannot but marvel at the conduct of so shrewd a man in getting himself into such a difficulty; he was, however, in his right mind when the task of getting out of it confronted him. A rash step would have been dangerous, and there was nothing for it but patience and tact. Patient Handel certainly was. King George reached England in September, 1714, and in August, 1715, the master was still an exile from Court, within the sacred precincts of which he had, as far as we know, never ventured. It has been said that a double reason existed for Handel's disgrace. He had not only deserted his post by outstaying his leave, but had offended the Elector-King by composing the Utrecht "Te Deum" in celebration of a Peace which found no favour in the Royal eyes. Schœlcher mentions this: "He (the King) was all the more irritated against his truant chapel-master for having written the 'Te Deum' upon the Peace of Utrecht, which was not favourably regarded by the Protestant Princes of Germany." Mr. Rockstro goes so far as to say that the composition of the "Te Deum" was the "head and front of Handel's offending," and both Schœlcher and Rockstro apparently take their authority from Sir John Hawkins, who states that the King resented Handel's conduct in lending the assistance of his art to the celebration of an obnoxious Treaty. We are bound to say that this story is improbable on the face of it. His Majesty knew very well that, in composing the "Te Deum," Handel simply obeyed a Royal command, and he was not the man to punish anybody for paying respect to the authority he had inherited. Besides, though the representatives of the German Empire did not sign the Treaty, the Elector of Hanover, as Heir to the Crown of England, had good cause to be content therewith, inasmuch as the document secured the Protestant succession, theretofore disputed by France, and conceded material advantages to the British Empire. There is this to be said, moreover: neither Hawkins, nor Schœlcher, nor Rockstro gives any authority for the statement we are now investigating, while—most important fact of all—Handel's contemporary, Mainwaring, says nothing whatever about it. The following are the only words he uses with regard to the master's situation: "On the death of the Queen in 1714, his late Majesty came over. Handel, conscious how ill he had deserved at the hands of his gracious patron, now invited to the throne of these kingdoms by all the friends of our happy and free constitution, did not dare to show himself at Court. To account for his delay in returning to his office was no easy matter. To make an excuse for the non-performance of his promise was impossible." Mainwaring does refer to the peace of Utrecht, but in terms which convey an idea that the composition of the "Te Deum" was a most appropriate act for a servant of the House to perform. He says: "The illustrious family which had taken Handel into its patronage, had not only been deeply concerned, but highly distinguished in the course of the war. The military talents and personal bravery of its members had contributed to its prosperous issue. And not only the august House of Hanover, but most of the Protestant Princes of the country to which he was indebted for his birth and education had concurred in the reduction of that over-grown power (France) which long had menaced their religion and liberty. These circumstances produced that particular sort of interest and attachment which, when joined to the dignity and importance of a subject, dispose an artist to the utmost exertion of his powers." Mainwaring would not have written like this had he known—as he must have known in the event of there being anything to know—that the composer's act had given offence. Short of actual disproof, there is every reason to believe that the alleged second cause of Handel's disfavour at Court is a mere conjecture, without any authority worth considering.

While waiting for the upshot of Court events, Handel was not idle. He composed a small opera, "Silla," and one of larger dimensions, founded on the romance of Amadis de Gaul, and entitled "Amadiji." The last-named was played May 25, 1715, with Anastasia Robinson and Nicolini in the cast.

Reconciliation between the King and his peccant servant was brought about in August, 1715, by means with which all who know anything of musical history are familiar. Biographers practically agree as to the process, but, as Mainwaring was the first to tell the story, we take him as our authority. According to this early writer, who might have known the actors in the event, Handel's Hanoverian friend, Baron Kilmansege, with some others, "contrived a method for reinstating him in the favour of his Majesty." Mainwaring continues: "The King was persuaded to form a party on the water. Handel was apprised of the design, and advised to prepare some music for that occasion. It was performed and conducted by himself, unknown to his Majesty, whose pleasure on hearing it was equal to his surprise. He was impatient to know whose it was, and how this entertainment came to be provided without his knowledge. The Baron then produced the delinquent, and asked leave to present him to his Majesty, as one that was too conscious of his fault to attempt an excuse for it, but sincerely desirous to atone for the same by all possible demonstrations of duty, submission, and gratitude, could he but hope that his Majesty, in his great goodness, would be pleased to accept them. This intercession was accepted without any difficulty. Handel was restored to favour, and his music honoured with the highest expressions of the Royal approbation." This is a bald as well as a stilted statement, but, happily, another writer, not a musical biographer, has filled in certain details. Malcolm, the Captain Gronow of his day, records under date August 22, 1715: "The King, the Prince and Princess of Wales, and a large party of nobility, went in barges with music from Whitehall to Limehouse. When they returned in the evening, the captains of shipping suspended lanterns in their rigging, and the houses on both sides of the river were illuminated, and an incredible number of boats filled with spectators attended the Royal party, and cannons were continually fired during the day and evening." Schœlcher gives further particulars: "Handel wrote the twenty-five little pieces of concerted music known under the name of 'Water Music,' and caused them to be executed in a barge which followed the Royal boat. The orchestra was somewhat numerous, for it consisted of four violins, one viol, one violoncello, one counter-bass, two hautboys, two bassoons, two French horns, two flageolets, one flute, and one trumpet." With the help of all these statements, fancy can create the scene of Handel's reconciliation to his Royal master—quite a pretty picture in its way, and a romance savouring more of Venice in the palmy days of the Republic than of our prosaic London.

Handel's first appearance at Court was brought about by Geminiani, then on a visit to England. He (having, doubtless, been put up to it) wished Handel to accompany him in the performance of some sonatas before the King. "Kilmansege carried the request to his Majesty, supporting it strongly with his own recommendation, and eventually George I. consented, adding, to seal the peace, a pension of £200 to that which the fugitive from Hanover already held from the bounty of Queen Anne." George, who, to do him justice, was not reconciled by halves, subsequently made the penitent musician master to the daughters of the Prince of Wales, with a third pension of £200. So the storm blew over, leaving Handel in a position which almost put a premium upon disobedience and desertion.

The King returned to his beloved Hanover in July, 1716, and, apparently not disposed to let Handel out of his sight, took that errant person with him. His Majesty, however, seems to have gained confidence after a time, for he returned in January, 1717, leaving the master behind him with the young Prince Frederic, grandson of the reigning monarch and the future father of George III. Mattheson testifies to the presence of Handel at the capital of the Electorate in 1717. He writes: "In 1717 Handel was at Hanover with the hereditary Prince Elector, now King of England.* I received from him at this time letters dated from Hanover, on the subject of my work upon the orchestra, which I had dedicated to him and other musicians." During this visit the master was not idle. It is generally accepted by his biographers that he composed the second "Passion" at Hanover, in the year 1716. Here, again, Mattheson gives evidence: "At Hamburg was played Handel's 'Passion,' which he had composed in England, and sent by the post in a score written very minutely. My Oratorio was sung in 1718, in preference to his, and to that of Telemann, although they were much older than mine." Mattheson's evidence as to the composition of the work in England is decidedly circumstantial, but probabilities, and even known facts are against it. If Handel did not write the "Passion" at Hanover, what did he—that ever busy man—write there? Nothing else can be assigned to that date, and the inference is, as Schœlcher points out, that Handel sent the work by post from Hanover, not from England. An English edition of this "Passion" is now issued by Novello and Co., but it was known only by report till 1863, when the German Handel Society gave it the honours of print.

It was during this visit to Germany that Handel renewed acquaintance with an old friend, John Christopher Schmidt, whom he persuaded to accompany him to England and act as his man of business. A son of this person, known as John Christopher Smith, became the great master's amanuensis, and in that capacity is historical.

Soon after Handel's return to England an event took place which had a great influence, in its results, upon sacred music in this country. It was the fashion of the time for artists to accept, perhaps we should say seek, the patronage of "persons of quality," who, on their side, were not averse from the implied compliment paid them by men of wit and genius. Handel, as may be supposed, did not want for patrons. Let us take the testimony of Sir John Hawkins on this point;—

"Being now determined to make England the country of his residence, Handel began to yield to the invitations of such persons of rank and fortune as were desirous of his acquaintance, and accepted an invitation from one Mr. Andrews, of Barn Elms, in Surrey, but who had also a town residence, to apartments in his house. After some months' stay with Mr. Andrews, Handel received a pressing invitation from the Earl of Burlington, whose love of music was equal to his skill in architecture and his passion for other liberal studies, to make his house in Piccadilly the place of his abode. Into this hospitable mansion was Handel received, and left at liberty to follow the dictates of his genius and invention, assisting frequently at evening concerts, in which his own music made the most considerable part. The course of his studies during three years' residence at Burlington House was very regular and uniform; his mornings were employed in study, and at dinner he sat down with men of the first eminence for genius and abilities of any in the kingdom. Here he frequently met Pope, Gay, Dr. Arbuthnot, and others of that class; the latter was able to converse with him on his art, but Pope understood not, neither had he the least ear or relish for, music, and he was honest enough to confess it."

"There was one man in England—perhaps only one, and the King—who could tempt Handel out of his comfortable quarters in Burlington House, and away from its congenial society. That was the Duke of Chandos, in his way, a British Lorenzo the Magnificent, who had built himself a splendid palace at Cannons, near Edgware, and there kept a state which many a monarch of the period might have envied. The house, with its furniture, had cost the enormous sum of £250,000, and in it the Duke reigned, we are told, "rather as the presumptive heir to a diadem than as one of his Majesty's subjects." So extraordinary, it is further said, was his style of living, that he was designated "The Grand Duke." It was not this splendour that induced Handel to quit Burlington House and take service at Cannons, but the fact that Chandos kept a chapel with a complete musical establishment. Schœlcher tells us: "It was situate a short distance from the mansion, and we are told that he went there with true Christian humility, attended by his Swiss guards, ranged as the Yeomen of the Guard. Every Sunday the road from London to Edgware was thronged with carriages of the members of the nobility and gentry, who went to pray to God with his Grace." As the Duke "loved to worship the Lord with the best of everything," he set his heart upon securing Handel as chapel-master. As to this Mainwaring observes: "Whether Handel was provided as a mere implement of grandeur, or chosen from motives of a superior kind, it is not for us to determine. This one may venture to assert, that the having such a composer was an instance of real magnificence, such as no private person, or subject, nay, such as no prince or potentate could at that time pretend to."

We do not learn that the Duke experienced any difficulty in securing the great musician, while Dr. Pepusch, the actual holder of the place, was good enough to resign with remarkable equanimity, making way for his favoured successor without a word of chagrin or disappointment. For this, we can easily believe, he had many golden reasons.

Established at Cannons, with an orchestra and chorus at his disposal, Handel was "in clover." According to Hawkins, the Duke's choir "consisted in a sufficient number of voices of various pitches, including those of boys, for the performance of any composition merely vocal, but in imitation of the practice in the chapels of foreign countries, the Duke retained a band of the best instrumental performers." Hence, there was every inducement for the master to work, and work he did, as the existence of the famous Chandos Anthems testifies. These, every amateur is well aware, are twelve in number, of such dimensions that they have been called Choral Cantatas, "differing from Oratorios only in the absence of the narrative element—not at all in the loftiness of their conception, or the completeness of their structural proportion." This is an extreme statement, but it is only an exaggeration of the truth regarding compositions which for majesty and beauty are excelled by nothing that Art has offered on the altar of Religion. At this time, also, Handel twice set music to the "Te Deum." But the most important of his Cannons works—important alike in itself and in its far-reaching results—was the production of his first English Oratorio, "Esther," in which the master laid a foundation which still bears up a glorious superstructure—one that will endure for all time. Differing alike from Italian Oratorio and from German, though absorbing the best qualities of both, "Esther" set up a model which united dramatic power and epic elevation in a way possible only to the taste and penetration of genius. Of all this, perhaps, Handel little thought, and he certainly could not have foreseen to what the Oratorio would give rise. His immediate purpose was to gratify his magnificent master in a way that, at the same time, satisfied his own fancy. This, and no more, stimulated him; but it is characteristic of such men that, in a certain sense, "they know not what they do." Schœlcher states, on somewhat doubtful authority, that the Duke paid his chapel-master a thousand pounds for the Oratorio, and Mr. Rockstro repeats a tradition to the effect that Pope wrote the libretto, the only evidence in support of which statement is that he never denied it. Schœlcher assigns the book to Humphreys—a much more likely person; but it is useless to debate these matters, which will probably never be cleared up. What we do know as a matter of fact is that "Esther" was performed at Cannons on August 20, 1720, and that, having served its passing purpose, the score was placed in the Duke's library, where it remained unheeded for several years.

"Esther" was followed, a year later, by "Acis and Galatea," the words of which were supplied by Gay, with some assistance from Pope, who is said to have written the verses beginning "Not showers to larks," and from Hughes, to whom is ascribed "Would you gain the tender creature." Dryden was also laid under contribution, "Help, Galatea, help," being taken from his translation of Ovid's "Metamorphoses." The deathless music everybody knows. This work, and the first set of "Harpsichord Lessons" (including the famous "Harmonious Blacksmith," but we avoid William Powell and his anvil, as matter much too debatable) completed the sum of Handel's labours in the more direct discharge of his duty at Cannons, and we have now to see the master enter upon a new field of activity, fraught with varied experiences of "toil and trouble." The works written in the service of the "Grand Duke" remain, but where are the magnificent employer and his splendid palace? The one is remembered more by his connection with Handel than by anything else, of the other not a vestige remains and over its site the plough passes, or sheep and oxen graze. "The magnificent Duke," writes Schœlcher, "is now almost forgotten. A marble statue, which was erected to his memory in the crypt of the chapel, is now in the last state of dilapidation. The wind whistles through the broken windows of its funereal abode, and the plaster of the roof, detached from its skeleton of laths, powders his enormous wig and soils the imperial robe that drapes his shoulders." The chapel of the vanished mansion still remains, used as the parish church of Whitchurch Cannons, near Edgware, and in it a sermon from the text "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity," would surely come with terrible force.

In 1721 Handel left the Duke's service to devote himself exclusively to opera. Under what circumstances he did this should be set forth in a separate article.

THE next important production at the Paris Opera House will be not a purely musical work, but a grand ballet with music composed to it by that eminent master, M. Ambroise Thomas. The composer of "Mignon" is by no means new to this kind of work, for it was as a writer of ballet music that he first distinguished himself. Nothing could be more tuneful or more graceful than the music he wrote upwards of forty years ago for the ballet of "Betty." The ballet music, too, is altogether the best part of his opera on the subject of Hamlet; so sadly monotonous except in the scenes where wood-spirits and water-spirits dance, and where, surrounded by them, Ophelia dies. This will not be by any means the first time that "The Tempest" of Shakespeare will have been laid under contribution with a view to the operatic stage. When Mendelssohn was in London, soon after the production of the "Elijah" at Birmingham, he was pressed to undertake the composition of an opera, and he at last consented to go to work on "The Tempest," provided the subject could be treated for him in suitable libretto form. Mr. Planché did his best in this way, but without success: he at least did not succeed in pleasing Mendelssohn. Then, somewhere about the year 1848, Halévy, requested by Mr. Lumley to write something for Her Majesty's Theatre, and unable to find a satisfactory operatic theme, fell back on "The Tempest" as a subject for a ballet; and it is recorded in the chronicles of the time that the most attractive number in Halévy's score was an air for the prima ballerina, based on Dr. Arne's "Where the bee sucks." M. Ambroise Thomas has composed many charming melodies; but if in setting "The Tempest" inspiration should fail him, he would do well to bear in mind the beautiful song of Ariel.

THERE is a beautiful story of the last century related of Gasparo Pacchierotti, and going to prove that this eminent singer surpassed the fabled achievements of Orpheus himself; for whereas the Greek minstrel "made trees, And the mountain-tops that freeze, Bow themselves when he did sing," his modern rival moved the far more stubborn hearts of an opera orchestra. It is said that on one occasion when he was performing in Rome, the band were so carried away by his singing that they forgot to accompany him. "What's the matter with the fellows?" enquired the singer of the Conductor, in a stage whisper, and doubtless with an adjective of some power before the last word. The Conductor, in a husky voice, replied: "Sir, they are weeping!" Now, with every wish to believe in this touching anecdote, we cannot but feel that it is decidedly harder to swallow than any story of Orpheus, or indeed any story in the whole of Lem-prière, and when we remember that Pacchierotti was that arch-abomination, a male soprano, and probably as unmusical as the rest of his kind, we cannot help suspecting that there was a more simple and obvious reason for the orchestra "drying up," and that the ambiguous and diplomatic answer of the chef d'orchestre was interpreted by the singer in a manner most flattering to his vanity, and by him afterwards industriously circulated through the newspapers. At any rate, we always think of this story when we hear a singer baffle the band by getting into the wrong key in the middle of a song.

THE "encore nuisance," as it is called, has reared its ugly head in a new manner. Hitherto the performer has been taxed by the public, and has paid the tax ungrudgingly. Now an artist complains that his manager mulcts him a night's salary for refusing to accept an encore. The manager asserts that the fine was inflicted for a breach of the rules of the theatre. Each has found his defenders, but no one has come forward to uphold the alleged cause of quarrel, the "encore nuisance." Would it be worth while to adopt a like expedient which the elder Mathews put into practice? A wealthy tradesman asked for orders for the theatre. These were given; but the next day the recipient was astounded at receiving an order from Mathews for a new hat to be delivered on the give-and-take principle. The celebrated Jack Johnston suppressed the encore nuisance in a very practical way. He observed a well-known butcher in the pit—there were pits in theatres in those days—persistent in his demand for encore, which Johnston was somewhat unwilling to accede to. He, however, complied. On the morrow he enjoyed a good rump steak for his breakfast, and sent to the butcher demanding encore. Johnston sang his songs at night undisturbed by the aggressively applauding butcher.

A MAN may have only one arm and at the same time a multiplicity of ideas; and Count Zichy, who, with only five fingers, produces as much effect on the pianoforte as any ordinary player with the full complement of ten, has devised a triple mode of dramatic presentation which, according to latest advices, is about to be tried at Vienna. In the first place, the drama which it is proposed to lay before the public is offered in the shape of a pianoforte piece. It is supposed, after the fashion of programme music, to tell the story in the most explicit manner. But that there may be no mistake on the subject, an actor or actress next comes forward to tell the story by word of mouth, in the form of a poem. Finally, to prevent all possibility of error, and to add ocular demonstration to oral narrative and musical suggestion, a picture of the incidents of which the play is made up is exhibited at the back of the stage. It would surely be better that the actor or actress should recite in presence of the painted scene, and to the accompaniment of the musical description. The effect would be more striking, and the performance would be brought more quickly to an end.

It is a legal fact that the organist in a church is a being "unknown to ecclesiastical law," which also makes no provision, and therefore takes no cognisance of the organ other than in reference to such arrangements as may arise out of the agreements between the churchwardens, the incumbent, and the organist. The organist is the servant of the incumbent. It appears also that according to a recent decision of the Master of the Rolls in the case of Carl Rosa versus Edward Scovel, in which the former sued the latter for breach of contract, a lyric artist is legally a servant of the manager, though the term was softened by the statement of the learned judge that if he were to describe a lyric artist as a servant the newspapers would be ringing with a discussion on the subject for six months. Fancy describing a prima donna as a servant! Yet the term is technically correct. The term is not one of reproach, nor, as Mr. Blew tells us in his "Organs and Organists," "does it apply exclusively to menials. There is as much difference between servants and servants as between a cabinet maker and a Cabinet Minister."

THERE appears to be yet no prospect of little Joseph Hofmann resuming his dangerous triumphal career, and in this alone there is little to regret. It is only to be hoped that the misgivings of those who shook their heads over his first appearance may not be realised. We are not aware that anyone has yet noticed a curious coincidence in connection with this youthful prodigy. Very nearly a century ago—in June, 1792, to be precise—there appeared at a Benefit Concert at the Assembly Rooms, Turnham Green, a Miss Hoffman, six years old, “who had the honour of performing before their Majesties at Windsor Castle.” She performed a Concerto upon the “Grand Pianoforte,” and a Sonata on the pedal-harp. Also she played on the pianoforte “The Battle of Prague,” accompanied on the kettledrum by her brother, Master Hoffmann. Finally, the latter also performed a Sonatina on the pianoforte. Pace, dear Joseph! Thy namesake was aged three years and a-half!

THE success of “Wagner’s music,” as conducted by Mr. F. H. Cowen at his Melbourne Concerts, has been mentioned in many London papers. “Wagner’s music” is rather vague, and if the names were published of the pieces by Wagner which have been received with so much applause at the Melbourne Festival, it would doubtless appear that they are those whose merit no one has ever denied, and which might be given to the world by a composer having no pretension whatever to revolutionise existing musical systems. The “Tannhäuser” March has been mentioned as one of the pieces by Wagner which have met with special favour from Australian amateurs, and there are some half-dozen preludes, overtures, and marches by this composer which might well be applauded by audiences who would be able to make nothing of the “Ring des Nibelungen” as a whole, or indeed of any one section of it.

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

THERE is a paper published in a suburban district of Glasgow which should set great store by its musical critic. The gentleman in question has a style of his own, and, in days when humanity runs very much into one mould, anything of an individual character is precious. Writing about a performance of “The Feast of Adonis” and “Bonnie Kilmeny” by the Pollokshields Musical Association, our Scottish censor remarks: “In neither of the cantatas can it be said the scores demand more than ordinary skill to effect a finished recital, and certainly no single item calls into play any great musical exertions in the working up. Thanks to this association, nevertheless, for providing from time to time a class of musical composition which, by its distinctive character, gives appreciable variety to the average concerts of the day. The oddity prefixed to the vocal parts in several pieces of ‘Bonnie Kilmeny’ may be appropriate to the theme, yet it is uncertain if such remote peculiarities tend to the enchantment of the recital or the pleasure of the average listener.” What could have been the “oddity” referred to? Alas! we know not; but are content with the oddity of the critic, whose by no means remote peculiarities certainly tend to the pleasure of the average reader.

DR. TOURJÉE has been warning American young ladies and their parents against the dangers of Milan, whither so many would-be prime donne repair for education. His statements are very serious, and made on no less authority than that of the American Consul, who, says the Doctor, “told me that he himself knew of no less than 300 cases of young American girls who had gone down to their graves in that city, and that their deaths were the result of blasted hopes, combined with the misery of ruined fortunes and ruined virtue. Mind you, these girls have died in reality, so you must imagine how large must be the number of those who continue to live, but who are lost to all that is honourable. The Consul described the rapacity of the music teachers. These harpies flourish on the fortunes which the poor girls bring with them from this country, and through which they expect to be prima donnas. It would seem as if their principal object in life was to fleece their victims.” This is a terrible indictment. What says Milan to it?

If anybody wants a straightforward slap-dash criticism we can recommend the Boston Home Journal’s opinion of Moritz Rosenthal, the pianist. The writer begins with an acknowledgment of merit: “He is a marvellously gifted and exciting performer, a fascinating virtuoso, indeed, whose chief characteristic it is to bewilder and, at times, even to benumb the senses of his hearers by the preternatural power of his execution.” Then the critic proceeds “on the other hand,” and finds some choice things to say: “He not unfrequently demonstrates that he is quite as capable of the utmost slam-bang slovenliness and vulgarity in his playing as he is of all the poesy of expression. . . His fortissimos are of a dashing, daring, and, once in a while, of a very brazen and reckless character. They almost invariably astonish and confound quite as much as they shock and allure the refined and cultivated hearer, so irresistibly appalling is the diablerie of their conception.” There is a “nice derangement of epitaphs” here, but the meaning is pretty clear, and when Mr. Rosenthal comes to England with his “diablerie” we shall have something to talk about.

THERE are symptoms of a revolt against the increasingly artistic character of the Church’s musical service. The standard was raised at a meeting in the board-room of the S. P. G., where the “spirit of professionalism” came in for a very bad quarter of an hour, and even the “big organ” did not escape, these things being inimical to worship-music for the people and by the people. The opinion of the meeting seemed to take form thus: “The prevailing style of Church-music is becoming increasingly unfavourable to liturgical worship. Our congregations are being robbed of their most precious heritage, and the spirituality of worship is injuriously affected. It is full time some action should be taken.” We have no desire to express an opinion on the religious side of this question, but we note that “the most precious heritage” of Churchmen is the right to make a more or less distressing noise under the cloak of congregational singing.

WE learn from New York that the German and American frequenters of the Metropolitan Opera House are not on good terms. When Wagner is played the Germans want to make a very serious matter of it, and wrestle in silence with their country’s new art; whereas the Americans, refusing to distinguish between a temple of Wagner and any other place devoted to lyric drama, are frivolous, chatty, and light-minded. Why do the Americans attend? In the first place, because to be seen in an opera-house is “the right thing, don’t you know”; and next, because, in “Siegfried,” the manager shows “a steam-puffing dragon and swimming Rhine maidens.” For these things, New York “society” people are content, says a correspondent, “to yawn over the music they cannot understand” and face “Wagnerian conundrums.”

THE bodies of Ilma di Murska and her unhappy daughter, Madame von Czedik, were cremated at Gotha last week. It was a pathetic scene. Only one relative attended, and only one wreath, the offering of her dead child, lay on the prima donna’s coffin. Her ashes have been placed in an urn, inscribed, “Ashes are all that remain of the nightingale.” What a lesson is all this! and may we not say with Shakespeare’s Hastings:—

O momentary grace of mortal men,
Which we more hunt for than the grace of God!
Who builds his hope in air of your fair looks
Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast,
Ready, with every nod, to tumble down
Into the fatal bowels of the deep.

THAT was a funny passage of arms between Messrs. Rubinstein and Von Bülow. Like John Peerybingle’s famous kettle, the Doctor “began it,” and made sarcastic reference, in the spirit of a bald-headed man, to the length of Rubinstein’s hair, whereupon came from St. Petersburg an awful insinuation concerning the length of Von Bülow’s ears. Everybody is laughing, and simple people are exclaiming, in the spirit of a trite Latin quotation, “Can such anger dwell in celestial minds?”

MRS. BEECHER STOWE has been writing about the power of music to express moral and spiritual ideas; but, says another Transatlantic author, "Music expresses no such ideas to those who are without them," and backs up his opinion with a story: "At a Thomas Concert some time ago, at the close of one of the most exquisite numbers of the répertoire, a lady at our side was convulsed by laughter, another in front of us was moved to tears. We heard one person say to another, 'Thank God for such heavenly music,' and at about the same time a young man said to another, 'Let us go and take a drink on that.'" His conclusion is: "He that is holy will be holy still, and he that is filthy will be filthy still." According to this, music has its elect people, while the rest cannot "find salvation." We demur to the position absolutely.

MR. ANTON SEIDL, good man, has a recipe for creating English opera singers. It is very simple: Take a spell of work in the chorus of a German opera! After calling this a "funny proposition," the New York World adds: "We don't know many places where they could learn more bad chorus habits, and where they could get more vicious artistic ideas. The English opera is all right, or will be, when society takes kindly to it, and when great European artists have learned to sing English, and good English is given them to sing." Bismarck should present Mr. Seidl with a gold bâton in recognition of unmatched Teutonic "bounce."

"DE mortuis nil nisi bonum" is too old an aphorism to win much respect in the New World. At any rate, one feels driven to this conclusion on reading what the Musical Courier of New York has to say above the open grave of the late publisher, Mr. Oliver Ditson: "If any one is responsible for the dissemination of trash and the perpetuity of native rot, it is the firm of Oliver Ditson and Co., and it would be a shame and an outrage upon musical art to permit this sad event to pass without that kind of comment which it deserves." The Courier adds: "Let the truth prevail." Certainly, but let it not be stated with Bismarckian brutality.

A HOXTON "Vicar" has advertised for an organist and choirmaster, who must be a "Catholic" (apparently not Roman), and who will have to play at a "sung Mass" on Sundays, attend four services weekly, and rehearse the choir. In return our clerical Bountiful is willing to pay £20 per annum, or about eight shillings a week. Excellent man! This, however, is not the measure of his liberality. Provided the organist and choirmaster consent to act as sacristan, he will receive "more." How much more the Vicar does not say; perhaps a couple of shillings. Here is a chance!

THERE are many tragedies in artistic story, but few more distressing than the death of Ilma di Murska. We heard of her the other day as poor and unfriended in America, then of her return to Germany, and now of her sudden demise, forlorn and neglected, in Munich. What a change! In 1865 Ilma di Murska was the talk and rage of London: in 1889 she has no friend, save a daughter who, with Roman devotion, commits suicide over her remains. Of a truth, this prima donna found glory to be, what Dr. Johnson called it, "the casual gift of thoughtless crowds."

ON Monday last Mr. Sarasate played Dr. Mackenzie's Violin Concerto in Berlin, at the same hall in which the Stanford performance recently took place, and with the co-operation of the same orchestra. At the sound of the English trumpets the walls of Jericho—otherwise German self-sufficiency and prejudice—are tumbling down. "English" we have said, but the term should, in the present case, be qualified, since Stanford is an Irishman and Mackenzie a Scot.

THERE is money in the idea of supplying opera glasses on the automatic principle. Opposite each seat is a machine, you drop in a coin, and take out your binocular. You are expected to put it back when done with. Already two trading companies are quarrelling over the patent.

A WRITER in the Atlantic Monthly refers those who are curious about the influence of Wagner's music on the voice to Heinrich Vogl, "who has the advantage of a perfect method, added to the gift of an organ exceptionally strong. Yet the tired sound does not leave his voice for weeks (after a course of the 'Nibelungen'), and there is no doubt that his power will fail prematurely in consequence of the tremendous strain so frequently applied." We may add that Mr. E. Lloyd, warned by experience, refuses any more to sing the Sword Song of Siegfried.

HERE is another addition to the universal apocrypha: A transatlantic paper declares that an English gentleman, bearing the very English name of Kunwald, "is the fortunate possessor of the violin on which Beethoven often played." For the removal of any doubt, we are told: "It bears on its back a roughly cut initial B, apparently executed with a chisel." This would be convincing were it not a fact that the famous Bill Stumps has many relatives about.

WE hear from St. Petersburg of a child-pianist, Raoul Koczalski, aged only five years. Poor little fellow! The children of old used to "pass through the fire unto Moloch"; now they are sacrificed on the altar of Money. Carlyle says, speaking of a child: "Good Christian people, here lies for you an inestimable loan—take all heed thereof; in all carefulness employ it." Some good Christians are doing this, though not in the sense intended.

MR. F. LOUIS SCHNEIDER has been urging the resuscitation of the Viole d'amour. We have not the smallest objection; at the same time, we entertain very little hope. "The tone is faint and sweet; there is something seraphic in it." What ordinary musical amateur, in this noisy age, cares about celestial softness? As for those who set the fashion, they are practising the banjo, when not enjoying "Killaloe" at the Lyric Club.

THREE or four years ago Messrs. Novello and Co. published a German edition of Mr. Prout's admirable Primer of Instrumentation, and now they are issuing, by request, a Spanish translation of Mr. Cummings's Rudiments Primer. The books, as they spread about the Continent, will be eloquent witnesses to the fact that the study of music is not wholly neglected in this island.

GENERAL HARRISON, President-elect of the United States, is credited with ability to recognise a tune sometimes, although he has "a bad ear for music." He heard a march during the civil war and identified it years after in an opera-house. It was the Soldiers' March and Chorus in "Faust." The General is rather inclined to boast of his perceptiveness.

WE are told on the highest authority that an ingredient in "pure religion and undefiled" is the charity which ministers comfort to "the fatherless and widow in their affliction." For the noblest of reasons, therefore, let our readers assist Mrs. Desmond Ryan and her orphan boys. Subscriptions may be sent to Mr. W. Wiener, 21, Sunderland Terrace, Westbourne Square.

THE Philharmonic Society's opening Concert, on March 14, will have a good programme, including Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, Sterndale Bennett's "Parisina" Overture, Grieg's Suite (Op. 46) and Pianoforte Concerto in A minor. By way of something to clear the hall, the directors have chosen Saint-Saëns's "Danse Macabre"—a very effectual piece for some of us.

GLOUCESTER Cathedral organ, after renovation by Mr. Willis, was re-opened on the 11th ult., with special sermons, but without pedals, the workmen being, as usual, "all behind." Another mishap: Canon Farrar, who preached on the occasion, found himself at Bath when he should have been in Gloucester. An elastic service was stretched till he appeared.

MR. F. H. COWEN may claim such credit as attaches to the introduction into Australia of plébiscite Concerts. This peculiar expression of public opinion is not without value. In the present instance it shows that a community with few opportunities of cultivating taste gives 312 votes to the "Tannhäuser" Overture and only 228 to Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony!

WILL somebody stand up for the sufficiency, in England, of the English language? John Stuart Blackie having published a book on "Scottish Song," a daily reviewer immediately proceeds to discuss the "Volkslied!" Is he a composer who writes "morceaux de salon," and calls a waltz a "valse"?

MR. FREDERIC CLIFFE'S new Symphony in C minor, which we have had an opportunity of examining, is a highly creditable work and deserves a hearing. The composer is anxious for its performance at the approaching Leeds Festival, the Committee of which might do worse than thus honour a Yorkshireman.

MR. R. B. GEORGE, writing to an American journal, the Song Friend, states that he has been taking lessons of "Sir William Shakespeare, R.A.M., of the Royal Academy of Music," and adds, "We leave London for Paris this evening." He is now, perhaps, receiving instruction from Monsieur le Vicomte de Saint-Saëns.

MELBOURNE University has not discovered a Professor of Music yet, and the work of the musicians in England who undertook to act as a jury of selection remains unfinished. Advertisements having been inserted in foreign papers, the jury are in mortal dread of encountering several hundred applicants from the Fatherland.

SINCE 1802 the stewards of the Gloucester Festival have had to make good a deficit on the working account of nearly £10,000, besides qualifying on each occasion by subscribing £5 to the charity. But their spirit is equal to the strain. Already a hundred gentlemen have consented to act in September next.

INGENIOUS people who supply the public with anecdotes have need of care. We read in an American paper that, at the recent Handel Festival, a lady sought to expel a gentleman from a certain seat on the plea that she had occupied it "at the 'Creation.'" The inventor of this story had a good point to make, but oh, how he blundered!

ONE of our regular contributors, Mr. Henry F. Frost, is in luck just now. He has succeeded the late Mr. Desmond Ryan on the Standard and Mr. Ebenezer Prout on the Athenæum, where he had for some years held a subordinate position. We congratulate Mr. Frost on well-earned advancement.

MR. F. H. COWEN'S departure from Australia, originally fixed for to-day, is postponed to the 15th inst. It appears that he has been offered a week's engagement at Sydney; honorarium, £500. For such a good round sum the most home-sick Englishman might consent to spend another fortnight away from his Lares and Penates.

MUSICAL wrangling has at last been reduced to an absurdity. Two German disputants — we hope not journalists — tried the other day to settle the pros and cons of Wagnerism by wager of battle. On reference to an almanac we find that this really is the year of grace, 1889!

A BERLIN prize of 1,000 marks for the best symphony has been awarded to a young musician, Georg Schumann — clarum et venerabile nomen! May the patronymic be of good augury.

AN American journal tells its readers that "all the oddities come to London first to be tried on." There seems a good deal of truth in this, when you come to think of it.

"WILLIAM CYRUS, the celebrated English cornet King, has issued a 10,000 dollar challenge to Levy, the test performance to take place at any time or place appointed by the latter." So we read. With due shame we confess to never having heard of Mr. Cyrus, the cornet King. Such is fame!

WE sometimes hear a good deal of railing at the commercial element in music. Well, the commercial element, personified by Mr. Chickering, has preserved Theodore Thomas's excellent orchestra to New York and the States generally.

How beautifully an American paragraphist sums up the whole banjo question. Here is his text: "Five-and-seventy banjos, all in rows, at the second annual Concert of the Banjo and Mandolin Society." This is his comment: "Plinketty, plinketty, plunk." There you have it.

THE Royal Society of Musicians is to be congratulated on having secured Mr. Harry Lawson, M.P., as its Chairman at the annual dinner on March 12. The Society will get from him a big cheque and a capital speech.

In the matter of nomenclature, plebeianism reigns at the Prince of Wales' Theatre, where Mr. Caldicott's "John Smith" serves as a lever de rideau to Planquette's "Paul Jones."

THE orchestral parts of Dr. Mackenzie's "Dream of Jubal" were tried over in St. James's Hall on the 23rd ult. Those who read the score were not curious as to the result. They knew that it could only be favourable.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

SOME additional interest was given to the usual New Year's Day performance of "The Messiah" by this Society, owing to the fact that it was the farewell appearance of Madame Albani, previous to her Concert tour in America. The Canadian prima donna was in excellent voice, and deserves commendation for her general adherence to Handel's text, her only offence being an alteration of the closing notes of "Rejoice greatly," by which a pair of very objectionable consecutive octaves were introduced. Mr. Charles Banks was not equal to the florid passages in "Every valley" and "Thou shalt break them," but he sang the "Passion" airs with considerable expression. Of Madame Patey and Mr. Santley of course nothing need be said. Those choruses which were actually given went splendidly, but several favourite numbers were omitted, and even the air "The trumpet shall sound" has now disappeared from the Albert Hall version of the Oratorio.

M. Benoit's Oratorio "Lucifer" was to have been performed, for the first time in England, on the 16th ult., but for reasons into which it is unnecessary to enter the production had to be postponed, and the difficulty was solved by the substitution of Berlioz's "Faust," which is always a sure attraction at the Albert Hall. It was, perhaps, in consequence of the hurried change in the programme that the list of principal singers differed from that usually associated with the French composer's work; but the first appearance of the young Scotch vocalist, Miss Macintyre, was an event of some interest, especially as soprano singers of the highest class are now in great demand for the Concert-room. Judging by her initial effort it will be in the power of Miss Macintyre to assume a very honourable position in this domain of art, should she so will, and when she has gained the necessary experience. Her voice is extremely sympathetic and her method is unexceptionable, but at present she does not seem to feel what she sings. There was little pathos in her rendering of the "King of Thule" ballad, nor in Berlioz's version of "Meine Ruh ist hin." This coldness of style, however, is less objectionable than the exaggerations in which some young performers indulge, and what is needed time will probably supply. Mr. Iver McKay sang carefully as Faust, and it was no fault of his that his voice did not fill the vast hall. Mr. Watkin Mills is heard to much greater advantage in Oratorio than in such a part as Mephistopheles, but he may claim the credit due to conscientious effort. The choruses were so beautifully rendered that the loss of some of the more delicate orchestral effects was less felt than it otherwise would have been. For the first time the work was given without any encores and, as a consequence, a large proportion of the audience retained their seats to the end.

NOVELLO'S ORATORIO CONCERTS.

THE first performance of "Elijah" at these Concerts, on the 23rd ult., was of course an event of some interest, and this was increased by the accidental circumstance that Mendelssohn's most popular work had not been heard previously in London this season. It is scarcely too much to say that, on the whole, no finer rendering has ever been heard in St. James's Hall. The hypercritical might have discovered a flaw or two occasionally, but they were as spots in the sun. Of Mr. Henschel's interpretation of the principal rôle it is not necessary to say very much, as it is becoming nearly as familiar as that of Mr. Santley. Comparisons between the two would be worse than useless; an artist has a right to form his own judgment as to the way in which a part of such importance should be rendered, and to act upon it so long as he does not misrepresent the composer's intentions. Mr. Henschel imparted quite a sardonic spirit into his taunts of the Baal worshippers, and he sang with the utmost expression the airs in the second part, "It is enough" and "For the mountains shall depart." Madame Nordica was heard to great advantage in the principal soprano music. She used her beautiful voice with much tact and skill, and wisely avoided the airs and graces of the operatic stage. Of Madame Patey and Mr. Lloyd it only need be said that they were, as usual, matchless in their respective duties. Among the subordinate vocalists, first mention is due to Miss Lizzie Neal, who displayed a very fine contralto voice and a forcible style in the air "Woe unto them." She has something to learn in the art of managing the voice, but as she is still a student in the Royal Academy of Music this is merely a question of time. The efficient service rendered by Miss Emily Squire, Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys, Mr. Lucas Williams, and Mr. Hughes should not pass without acknowledgment. It would be impossible to overpraise the efforts of the choir. These enthusiastic amateurs, who are equal to mastering the most difficult works in three or four weeks, seemed determined to show that they do not despise such familiar strains as those of "Elijah." They sang throughout the performance with an amount of vigour that was simply astonishing, and, to name but one example, the rendering of "Thanks be to God" has surely never been surpassed. Dr. A. C. Mackenzie must have been proud of his force; they could not have rendered him better service.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

IN the present issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES it is only possible to notice two of these performances—namely, those which took place on the 15th and 22nd ult. The programmes on both occasions were admirably selected and arranged, though the novelties introduced were not in any sense important. At the first of the two Concerts an Overture by Tchaikowsky, entitled "1812," was brought forward. Since the introduction of his fine and original Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor at the Crystal Palace nearly a dozen years ago, the works of the Russian composer, heard from time to time, have proved disappointing. It is to be hoped that the new Symphony in E minor, which he is to conduct at the Philharmonic Concerts next season, will make amends, for "1812" is a sorry piece of programme music. Tchaikowsky employs an old Russian hymn-tune, at least two national airs, and a fragment of the Marseillaise. These themes are worked up into a noisy and rhapsodical piece, the exact import of which cannot be determined, as the programme did not vouchsafe any explanation. The rest of the programme was far more acceptable. It included Mendelssohn's Overture "Fingal's Cave," Beethoven's Symphony in D (No. 2), Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll," and Spohr's Violin Concerto in D minor (No. 9). The playing of the orchestra was very creditable, and Mr. Willy Hess, the leader of Sir Charles Hallé's orchestra, made a very favourable impression in Spohr's work, his playing being noteworthy for good intonation and grace of style.

At the following Concert the audience was much larger than usual, and a glance at the programme revealed the cause. There is no doubt whatever that a larger proportion of the English public is attracted by choral than by orchestral music, and for the first time Mr. Henschel brought forward a choral piece—namely, Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer," Mrs. Henschel being announced to take the soprano solo. She sang it with singular purity of style, and with perfect expressiveness, untainted by affectation. The chorus was supplied by Mr. McNaught's Bow and Bromley Institute Choir, and right well did the amateurs from the far east acquit themselves. It is to be hoped that on some future occasion they will appear again in St. James's Hall to take part in some work of greater importance. Animated, perhaps, by the encouraging attendance, the orchestra played remarkably well during the evening, very few flaws being noticeable in the rendering of Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony, Schumann's "Genoveva" Overture, and a selection from the third act of "Die Meistersinger." A somewhat puzzling item was an entr'acte from Weber's unfinished comic opera "The Three Pintos." Benedict in his life of Weber makes no mention of this piece, but he was thoroughly familiar with the work so far as it went, and avowed that he could have completed it from memory immediately after the composer's death. The entr'acte is in two sections, a short slow introduction in D, very delicately scored, leading into a brighter movement in E flat, rather suggestive of a polacca. It was not fully written out and scored by Weber, but the ideas were his. It would have been an advantage to the hearers to have stated on the programme the amount of work towards completing the score which was done by Herr Mahler at the request of the descendants of the composer.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

ON the 7th ult. these performances were resumed in a quiet and unostentatious manner. There were only two concerted works in the programme—namely, Beethoven's Quartet in E flat (Op. 74), sometimes known as the "Harp Quartet," and Rubinstein's Sonata in D, for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 18). The latter is one of the most pleasing examples of the Russian composer's chamber music, thanks as much to its symmetrical form as to the beauty and freshness of its themes. Mdlle. Janotha was the pianist of the evening, and the audience was not satisfied with her rendering of Chopin's Barcarolle in F sharp (Op. 60)—that is to say, they asked for more. Mdlle. Janotha complied by giving the same composer's Berceuse in D flat with charming delicacy. Madame Néruda played two of her favourite solos by Spohr and Leclair, and Mr. Santley was heard at his best in two of Brahms's Lieder and Gounod's "Le Nom de Marie."

On the following Saturday a highly attractive programme was provided, and despite the inclement weather there was a very large attendance. It would be superfluous to say anything concerning such masterpieces as Mozart's Quintet in G minor and Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata, both of which were splendidly rendered, the latter by Madame Néruda and Sir Charles Hallé. The pianist must be thanked for reviving Schubert's so-called Fantasia Sonata in G (Op. 78) after seven years of neglect. As the term Fantasia is proved to be without authority, it should now be removed from a work which is as clear in outline and as correct as to form as any Sonata ever penned. Of the manifold beauties of the work there is no occasion to speak to those who know it, and those who do not should make its acquaintance without delay. Mrs. Henschel was heard in Purcell's now familiar "Nymphs and Shepherds" and two French songs by Mr. Goring Thomas and M. Massenet respectively. The former of these, "Midi au village," is a very charming little effusion.

There was only a small audience at the Concert of the 14th ult., and the cause must be attributed to the unimportance of the pianoforte solo, as the rest of the programme was attractive. But many attend these Concerts for educational purposes, and they were not likely to be contented with Chopin's Impromptu in F sharp (Op. 36), excellently as it was interpreted by Madame Haas. Indeed, an encore was so warmly insisted upon that it had to be granted at last. The concerted works were Beethoven's Quartet in F (Op. 59, No. 1) and Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in A (Op. 26), by far the finest of his Pianoforte Quartets. Miss Florence Hoskins, the vocalist of the evening, made a fairly favourable impression; but as she is still a student at the Royal College of Music it would be unfair to subject her to severe criticism.

As a matter of course there was a great crowd on the 19th ult., for Beethoven's Septet was in the programme. Whether the public will ever tire of this favourable example of the Bonn composer's early manner cannot be said, but there are no symptoms as yet of any such change of feeling. The performance was of noteworthy excellence, as may be supposed with such artists as Madame Néruda and Messrs. Hollander, Lazarus, Paersch, Wotton, Reynolds, and Piatti. Another popular work, given by desire, was Haydn's Quartet in C (Op. 76, No. 3), containing the variations on "God preserve the Emperor." Madame Haas gave a charmingly finished and expressive rendering of Beethoven's Sonata in A flat (Op. 110), and Mr. Santley rendered Schubert's "Erl-King" and two other equally familiar songs in his best manner.

The same executants, allowing for the addition of Mr. L. Ries and the replacement of Mr. Hollander by Herr Straus, gave a magnificent performance of Schubert's Ottet on the following Monday. Hitherto it has been the custom to divide this work, allowing an interval after the third of the six movements; but on the present occasion it was played without break, and, moreover, was placed at the end of the programme. This may have seemed rash, but it was justified by the result, for very few persons stirred before the end. A less satisfactory piece was Liszt's transcription of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in A minor, which for some inexplicable reason Madame Haas selected in preference to more legitimate pianoforte music. Mendelssohn's Sonata in B flat, for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 45), completed the instrumental programme, and there was only one song, Miss Maude White's "Come to me in my dreams," which was fairly well rendered by Miss Helen d'Alton.

The Concert of Saturday, the 26th ult., is the last we can notice this month. The programme, as to the instrumental works, was of a very familiar character, consisting of Beethoven's Quintet in C (Op. 29), the same composer's Sonata in G, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 30, No. 3), and a portion of Schumann's Carnaval, played by Mdlle. Janotha. The Polish pianist might well have rendered the entire work, as the audience insisted upon an encore, to which she responded with the Arabesque in C (Op. 18). Mr. Brereton introduced a remarkably fine song, "Arise, ye subterranean winds," from Purcell's "Tempest" music. This should be heard again at no distant date.

BOROUGH OF HACKNEY CHORAL ASSOCIATION.

CHANGE of fashion rather than lack of respect on the part of musicians towards a great master has relegated Haydn's last Oratorio "The Seasons" to the background. We hear from time to time of one or two sections being given by provincial societies, but the work in its entirety had not been heard in London from 1877, when it was performed by the Sacred Harmonic Society, until it was revived on the 14th ult. by Mr. Prout's enterprising Association. "The Seasons" contains so much genial and charming music that it was quite a treat to hear it once more. The performance was quite worthy of the Hackney Society. To this well-trained choir the choruses present no difficulties save in one or two instances, which were successfully overcome. Mrs. Hutchinson has seldom been heard to greater advantage than in the soprano music. She sang excellently throughout the evening and made a special effect in the air "O how pleasing to the senses." Mr. Henry Piercy was almost equally commendable in the tenor airs, and Mr. Robert Hilton rendered full justice to those for bass. The Shoreditch Town Hall was well filled and the performance appeared to give the liveliest satisfaction.

MESSRS. MAX HEINRICH AND MOOR'S RECITALS.

A PERFORMANCE, in which two artists have equal shares, is likely to be more acceptable than one in which a single executant is responsible for the entire programme, except, of course, in rare cases. We therefore commend the artistic union of the two musicians whose names head this notice. They are giving a series of three Recitals at the Steinway Hall, the second of which took place on the 16th ult. Mr. Max Heinrich is one of the many vocalists of German extraction who have gained valuable experience in America. His voice is a baritone of fairly good quality, but what is of greater importance, his singing bears the impress of first-rate training and remarkable natural intelligence. He not only rendered nearly the whole of Schumann's "Leiderkreis" (Op. 39), but played the difficult accompaniments without book, which proves him to be an excellent musician. Subsequently he took part with Miss Lena Little in Brahms's Duets for contralto and baritone (Op. 28). Mr. Emanuel Moor is a pianist who appears to have graduated in the meretricious school now unfortunately so popular, in which showy and noisy execution is accepted as equivalent to genuine artistic feeling. Obviously Tausig's arrangement of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in D minor affords no opportunity for forming proper judgment as to the higher capabilities of a pianist. Mr. Moor's Sonata in A minor, for pianoforte and violin, in which the composer was joined by Mr. Wessely, has considerable thematic interest, and is fairly well put together.

HAMPSTEAD CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.

ON the 28th ult. the directors of the Conservatoire inaugurated a series of special evening Concerts in the new Concert Hall of the Institution, with a performance of Sullivan's "Golden Legend." The principal performers were Miss Annie Marriott, Madame Marian McKenzie, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Henschel, and Mr. J. T. Hutchinson. The singing of these artists is too well known to need comment. Mr. Carrodus was leader of the orchestra, Mr. A. J. Greenish was at the organ, and Mr. G. F. Geaussent (the Principal of the Conservatoire) conducted. The band and chorus numbered over 200 performers, and the work was most satisfactorily given, the Choir already showing promise of excellent results. The new Conservatoire has been recently erected at a cost (including the grand organ, which will shortly be added, by Willis, for the Concert Hall) of over £18,000. The architect, Mr. Rowland Plumbe, has laid out his work so as to accommodate it for the purposes of a musical institution. The Concert Hall, which is attached to the building, accommodates an audience of 700, and has an orchestra specially planned to hold a band of sixty and choir of 200, with ample convenience in the way of retiring rooms for band and choir. At this Concert the admirable acoustic properties of the hall were at once established. There are eighteen class rooms for music, and a lecture room capable of holding 180 persons.

The Education Scheme includes an Art School (of which Sir James Linton, the President of the Royal Institute, is Director), and for the purposes of this School there are three large studios at the top of the building. The principal's house is attached to the Conservatoire.

The Institution, which has now several hundreds of students, had long since outgrown its accommodation, and now that it has such a suitable building will doubtless go on increasing. Besides the series of Oratorio Concerts commenced on this occasion, Mr. Carrodus has already announced a series of Chamber Concerts to be given in the new hall.

MR. DE MANBY SERGISON'S WINTER CONCERTS.

MR. W. DE MANBY SERGISON, the Organist of St. Peter's, Eaton Square, gave the first of a series of ten winter Concerts, at 62, Warwick Square, on the 17th ult., a select audience being present. The programmes of these Concerts, which, by the way, commence at the unusual hour of half-past four in the afternoon, consist exclusively of chamber music, with vocal items interspersed. That under notice comprised Beethoven's Quartet in F (Op. 18, No. 1) and Haydn's Quartet in D (Op. 12, No. 63), played by the talented Hann family—viz., Messrs. Lewis Hann (first violin), E. H. Hann (second violin), W. H. Hann (viola), and William C. Hann (violoncello). Both works were interpreted with admirable refinement and smoothness of ensemble. Mr. W. C. Hann was also heard in a couple of violoncello solos by Lachner and Popper. The pianist of the afternoon was Miss Kuhe, whose facile technique and elegant style were advantageously displayed in Schumann's "Nachtstück," "Aufschwung," and "Grillen." Mr. Serginson modestly restricted his own share in the Concert to accompanying the songs—Gounod's "The Golden Thread" and Goring Thomas's "Summer Night," given by Miss Eleanor Rees; and "O ruddier than the cherry," sung by Mr. Charles Ackerman. The programme of the second Concert, on the 24th ult., was wholly devoted to compositions by Brahms. These included the Sonata for violin and pianoforte, in G major (Op. 78), executed by Messrs. W. R. Cave and Orton Bradley; the Quartet in A major (Op. 26), wherein these gentlemen were associated with Messrs. A. Gibson and C. Ould; the Rhapsody for pianoforte (Op. 79, No. 1), played by Mr. Bradley; and some songs rendered by Mr. Wilfrid Cunliffe.

NATIONAL SOCIETY OF PROFESSIONAL MUSICIANS.

THE fourth Annual Conference of this Association was held in Cambridge on the 2nd, 3rd, and 4th ult., the use of the Archæological Museum, the Fitzwilliam Museum, and the splendid Hall of King's College being granted by the University and College authorities. At the first morning meeting a very large number of members from all parts of the country was welcomed by the master of Peterhouse, acting on behalf of the Vice-Chancellor. After Dr. Porter's reception the chair was taken by Dr. Crow, of Ripon; and Dr. Hiles read a paper (since published) advocating the systematic teaching of the science of Music upon the basis of the latest ideas of Harmony, and such a complete remodelling of the rules of Counterpoint or Part-writing as would bring them into accordance with modern practice. A keen discussion was initiated by Mr. E. Prout; but Dr. Hiles' proposition was carried by a majority of three to one. In the afternoon Mr. Charles Lunn discoursed upon "The Voice and its training"; and on the following morning, after Dr. Mann had guided the researches of the company through the valuable manuscripts of the Fitzwilliam collection, Mr. H. C. Banister read a paper upon "Some aspects of Musical Culture." At the three evening gatherings those members of the Society who are vocalists or "players upon stringed instruments" exerted themselves zealously in the interpretation of much excellent music, selected by the programme Committee, so that each day's work ended pleasantly and harmoniously.

From the report of Mr. Arthur Page (Nottingham) it appears that the Society has already outgrown its early organisation, and that it has become possible so to divide the existing provinces as to bring every part of England into closer union with some centre of active operation. And the complete success of the scheme in England being secured, it is proposed to hold the next Conference (January, 1890) in Scotland, with a view to bringing the northern musicians into closer communion with their southern brethren. Dr. A. C. Mackenzie presided at the closing dinner and testified in the most genial manner his warm sympathy with the Society's work and his entire confidence in its future. The arrangements made by the general Secretary—Mr. Chadfield (Derby)—were admirably carried out, and the exertions of Dr. Mann to promote their comfort were thoroughly appreciated by the members attending the Conference.

At the meeting of the General Council, held on the Saturday, Mr. Chadfield read a letter from the Committee of the Music Teachers' Association of the United States requesting that some distinguished English musician—being a member of the Society—might be invited to compose a work which, at the Conference to be held at Philadelphia in July next, might be performed as a representative of modern English music, as "The Crusaders" of Dr. Hiles' was, in July last, at Chicago. It was unanimously voted that Dr. Mackenzie should be invited to accede to the desire of the American musicians if his engagements would allow, and that the hon. general Secretary be requested to be present at the Philadelphia meeting to represent the English Society and to strengthen the kindly feeling already existing between the musicians of the two countries.

THE MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

ON the 7th ult., at the third meeting of this Society, Mr. F. Corder read a paper on the subject of "Closes." Deploping the vagueness and superficiality with which this subject was treated in the musical dictionaries and grammars, the lecturer commenced by pointing out that either of the three component parts of Music, namely—Rhythm, Melody, and Harmony could come to a close independently of the other two, and that consequently a threefold definition of the term Close was required. The new definition of a close in Harmony he proposed was "a progression of two or more chords concluding with the tonic chord." He, however, deprecated the idea of advocating any reform in theory matters, since no one now possessed any weight of authority capable of enforcing his views. The greater part of the paper consisted of quotations from contemporary musicians, especially Grieg, Dvorák, Gounod, and Verdi, showing that of the eighty-four kinds of full closes which the lecturer stated to be possible even the most extravagant had been used, and often with good effect. After dwelling upon the extended progressions of chords which Gounod and others had invented as closes, Mr. Corder concluded by playing, as examples of very extended and novel perorations, the Codas of Grieg's "Spring Song" ("Lyrische Stückchen," Bk. III., No. 6) and Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll." The reading of the paper was followed, as usual, by a short discussion.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

THE following were the Examiners at the recent examinations: Dr. J. F. Bridge, Dr. E. J. Crow, Dr. A. E. Dyer, Dr. C. J. Frost, Dr. F. E. Gladstone, Mr. J. Higgs, Dr. E. J. Hopkins, Dr. G. C. Martin, Dr. H. Keeton, Dr. H. W. Little, Dr. C. W. Pearce, and Mr. E. H. Turpin. The successful candidates for the Fellowship were twenty-four in number, and for the Associateship fifty-two. The diplomas and certificates were distributed by Mr. Otto Goldschmidt and Dr. J. F. Bridge.

BOW AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE CHOIR.

DR. BRIDGE'S Birmingham Cantata "Callirhoë" drew an overflowing audience to the Bow and Bromley Institute, on the 26th ult. The popularity of this work, when performed under suitable conditions, seems now to be assured. It is no doubt unfortunate, from the ordinary choral society's point of view, that nearly all modern works are scored for festival orchestras; in the present instance, however, it was clearly shown that a performance, capable of provoking not merely formal applause, but undoubted enthusiasm, could be given with a small orchestra of under twenty performers.

The part of Callirhoë was splendidly interpreted by Miss Annie Marriott, and Mr. Charles Chilley was a thoroughly efficient exponent of the exacting part of Coresos. Miss Alice Lamb, who came from Manchester, sang the important part of the Priestess of Zeus with refinement and intelligence. Of the performance of the choruses by Mr. McNaught's choir, we need only say that the reputation of this experienced body of singers was fully sustained. The orchestra was led by Mr. Frye Parker, and Dr. Bridge filled in effects ad libitum on the organ. The small gongs made for this work were manipulated by Mr. Schroeder, and Mr. McNaught conducted. The second part included songs from Miss Lamb and Mr. Chilley, and a masterly performance of Handel's Organ Concerto in B flat (No. 1, Set 2), by Dr. Bridge, to the accompaniment of the orchestra. The Choir announces performances of Hamish MacCunn's "Lord Ullin's Daughter," Macfarren's "May Day," Sullivan's "Golden Legend," and Mendelssohn's "Athalie."

OBITUARY.

SEÑOR MARIANO OBIOLS, a Spanish violinist, teacher, and composer of some eminence, well known as the Director and Principal of the Lycée at Barcelona, died in his native town in the last week of December, in his eightieth year. He was born November 26, 1809. He was a pupil of Ramon Villanova and Mercadante. His first opera, "Odio ed amore," was performed at La Scala in Milan in 1837. His last, "Editta di Belcourt," was given at the Theatre of the Lycée, over which he presided, in 1874.

The tidings of the melancholy death of Madame ILMA DI MURSKA will be received by her many admirers in this country with sorrow. She was gifted with a voice of peculiar resonance and extensive compass, ranging over three octaves. This enabled her to give especial effect to such parts as Astrifiamente in the "Magic Flute," Dinorah, Isabella in "Roberto il Diavolo," and like characters which demand an unusual extent of voice for their fit exposition. Her performance as Lucia di Lammermoor, especially in the septet and the mad scene, were most remarkable, and won for her many admirers. She created the part of Senta in Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," when it was produced at Drury Lane in 1870, this being the first of Wagner's operas given in England. She was a member of a noble family in Croatia, and was born in 1835, though some of her biographers place the date of her birth in the year following, while others give 1846 as the year of her entry into the world. She studied singing with Signor and Madame Marchesi, and made her first appearance in this country on May 11, 1865, at Her Majesty's Theatre, then under the direction of Mr. Mapleson. She performed a round of operatic characters suited to her talents, with success in London, until the year 1873, when she went abroad on a lengthened tour throughout the world. In 1879 she returned to England, but the charm of her voice had become impaired in the meantime, and her success was less marked than before. She returned to America, and for a while the world lost sight of her. News came last year that she was living in poverty and obscurity in New York, and means were provided to enable her to return to Munich. There she lived in retirement, and it is asserted also in straitened means, until the 14th ult., when she expired suddenly. The tragedy of her death was intensified by the fact that her daughter, who had been married to an Austrian nobleman, committed suicide over her mother's body. Their remains were cremated at Gotha on the 23rd ult. Madame di Murska was thrice married, her last husband being an Englishman, who survives her.

The musical world received another shock by the unexpected death of Dr. FRANCIS HUEFFER, musical critic of the Times newspaper, which sad event occurred on the 19th ult. The immediate cause of death was weakness of the heart, aggravated by an attack of erysipelas, brought on through a cold caught while riding outside an omnibus. He was born at Münster, in Westphalia, in 1843, and came to England in 1869, after a short sojourn in Paris, Leipzig, and Berlin. He took the degree of Ph.D. at Göttingen University in 1870, his thesis being an essay on Guillem de Cabestanh. He also wrote a book on "The Troubadours," and, in conjunction with Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, produced an opera at Drury Lane, under the auspices of Mr. Carl Rosa, on his favourite theme. He likewise, with the same composer and under the same direction, brought out his "Colomba," based upon a story by Prosper Mérimée, the author of "Carmen." He wrote a number of articles for various magazines, supplied the English words of many songs by foreign composers, wrote several of the musical biographies for the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and was a hard-working journalist generally. He edited the Musical Review during the period of its existence, as well as the Musical World for the short time in which he held a proprietary interest in that journal. He succeeded the late Mr. J. W. Davison on the Times newspaper on his retirement, and held that post at the period of his death. He was an ardent supporter of Wagner, and translated into English the letters which passed between Liszt and the Bayreuth musician. His predilections led him to judge everything by the standpoint of Wagnerism, and consequently his views with regard to the music of all other composers were narrow and to a certain extent unsympathetic. He was an able scholar, and—for a German—a remarkably fluent writer of English. He married, in 1873, a daughter of Mr. Ford Madox Brown, the artist, and leaves three children with their mother to mourn his loss.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

OUR local musical record for January, like Viola's history, is "a blank, my lord," in all that concerns the higher interests of the art; but there has been no lack of popular ballad Concerts, dance music, and comic vocalism of the music hall type, the latter chiefly in connection with the three Birmingham pantomimes. New Year's Eve was celebrated in the Town Hall by a miscellaneous Concert, at popular prices, under the direction of Mr. H. M. Parker, when the chief successes of the evening were the vocal performances of Mr. Charles Slater and Mr. F. G. Hughes. The former was especially effective in "The Star of Bethlehem," whilst Mr. Hughes' powerful bass voice was heard to great advantage in the old German drinking song "In cellar cool." Miss Julia Hutchings and Mr. and Mrs. Myers also acquitted themselves very creditably, whilst the Birmingham Trombone Quartet, in several well chosen selections, imparted an acceptable variety to the entertainment.

In connection with the presentations to Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Chamberlain, on the occasion of their home return after their honeymoon, a musical entertainment was given in the Town Hall, on the 9th ult. The vocalists were Miss Edwards, Mr. Alfred Jordan, and Mr. W. Lee Mathews, and the organ was in the competent hands of Mr. C. W. Perkins. Of the programme, it will suffice to say that it was of a popular and patriotic character, and in compliment to the bride included "Hail, Columbia."

The Old Amateur Harmonic Society—to which our triennial Festivals are indebted for a large contingent of well trained musical voices, and to which the public owe its first introduction to many interesting choral and orchestral works of home and foreign origin—has dissolved, owing to a steadily declining membership and lack of support for the public or semi-public Concerts which the Society has been in the habit of giving from time to time. The Society has done excellent service in its day, but for some years past it has been obviously suffering from the competition of more popular musical undertakings. It is just thirty-three years since the foundation of the Society, and in the course of its career it has given over 100 Concerts and open nights in addition to its private rehearsals. The Society possesses a valuable and extensive musical library, which it may possibly be induced to present to the town.

A rather brisk controversy has sprung up in the local papers with reference to the terms of letting the Town Hall for Concerts and musical entertainments. Messrs. Harrison, who are our most popular and successful, if not always our most ambitious, musical caterers, complain with some show of reason that they are charged the full tariff rate of £10 for each performance, exclusive of extras, whilst other Concert-givers whom they specify are allowed the use of the hall on merely nominal terms. The answer of the authorities, that exceptions have been made from time to time in favour of musical entertainments of an educational tendency, or which are given for public purposes, does not appear to be quite satisfactory to Messrs. Harrison and their friends, and there is a general feeling among musicians and the public that our Town Hall letting arrangements need revising. The hall costs the ratepayers £2,000 a year and produces in fees barely £200.

The fashion of invitation Chamber Concerts, which was introduced here a couple of seasons ago by Messrs. Rogers and Priestley, is extending in private circles, and some of the pleasantest musical re-unions of the season are those of amateurs like Mr. G. E. Belliss, of Kings Norton, and Mr. G. H. Johnstone, of Handsworth, with whom the widow of the late lamented Joseph Maas has been spending Christmas. On the 7th ult. Mr. Belliss's Concert took the form of a Mendelssohn evening, when the composer's Quartet for pianoforte and strings, in F minor, and his Trio for pianoforte and strings, in C minor, were the leading features of the programme. On the 19th, the first part of the Concert was devoted to Schumann's works, including his Quartet for pianoforte and strings, in E flat (Op. 47), and Andante and Variations (Op. 46), for two pianofortes. In the second part of the Concert, Chopin's Rondo in C (Op. 73), for two pianofortes, and Mendelssohn's Trio in C minor were the leading features. A young German pianist, Miss Alice Dessauer, a pupil of Madame Schumann, produced a great impression by the fervour, power, and brilliancy of her performance, more especially in Schumann's "Faschingswank." The other instrumentalists were Mrs. Hale, one of our most accomplished local pianists, who fairly shared the honours with Fraülein Dessauer; Mr. F. Ward (violin), Mr. G. W. Priestley (viola), Mr. A. J. Priestley (violoncello), and Mr. C. W. Perkins, the Town Hall Organist. Mr. Gervas Cooper was the principal vocalist at both Concerts, assisted at the second by Miss Ethel Belliss, a daughter of the host, who possesses a sweet, fresh, and well-trained soprano voice, as well as marked musical intelligence.

The first important musical event of the New Year will be Messrs. Harrison's third Concert, on the 4th inst., when the vocalists will be Madame Lilian Nordica, Madame Trebelli, Mr. Orlando Harley, and Signor Foli, and the instrumentalists will be little Otto Hegner, Miss Marianne Eissler, and Mr. W. Ganz. Mr. Stockley's second Orchestral Concert takes place on the 7th inst., when the vocalists will be Madame Antoinette Trebelli and Mr. Edward Lloyd, and the band will consist as usual of eighty performers, under the direction of Mr. Stockley.

MUSIC IN DEVON AND CORNWALL.

ON Thursday, December 27, the Redruth Choral Society rendered Handel's "Messiah" at the United Methodist Chapel, Mr. R. H. Heath acting as Conductor and Miss M. J. Moody (eldest sister of Miss Fanny Moody) presiding at the organ. The chorus numbered nearly 100 voices, and there was a string band from Plymouth, led by Mr. John Pardew, Conductor of Plymouth Vocal Association. The principal soloists were Mrs. L. Smith, Mrs. Rodda, Mrs. Polkinghorne, Miss Annie Hooper, Messrs. Polkinghorne, W. H. Hitchens, C. D. Bartle, Symons, E. Vincent, Bray, and Master Leo Heath.

On Monday, the 7th ult., the Ellacombe Choral Society, Torquay, gave an excellent Concert, which included several selections from Rossini's "Stabat Mater." The soloists were Miss Farrant, the Rev. A. J. Hamblin, Mr. G. Tucker, and Mr. Jacob. A miscellaneous Concert was also given, the various numbers being sustained by Miss Way, Mr. S. Blackmore, Mr. Hannaford, and Mr. Lockyer. The solos, duets, and choruses were excellently rendered, and were deservedly applauded. Mr. A. J. Pratt acted as Conductor and Mr. Farrant presided at the harmonium.

On the 16th ult. a Concert was given at the Plymouth Guildhall, the principal vocalist being Madame Minnie Hauk, whose Carmen has made her famous throughout the world. The other soloists were Madame Belle Cole, M. Tivadar Nachéz, the well-known violinist; Herr Schönbberger, pianist; Mr. Charles Banks, and Mr. Arthur Oswald. The singing of Madame Minnie Hauk was greatly admired, as was also the violin playing of M. Tivadar Nachéz. The other soloists were very successful.

On Friday, the 11th ult., a Concert was given at the Polytechnic Hall, Falmouth, by Miss White, assisted by Miss Kate Fusselle, Miss E. Dixon, Mrs. R. Lukey, Herr H. Freund (violinist), Truro; and Mr. Charles José, which was most successful, the solos of Miss Kate Fusselle being highly appreciated. During the evening a number of Miss White's pupils performed several solos on the pianoforte and violin.

A Concert was given at Plymton Guildhall, on Wednesday, the 9th ult., by Miss Grace Pinwill. The Concert opened with a duet by Miss M. Pinwill (pianoforte), and Miss Grace Pinwill (violin)—an Allegro from Beethoven's Sonata (No. 5)—which was given with great spirit and precision. Miss Lavinia Lampin and Mr. C. W. Robinson (Falmouth) were the vocalists. Mr. Tatnor performed some violoncello solos in a creditable manner.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE first meeting of the Dublin Musical Society (re-constituted 1889) was held in the Antient Concert Rooms, on the 16th ult., and was largely attended by old and new subscribers. The business was the discussion of the rules and scheme drawn up by the provisional committee, which, after some debate, were adopted unanimously. The meeting then proceeded to the election of a permanent committee by ballot. Twelve representatives of the subscribers were chosen, to whom are to be added four representatives of the guarantors, and it is expected that the musical business of the Society will at once proceed, practically as though no dissolution had taken place, thanks to the prompt and praiseworthy action of some of its energetic members.

Two Concerts by the Marie Roze Opera Company were given in the Leinster Hall, on the 17th and 19th ult., and were well attended. The popular prima donna was assisted by Mdles. Marie Titiens and Carlotta Desvignes and Signors Ria and Novara (vocalists), Signor Simonetti (violinist), and Signor Bisaccia (accompanist).

The Concert announced by Mrs. Hutchinson and Messrs. Plunkett Greene and Drummond Hamilton attracted a large and fashionable assembly to the Antient Concert Rooms, on the 17th ult. In addition to the above-mentioned vocalists, Mrs. Scott-Ffennell, Signor Papini (violinist), and Mr. W. H. Collisson, Mus. B. (pianist), contributed to the success of a very enjoyable performance of well selected music. The singing by Mrs. Hutchinson of Gounod's "Ave Maria," by Mr. Plunkett Greene of "Nazareth," by Mrs. Scott-Ffennell of "La Cieca" (Gounod), and by Mr. Hamilton of Grieg's "Ragnhild" was much admired. Some quartets were also charmingly given by this talented party, and Signor Papini and Mr. Collisson each contributed a solo on his instrument. The pianoforte accompaniments were played by the last-named gentleman.

The Royal Dublin Society's Chamber Music Recitals were resumed after the Christmas holidays, on Monday, the 14th ult. At this and at the following Recital (21st ult.) the programme consisted of Beethoven's Quartet in G major, for strings (Op. 18, No. 2), admirably played by Signor Papini, Mr. Newman, Herr Lauer, and Mr. Rudersdorff; Brahms's Sonata in A major, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 100), by Messrs. Esposito and Papini; and Mendelssohn's Trio in C minor, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, of which last-named work the performance by Messrs. Esposito, Papini, and Rudersdorff seemed to lack no quality of excellence in tone, technique, or expression.

The first appearance of Madame Nordica at the Saturday Popular Concerts was promised for the 26th ult., in company with Madame Joyce Maas and the Dublin Quartet Union, but too late for notice in the present letter.

Master Otto Hegner is announced to give two Pianoforte Recitals on the 30th ult. and the 1st inst.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

ON New Year's Day the members of the Choral Union gave a very successful performance of "The Messiah," the Music Hall being filled to overflowing. The principal vocalists were Miss Resch Pettersen (soprano)—her first appearance here—Madame Annie Grey (contralto), Mr. Gledhill (tenor), who, sitting among the audience, was unexpectedly called upon to replace Mr. Newbury; and Mr. Horsfall (bass). The accompaniments were played by Mr. Charles Bradley (organ) and Mr. Scott Jupp (pianoforte). Miss Resch Pettersen made a very favourable impression, her rendering of "I know that my Redeemer liveth" being especially good; Madame Annie Grey distinguished herself notably in "He was despised." The choruses throughout went very steadily, and did credit to Mr. Collinson, the Conductor.

The third Orchestral Concert took place on the 7th ult., the soloists being Madame Belle Cole and Mons. A. Gillet, leader of the violoncellists. The programme consisted of Grieg's Overture "Autumn," Raff's Concerto for violoncello and orchestra, in D (Op. 193), Symphonic Prelude to Byron's "Manfred," by F. Praeger; Beethoven's Symphony (No. 2), an Intermezzo for strings "Loin du Bal," by A. Gillet, and Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody (No. 1). Madame Belle Cole sang a Recitative and Aria "Awake, Saturnia," from Handel's "Semele," and "Knowest thou the land," from Ambrose Thomas's "Mignon." The best effort of the orchestra was undoubtedly the Hungarian Rhapsody, whilst with regard to the soloists, Madame Belle Cole and Mons. Gillet were recalled, the former choosing to sing, as encore, the song "Better bide a wee," which after a superb rendering of her "Mignon" song was, to say the least, in somewhat questionable taste.

On the Monday following, the 14th ult., we had the fourth Concert of the series, with Mdle. Elvira Gambogi as vocalist and Madame Helen Hopekirk as solo pianist. The latter, being fresh from her renewed studies in Vienna under Leschetitzky, was an especial attraction. Her rendering of Beethoven's Concerto (No. 5, E flat) certainly revealed the fact that she had improved immensely, particularly in breadth of style and repose. Her technique is clear and brilliant. It is to be regretted that the pianoforte used on the occasion was out of tune with the orchestra. This naturally marred the ensemble playing. Madame Hopekirk's solos were Menuetto Capriccioso in E flat (Leschetitzky), "Träumerei" (Schumann), and "The Erl-King" (Schubert-Liszt). She was twice recalled. The vocal pieces were Gounod's "Jewel Song," Schumann's "Lotos flower," and G. J. Bennett's Serenade, to all of which Mdle. Gambogi did full justice. The principal orchestral items were Dr. Villiers Stanford's "Irish" Symphony (first time in Scotland) and Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's "Benedictus" for violin and orchestra, each being received with great applause. Mr. Manns conducted with his usual energy and ability.

Madame Helen Hopekirk accepted an engagement offered her by the Directors of the Literary Institute, and gave in their hall a Pianoforte Recital later in the week, the 17th ult., in which she even more fully confirmed the above expressed opinion. Beethoven's "Appassionata," three pieces of Chopin, a set of Variations by Nawratil (a master with whom she had been studying composition), a Caprice of Leschetitzky, and Liszt's Twelfth Hungarian Rhapsody formed her programme.

The Edinburgh Society of Musicians had the good fortune to hear a most interesting Lecture from Professor Tait (Edinburgh University), on the subject of "How sounds reach the ear," illustrated with experiments and explanations. The Society expressed their appreciation of the Lecture by a hearty vote of thanks, given by the President, Mr. Otto Schweizer. Professor Tait has very kindly promised to give further Lectures on like subjects.

On the evening of the 22nd ult. the fifth Orchestral Concert took place. Mr. Hamish MacCunn's "Bonny Kilmeny" was performed, conducted by the composer, who was warmly received by the large audience present. Madame Agnes Larkcom, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint sang the solos. Various choral pieces by Mr. Kirkhope's choir followed, and Schumann's First Symphony was performed, under the direction of Mr. Manns.

After the Concert Mr. Manns and Mr. Hamish MacCunn were entertained at supper by the Edinburgh Society of Musicians, when over a hundred gentlemen were present. Both Mr. Manns and Mr. MacCunn were made honorary members of the Society.

Sir Herbert Oakeley's Thursday Organ Recitals, which this winter generally alternate with open lectures, maintain their popularity. On the 24th ult. the selection of pieces played included extracts from the works of Sir Frederick A. Gore Ouseley, Kullak, Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Brosig, Ravina, and Viviani.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW AND THE WEST OF SCOTLAND.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE usual performance of Handel's "Messiah" was given by the Glasgow Choral Union, in St. Andrew's Hall, on New Year's Day, and, as hitherto, there was a very large assemblage, among which were many people from the country. The Choral Union was in full force, and the accompaniments were played by the regular orchestra of the Society, this old established New Year's Day performance of "The Messiah" now forming part of the yearly series of Concerts. The principal vocalists were Madame Samuell, Miss Damian, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Robert Grice. Mr. Joseph Bradley conducted. What was, on the whole, a fairly good presentation of the immortal Oratorio was sadly marred by the quick rate at which certain of the choruses were taken, a proceeding which caused unevenness and indecision.

At the Orchestral Concert of the evening of New Year's Day, a programme of a somewhat light cast was performed, and on the evening of the 3rd ult., at the Subscription Concert, the Overture "Im Herbst" (In Autumn), by Grieg, and the Introduction to "Tristan and Isolde" (Wagner) were played for the first time at these Concerts; the Beethoven Concerto, for violin and orchestra, in which the principal part was taken by Mr. Maurice Sons, was also heard. Madame Belle Cole was the vocalist.

At the Saturday Popular Concerts of the 5th and 12th ult., the following principal selections were played:—Introduction to "Colomba" (Mackenzie), always much admired; the "Voices of the Forest" (Wagner), Concerto for clarinet and orchestra, No. 1 (Weber), Mr. J. Clinton, soloist; the No. 1 Symphony in C (Beethoven), the "Jupiter" Symphony (Mozart), Concerto for violin and orchestra, in A minor (Vieuxtemps), Mr. Maurice Sons (leading violin of the band) in the solo part. The programmes of the Subscription Concerts on the evenings of the 8th and 15th ult. comprised chiefly Raff's Concerto for violoncello and orchestra, in D (Op. 93), Mr. E. Gillet taking the solo part with very marked approval; Praeger's Symphonic Prelude to Byron's "Manfred," and the No. 2 Symphony of Beethoven, together with selections from the "Rosamunde" music of Schubert, Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra (No. 5), in E flat, with Madame Hopekirk at the solo instrument; and the "Irish" Symphony of Villiers Stanford, heard here for the first time and played with great ability and decided approval. Mdle. E. Gambogi was the vocalist at the Concerts of the 12th and 15th ult.

At the Popular Concert of the 19th ult. H. MacCunn's Ballad for orchestra "The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow," was presented for the second time here, other principal items in the programme being the Overture "Leonore" (No. 2), of Beethoven, and Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony. Miss Agnes Larkcom contributed some songs which were favourably received.

The chief selections at the eighth Subscription Concert, on the 22nd ult., were Schumann's No. 1 Symphony in B flat, the Ballad for orchestra, "The ship o' the fiend," by H. MacCunn (for the first time in Scotland, and well received), and Bruch's Concerto for violin and orchestra (No. 1), in G minor, in which Mr. George Müller, ripieno violin, took the solo part. Miss Agnes Larkcom was the vocalist.

On the 17th ult. the experiment was made of giving Concerts by the Choral Union orchestra in outlying districts of the city, at popular prices, a well selected programme of instrumental music being performed in the Drill Hall of the 3rd Lanarkshire Volunteers on that evening, in presence of a very numerous audience. The idea is likely to be further developed.

The new Gilbert and Sullivan opera, "The Yeomen of the Guard," was played here for the first time on December 31, and had three weeks of a most successful run. The Carl Rosa Light Opera Company opened an engagement on the 21st ult., with Planchette's adapted opera "Paul Jones." It is felt that the title assumed by the Company is hardly justified by the work it appears in. There is plenty of much better music more correctly falling under the description of Light Opera.

The Greenock Choral Union gave their first Concert of the season in the Town Hall, on December 28, and it is gratifying to be able to state, as showing the increasing interest excited by the production of good music, that the hall was crowded in every part on the occasion. The programme consisted of Hamish MacCunn's "Lord Ullin's Daughter," Sullivan's "The Golden Legend," and the first movement of a Suite entitled "In Summer time," composed by Mr. W. T. Hoeck, the Conductor of the Society. Miss Agnes Larkcom, Mrs. Paterson Cross, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Andrew Black were the principal vocalists, and the Concert was thoroughly successful. The performance of Sir Arthur Sullivan's work was artistic in a marked degree. Mr. W. T. Hoeck conducted.

The Paisley Choral Union gave a successful performance of "The Messiah," on the 18th ult., Mr. James Barr conducting.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Philharmonic Society has now entered upon the second half of its season's programme, which promises to be at least as interesting as that which has gone before; and, as it approaches, the "Dream of Jubal," which is to celebrate the jubilee of our premier Society, is fully commented upon as likely to still further enhance the reputation of Dr. Mackenzie. It is now in active rehearsal, the performance taking place on the 5th inst.

At the seventh Concert of the Philharmonic Society, which was given on the 8th ult., the predilections of Sir Charles Hallé were again to the fore in the production of Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique and Wagner's "Ride of the Walkyries." These, which have often been heard in the same hall, received full justice on this occasion. The work of the band also included the Overtures: E minor, of Schubert, the "Melusina," by Mendelssohn, and Beethoven's "Gratulations" minuet, as well as two piquant little compositions by Grieg. Madame Nordica was the only solo vocalist, and made a brilliant success in her singing of selections from Mozart's "Seraglio" and from "Mignon."

At the Concert of the 22nd inst., the chief features were the interpretation of Brahms's "Gipsy Songs," by Miss Lena Little, Miss Fillunger, Mr. Shakespeare, and Mr. Thorndike, and the violin playing of Mr. Willy Hess.

Birkenhead's Subscription Concerts are always classical, enjoyable, and now—although it was not always the case—are highly appreciated. The entertainment of the 9th ult. was quite up to the average, the artists including Sir Charles Hallé and his accomplished wife. Foremost in the programme, both in order and importance, was Dvorák's Quintet (Op. 84), a work which is at the same time charming, scholarly, and likely to become popular at Chamber Concerts. Of the four movements, the second, with the significant music allotted to the pianoforte, is certainly the most impressive, being perfect in proportion, beautifully balanced, and worked out to an effective conclusion. The Finale is full of busy earnestness and brilliant scoring, rich in invention and detail, and serving as an admirable contrast to the more delicate workmanship of the earlier movements. The performance of this work was beyond comment in its masterly efficiency and intelligent reading. Another well executed number was Mendelssohn's Quartet No. 2 in E flat, and in addition to these Sir Charles and Lady Hallé joined in a Schubert Rondo, and separately played Beethoven's "Moonlight" Sonata and Wieniawski's "Légende" in G minor respectively.

If "The Messiah" is peculiarly appropriate at Christmas time, "Elijah" is welcome all the year round, and the performance on the 16th ult., by the Xaverian Choral Society, showed that the work had been well studied and rehearsed. Mr. John Ross is an able Conductor and a discriminating musician, and it was pleasing to find that he had so well inculcated in his forces the feelings of earnestness and sympathy which are essential to a true reading of "Elijah." The chorus was bright and accurate, and the band efficient. The principal singers were of local reputation, including Madame Laura Haworth, Miss Hallwood, Mr. Bradley, and Mr. Edward Grime. In his assumption of the rôle of the Prophet, Mr. Grime has made another substantial step forward in his art.

The return of the Carl Rosa Opera Company has had the usual welcome, and the round of performances has comprised, in addition to the stock operas, the "Puritan's Daughter" and Halévy's "Jewess." The revival of the latter has called forth special encomiums. Of the chief singers, Mr. Barton McGuckin gave a very capable presentation of Eleazar, and Miss Fabris as The Princess and Miss Groll as Rachel were admirable in their respective rôles. In other respects the artistic success of Mr. Rosa's present season has been sadly interfered with by the indisposition of several of the principal members of the company, due to the singularly adverse weather of the New Year.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

OUR most interesting musical event during January was the long delayed introduction into Manchester of Dr.

Mackenzie's Oratorio "The Rose of Sharon." The performance, on the 10th ult., was in every respect very successful, and it is important that we should notice how completely groundless has proved the fear which was said to deter our larger Concert-givers from venturing upon choral novelties. The fact is that there is no place in the kingdom having the resources which this city enjoys, and surrounded, as Manchester is, with a teeming host of lovers of choral music, in which so little opportunity is afforded of becoming acquainted with works thus peculiarly meeting our English taste. The excitement created by the announcement of Dr. Mackenzie's Oratorio was proved by the fact that every seat in the Free Trade Hall was occupied, and by the close attention paid to a really admirable rendering of a work so original in design and execution, and therefore so little likely to be at once adequately appreciated or to produce on a first hearing its full effect. In spite of a difficulty in entering into the inner meaning of the libretto, and the consequent strain of mind in endeavouring to penetrate the allegory veiled by words evidently used in a mystic sense, the continuity of idea pervading the whole of the music, the wealth of melody enriching its fertile flow, and the complete mastery evinced over all the means of expression, proved the composer's possession of powers sufficient for the production of a yet greater work, when supplied with a subject affording opportunities for more varied treatment. Madame Nordica and Mr. Watkin Mills appeared hardly so thoroughly conversant with the music, or so completely in accordance with its spirit, as might have been desirable; but Mr. E. Lloyd was admirable, and Miss Hope Glenn decidedly advanced her reputation. The choir appeared to great advantage; and, at the organ, Mr. Fogg managed with good judgment to give, without obtrusiveness, the requisite weight and support.

At Sir Charles Hallé's other Concerts during the month there have been capital renderings of Brahms's Fourth and of Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphonies, of Schumann's melodious "Genoveva" Overture, and of Bizet's Suite "Roma," in which the Vivace and Vivacissimo proved as exciting as before, although the more ambitious movements perhaps scarcely maintained their effect. The band has also been as skilfully, but less worthily, occupied with the "Héroïde Elégiaque" and the "Mazeppa" poem of Liszt. Signor Piatti gave us, on the 17th ult., his Concertino in A minor; and Lady Hallé, on the 3rd ult., played Beethoven's Violin Concerto in a style to be long remembered. Miss Macintyre and Miss Liza Lehmann (so opposite in temperament) have been the vocalists, in addition to Madame Hess, a mezzo-soprano of considerable power and purity of tone, and likely to be very useful.

Mr. de Jong also has discovered the charm of Dr. Mackenzie's orchestration, and on the 19th followed his previous selections by the "Rhapsodie Ecossaïse," a work of great vitality. In playing the "Concertstück" of the Danish musician, Joachim Andersen, he has enlarged the repertory of our flute lovers, and he is to be thanked for affording us a second opportunity of listening to the pianoforte playing of Mr. Bartle, of Southport. As usual, Mr. de Jong's supply of vocalists has been liberal—in quantity, at any rate.

Sir Charles Hallé's afternoon Recitals at the Concert Hall become increasingly attractive, and offer evident suggestions as to the future of that institution; and at the Town Hall Mr. Pyne's Organ Recitals continue popular. Otto Hegner also has been here again, exciting great enthusiasm.

Dr. Watson deserves praise for his boldness in presenting Tallis's forty-part Motet, so lately become accessible through the exertions of Dr. Mann, of Cambridge. There is no difficulty of execution except such as, in a small choir like that of the Vocal Society, arises from intrusting each part to a single voice occasionally hardly capable of bearing the strain. But as a specimen of ingenious part-writing—much more talked about than known—the performance was very interesting, and drew together a large number of students of counterpoint.

Musical score for "I Love the Jocund Dance." The score is written for voice and piano. It features a key signature of one flat (B-flat) and a common time signature (C). The tempo is marked "Allegretto" (implied by the notation). The score is divided into two systems, each with five staves. The first system contains the first two lines of the song, and the second system contains the remaining three lines. The lyrics are: "I love the pleasant, pleasant cot, I love the pleasant, I love the pleasant, pleasant cot, I love the pleasant, I love the bow'r so in - no - cent, I love the pleasant, pleasant cot, I love the bow'r so in - no - cent, I love the innocent bow'r, Where white and brown is our lot, where white and brown is our lot, where white and brown is our lot." NOW READY.

FREDERICK CHOPIN

AS A MAN AND MUSICIAN

BY

FREDERICK NIECKS.

Ce beau génie est moins un musicien qu'une âme qui se rend sensible.—H. DE BALZAC.

IN TWO VOLUMES, CLOTH GILT, PRICE TWENTY-FIVE SHILLINGS.

WITH A PORTRAIT, ETCHED BY H. R. ROBERTSON, AND FAC-SIMILES OF THE COMPOSER'S MS.

EXTRACTS FROM PREFACE.

My guiding principle has been to place before the reader the facts collected by me as well as the conclusions at which I arrived. This will enable him to see the subject in all its bearings, with all its pros and cons, and to draw his own conclusions should mine not obtain his approval.

Whatever the defects of the present volumes may be—and, no doubt, they are both great and many—I have laboured to the full extent of my humble abilities to group and present my material perspicuously, and to avoid diffuseness and rhapsody, those besetting sins of writers on music.

My researches had for their object the whole life of Chopin and his historical, political, artistic, social, and personal surroundings, but they were chiefly directed to the least known and most interesting period of his career—his life in France, and his visits to Germany and Great Britain. My chief sources of information are divisible into two classes—newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, correspondences, and books; and conversations I held with, and letters I received from Chopin's pupils, friends, and acquaintances.

Prefixed to the first volume of the present biography the reader will find one of the portraits by Kwiatkowski, an etching after a charming pencil drawing in my possession, the reproduction of which the artist has kindly permitted.

"The two volumes are so rich in absolutely new facts concerning Chopin's life, and so valuable in interesting and for the most part unprejudiced analytical comments upon the composer's works, that in the future we may reasonably expect the book to be frequently quoted whenever the writings of the 'Ariel of the pianoforte' are in question. To the large majority of readers, however, the true story—told with all the evidence that can be collected from letters and from the reports of onlookers to support the truth—of the romantic love of the pianist-composer for the eminent novelist, Madame George Sand, will be of the supremest interest. Nearly 200 pages are devoted to this episode, which was not only the most momentous incident of Chopin's career, but which also practically broke his heart and led to his early death. . . . The volumes likewise contain a full list of Chopin's works, an index, an etching from one of the portraits by Kwiatkowski (so different from the glorified drawing by Ary Scheffer), and a fac-simile of Chopin's delicate penmanship from one of the 'Etudes,' which, with the preludes, mazourkas, waltzes, polonaises, and the rest, are a great deal more popular in English drawing-rooms now than they were at the date of the composer's death, a few months short of forty years ago."—Daily News.

"Mr. Niecks's work at once takes its place among standard biographies of Great Musicians—the first complete and wholly satisfactory life of Chopin that has been written. Mr. Niecks may be assured that its successful achievements places him in the front rank of musical biographers; while, at the same time, the production of so able and adequate a work adds one more to the laurels earned by the distinguished firm that has already given us in English form Otto Jahn's 'Mozart' and Spitta's 'Bach.'"—Sunday Times.

"It is an admirable, well-contrived, and interesting biography, in which one of the most important items is formed by Chopin's own letters. . . . How the work is brought out is said in two words: it is published by Novello & Co. That is sufficient guarantee."—The World.

LONDON & NEW YORK: NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

Musical Societies are hard at work again after the relaxation of the holidays, and the number of dates of Concerts that are being rapidly announced promise that the season is likely to finish as busily as it began.

Four performances of "The Messiah" were given on Christmas Day. *At the Albert Hall Mr. Orlando Harley sang the tenor music. The other soloists were Miss Julia Jones, Miss L. Dews, and Mr. Elijah Jackson. Mr. William Brown conducted and Mr. J. W. Phillips was Organist. At the performance of the work by the Choral Union, in the Music Hall, Mr. Philip Newbury took the place of Mr. Redfern Hollins, who was indisposed. The other principals were Madame Adeline Paget, Miss Julia Lennox, and Mr. Arthur Rousbey. The fine chorus-singing was especially appreciated.

On the 18th ult. Sir Charles and Lady Hallé gave a Recital in the Albert Hall, Mr. Santley being the vocalist. Mr. Sims Reeves had been announced, but owing to indisposition he was unable to appear. The change did not affect the attendance, for the large hall was densely crowded. Sir Charles gave a magnificent rendering of the "Waldstein" Sonata, and Grieg's quaint and characteristic Suite "Aus dem Volksleben" provided the pianist with opportunities for a more varied display of his executive and interpretative skill. In conjunction with Lady Hallé Sir Charles played Schumann's Sonata in A minor (Op. 105) and Max Bruch's Violin Concerto in G minor. The gifted violinist roused the utmost enthusiasm. Lady Hallé also played two short pieces by Wieniawski—Légende and Mazurka—in her most finished and effective style.

Mr. William Brown's weekly Popular Concerts, in the Albert Hall, have re-commenced. On the 12th ult. "Paganini Redivivus" gave a Violin Recital, assisted by the band of the Hallamshire Rifles. On the 26th ult. Miss Edith L. McKnight, F.C.O., gave an Organ Recital in the Albert Hall, playing pieces by Bach, Mendelssohn, Lemmens, Rink, Batiste, &c.

Mr. A. R. Gaul's Cantata "Joan of Arc" has been selected by three local Societies for performance at their spring Concerts.

The Council of the Amateur Musical Society have announced Mr. F. H. Cowen's "Sleeping Beauty" for the second Concert.

MUSIC IN WALES AND MONMOUTHSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Park Hall at Cardiff is being amply utilised for the purposes of popular music. The public ought to be thankful in a general sense. They have not only been provided with the Saturday night Concerts directed by Mr. Jacob Davies, but with a series of Sunday afternoon Popular Concerts (at which Mr. Davies's Choir have also appeared). Already the public response has been encouraging, and it may be noted that the project receives the co-operation of various ministers and laymen well known in the locality.

The new lecturer on music at the University College of South Wales, Cardiff—Dr. Parry—was presented, on the 17th ult., at Ebenezzer Chapel, Swansea, with a purse of money, to mark the occasion of his departure. Dr. Parry is well known in Swansea, where he has lived many years, and the meeting naturally suggested to the various speakers many reminiscences of the past. In acknowledging the presentation Dr. Parry observed that in history they found the growth of music had been in the Sanctuary, and he should like to see the Sanctuary in Wales do as much as had been done in connection with the Roman Catholic Church in Italy. Various comments have been made in local musical circles upon the objects which it appears the recipient of the gift has in view. But it is generally agreed that the advancement of musical interests in Wales on broad lines, for the benefit of the public and of professors as a body, is a matter to which all musicians should continue to give attention.

At Dolgelly, on New Year's Day, the sixteenth annual Eisteddfod of Merionethshire terminated with the performance of Gounod's "Mors et Vita" at the Town Hall, by the Idris Choral Society, assisted by an orchestra composed of Liverpool professionals and local amateurs, under the conductorship of Mr. O. O. Roberts. The vocalists were Madame Laura Haworth, Miss Lucy Clarke, Eos Morlais, and Mr. David Hughes. Mr. Griffiths presided at the harmonium, whilst Master Hugh Jones acted as pianist. It was understood that the orchestra and chorus met for work at the Concert without a single rehearsal. This is a state of things that should not be allowed anywhere, especially in Wales. It would be manifestly unfair to criticise in detail the performance under the circumstances, but it may be said that on the whole the performance was meritorious, if not well calculated to advance the standard of music in the Principality.

The Chamber Music Concert (fourth of the series), held at the Park Hall, Cardiff, on the 23rd ult., was of a very successful character. The programme was sustained by Miss Bateman, Mr. Joseph Ludwig, Mr. Whitehouse, and Mr. W. H. Wing.

Among other events may be noted the opening of the new organ at the Unitarian Chapel, Swansea; and a Concert given at Rhymney, on the 22nd ult., in aid of the Brass Band Fund. The attendance at the Concert was very satisfactory.

MUSIC IN THE WEST OF ENGLAND.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

MUSICAL interest in this part of England has found its chief centre of attraction during the past month in Bristol, where the Madrigal Society gave their open or ladies' night on the evening of Thursday, the 17th ult. This annual event not only arouses a great deal of musical enthusiasm in Bristol and the surrounding districts, but eminent musicians from the metropolis and other and more distant parts of the country have at various times been the honoured guests of the Society. Bearing in mind that the Bristol Madrigal Society has a history of its own, which cannot fail to be of interest to all lovers of choral singing, it is thought that perhaps the following few lines might in some measure commend themselves to the readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES.

In 1837 the then Gresham professor of music at the University of Oxford, Professor Taylor, visited Bristol for the purpose of giving some lectures on music with a special reference to madrigals. It would seem that the learned lecturer's remarks on the latter did not fall on dull ears, for some of those who heard them were seized with a desire to become nearer acquainted with this particular branch of musical composition. These gentlemen, whose names are still locally cherished, soon arranged all preliminaries, and the first meeting was held on March 1, 1837, at the residence of Mr. Alfred Bleack, who became the first president of the new Society, a post he filled, according to every creditable report, with great honour for thirty years. It will of course be understood that this beginning was but a small one, the number of vocalists present being seven boy choristers, four altos, seven tenors, and seven basses, a total of twenty-five voices. The Conductor elected was Mr. J. D. Corfe, at that time Organist of Bristol Cathedral, and the Society sang under his conductorship for twenty-eight years—till 1865, when he was succeeded by the Society's present able Conductor and trainer, Mr. D. W. Rootham.

The next year, 1838, the vocalists numbered thirty-five, and it is recorded that among them were Sir John Rogers and Mr. T. Oliphant (president and vice-president of the London Madrigal Society) and Mr. John Loder. These first meetings were held at an hotel of much antiquarian interest, The Montague, Kingsdown Parade, where the practices of the Society are still held, more for "auld lang syne" than from any consideration of individual convenience. Later on, for a brief period, the place of meeting was changed to the Royal Gloster Hotel, Hotwells Road. The building still exists, but after having been the recruiting station for the city it is now let out in tenements, and the Hotwells Road is, to say the least of it, at present hardly the place ladies and gentlemen would elect to congregate by night. After this the Society met where it still meets, in the Victoria Rooms. These changes of locale are of interest as indicating the direction the wave of domicile fashion has taken. Amongst one of the first members of the Bristol Madrigal Society was Robert Lucas Pearsall, who lived at Bitton, between Bristol and Bath.

This accomplished musician threw himself heart and soul into the work and aims of the Society, and has enriched its musical library with numerous compositions dedicated to it.

It is extraordinary that Bristol boasts of no "marble memorial" or statue to such a man as Pearsall, considering what he did for musical art in the locality. Were it not for the annotated programmes issued at the annual Concerts of the Madrigal Society, Bristolians would soon forget that Pearsall was in any way whatever associated with their venerable city. In connection with the Society might it not be suggested to its members to form a library, or rather, perhaps, a collection of everything bearing upon the Society, its life and work, such as letters, prints, programmes, and even caricatures, if such exist. The Bristol Madrigal Society has now existed fifty-three years, and during that long period much that would be of incalculable interest and invaluable to future generations of madrigal lovers must have become scattered. Would it not be worth while to collect all this and preserve it for the use and teaching of those that shall come after this generation? Now is the time to do this work, as each year that passes will increase the difficulty. From this brief and imperfect sketch it will at all events be seen that the Bristol Madrigal Society has flourished and done good work by fostering a love for that most charming form of choral singing, the Madrigal.

As stated above, this year the open or ladies' night of the Society was held at the Victoria Rooms, on the 17th ult., when, as usual, a crowded audience assembled. No tickets can be publicly purchased for these annual events, but they must be obtained through one of the members of the Society. The choir was composed as follows: forty-four choristers, seventeen altos, twenty-seven tenors, and twenty-eight basses—total, 116 voices; the Conductor being, as already indicated, Mr. D. W. Rootham. The scheme put forward was a very varied one, from a chronological point of view, ranging as it did from Wilbye and Croce to Leslie and Blumenthal. Two features of special interest were compositions from the pens of two living composers, who were both present. These were an anacreontic "T'other day as I was twining," by the well-known vocalist, Mr. C. Santley, and a Madrigal, "On a mossy bank," by Mr. W. A. Barrett, the eminent critic and Littérateur. Mr. Santley's composition was not an absolute novelty at these meetings, as its initial performance took place at last year's Concert of the Society to which it is dedicated. It then created a highly favourable impression, which this year, owing to the well-nigh perfect rendering it received, was more than emphasized. It was encored, and its renowned composer was cheered to the echo. Mr. W. A. Barrett's Madrigal, "On a mossy bank," written for eight voices, is, as might be expected from such a scholar and musician, an effort that will commend itself to the serious listener. The composer has written in imitation—in the best and highest sense of the term—of the madrigal writers of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, and would seem to have fully succeeded in catching the spirit of their works. The performance of the composition was in every way worthy of its high merits, and fully deserved the encore awarded it. The composer had to bow his acknowledgments from the seat he occupied. In connection with this work it should be mentioned that Mr. Barrett is responsible for the words, and that it is dedicated to Mr. D. W. Rootham. Taking the Concert as a whole I may say that it was one of the best given of late years, and reflected the highest credit on both Choir and Conductor, the latter having evidently spared neither time nor labour to uphold the justly great renown of the Bristol Madrigal Society.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

New York, January 15, 1889.

THE second Concert of the Oratorio Society took place on the evening of December 28, at the Metropolitan Opera House, preceded, as usual, by a public rehearsal on the afternoon of December 27. These public rehearsals afford opportunities to persons living in the suburbs to hear the oratorios presented by the Society, but they are far from being good performances. The majority of the men who sing in the chorus find it impossible to leave their occupations in time to attend the public rehearsals, and hence the Oratorio must be given with a very poorly balanced body of singers.

The Society and its young Conductor, Walter Damrosch, have much on which to congratulate themselves, however, for their evening performance of "The Messiah" was commendable. The masterpiece of Handel continues to be the most popular of all oratorios with American audiences, and its production never fails to draw together a great assemblage.

"The Messiah" was given in Boston during the week of Christmas with the following soloists:—Miss Emma Juch, Miss Emily Winant, Mr. Charles A. Knorr, and Mr. Myrom A. Whitney. The orchestra was that of the Boston Symphony, and there was a new trumpeter, who did something towards relieving the eternal blare of the irrepressible cornet.

In San Francisco "The Messiah" was performed at the Grand Opera House, on Christmas evening, by the Handel and Haydn Society of that city. The audience was large and the performance in every way creditable to the Society. Mr. H. J. Stewart conducted, with a chorus and orchestra numbering together 200, and Mrs. Stewart was the organist. The soloists were Mrs. Fleissner-Lewis, Mrs. Eunice Westwater, Mr. Alfred Wilkie, and Mr. J. C. Hughes.

Handel's great work was also performed in Cleveland on Christmas Eve, at the Music Hall, by the Vocal Society. The soloists were Miss Helen Clapper, Mrs. S. C. Ford, Mr. Frederick Jenkins, Mr. Myrom A. Whitney, and Mr. Alfred Arthur. In Baltimore "The Messiah" was not given, but on the Thursday following New Year's Day the Oratorio Society, under the direction of Herr Fritz Fincke, gave a very good performance of Gounod's "Redemption."

The Choral Society of St. Louis is hard at work studying Massenet's "Eve," which will be presented early in the spring. In Cincinnati a great deal of good work is being done by clubs in the way of producing operas. The Cincinnati Opera Club is to produce "Stradella" early next month, under the direction of Mr. Charles T. Coleman. In the same city the Phoenix Club recently produced the "Golden Cross" with great success, under the direction of Messrs. J. A. Brockhoven and W. W. Kennett.

The Chicago Choral Union gave its first public rehearsal, on January 4, under the direction of Mr. H. H. McGranahan. Selections from several standard cantatas and similar works were given. The chorus, which numbers over 100, is a new organisation. Three-fourths of its singers began their work by learning the rudiments of music. They now sing ordinary church music at sight. Sight-reading, it may be said here, is receiving a great deal of attention in America. All the musical institutions have classes in this branch of study, and it is now made a condition of admission to all the prominent choruses that the candidate shall be able to read at sight.

The third afternoon Concert of the Haymarket series in Chicago, on January 11, under the management of Miss Grace Hiltz, was an interesting entertainment. The performers, in addition to Miss Hiltz, were the Eddy Female Quartet, Miss Lily Roemheld (violinist), and Mr. Julius Neumann (pianist). Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" music was given at the last Concert of the Chicago Symphony Society, with Miss Jessie Bartlett-Davis and Miss Genevieve Johnston as soloists. On the Thursday following Christmas the Wesley Choral Union of Chicago gave F. H. Cowen's "The Rose Maiden." The soloists were Miss Sara Philips (soprano), Mrs. Minna Romeiss-Summy (contralto), Dr. T. M. Mendsen (tenor), and Mr. Henry T. Hart (baritone). The chorus numbered fifty, and the director was Mr. George G. Congdon. "The Messiah" was given by the Apollo Club, at the Central Music Hall of Chicago, on December 28. The soloists were those who appeared at the Boston performance.

The first Matinée Concert of the new Academy of Music Orchestra of Philadelphia, organised by Mr. Carl Gaertner, was announced for this afternoon. The soloists were Mr. Louis Gaertner (violinist) and Middle Edica (soprano). The Cecilian Society of Philadelphia is preparing to give Mendelssohn's "Athalia" music at the Musical Fund Hall, on February 2. The dramatic poem, written by W. Bartholomew, will be recited on this occasion by Mr. H. P.

Townsend, of the National School of Oratory. The solo parts will be sung by Misses Sheain and McGuckin, and Mrs. Darling. This Society is conducted by Mr. Michael H. Cross, who has done a great deal of hard work in bringing it to its present state of efficiency. Mr. C. M. Schmitz, Conductor of the Philadelphia Chorus, is making good progress in his rehearsals for the performance of Verdi's "Manzoni" Requiem, which is announced for February 8.

Wagner's "Das Rheingold" was produced at the Metropolitan Opera House, on January 4. It was superbly put on the stage and was eminently successful. The most prosperous production of the season thus far, however, has been "Die Meistersinger," which was revived on January 11. The Wagner operas continue to draw the largest audiences at the Metropolitan, while Meyerbeer's "Huguenots," "Prophet," and "L'Africaine," and "Rossini's" "William Tell," in which the tenor Perotti sings numerous B flats, C's, and even one C sharp, fail to hold the public. The Herald has begun an agitation of the question of reviving Italian Opera. Whoever tries the experiment with the old répertoire and the old style of performance will lose a fortune.

THE Patti Concerts at the Albert Hall, on the 8th and 22nd ult., do not need extended notice. It is only fair to say, however, that the programmes were not made up entirely of hackneyed pieces, and even the prima donna herself slightly enlarged her very small repertory of Concert-pieces. At the first Concert she sang Handel's "From mighty Kings" and the piquant "Légende de la Fille du Paria," from Delibes's "Lakmé," and at the second Haydn's "With verdure clad." Among the items worthy of mention on the 8th were Wolfram's Scena from "Tannhäuser" and Liszt's "Loreley," rendered by Mr. and Mrs. Henschel respectively. These artists set an excellent example in refusing encores which their companions did not care to follow. On the 22nd Madame Trebelli was announced to re-appear, but was unable to do so, though we are pleased to learn that she has recovered from the severe illness from which she has been suffering for several months. The Concerts were conducted by Mr. Wilhelm Ganz, who introduced several high-class orchestral pieces. These, however, did not receive much attention.

The customary performance of a portion of Mendelssohn's Oratorio "St. Paul" was given on St. Paul's Day, the 25th ult., at St. Paul's Cathedral, as an extension of the afternoon service. There was an enormous congregation, who listened with reverent attention throughout. The prayers were intoned by the Rev. W. H. Milman, and the lessons were read by the Rev. C. N. Kelly, Minor Canon. The selection from the Oratorio was performed in the usual place of the anthem. The ordinary choir of eighteen men and thirty boys was augmented by many of the members of the Sunday evening choir belonging to the Cathedral, as well as by members of the choirs of the Chapel Royal, Lincoln's Inn, the Temple, Westminster Abbey, Windsor, Eton, and other places. The solos were sung by three of the Choristers and by Messrs. Frost, Hanson, Kenningham, Grice, Miles, and De Lacy. There was a complete band, with Dr. Martin as Conductor. The Organist was Mr. W. Hodge. The whole service was dignified and impressive.

MISS GRACE WOODWARD gave her annual Concert at the Highbury Athenæum, on the 22nd ult. Mrs. Hutchinson gave a pathetic rendering of an arrangement by Mr. J. Robinson, of Dublin, of the Irish air "I wish I were on yonder hill"; Mdlle. de Lido gave songs, two of which, "None know how I love thee" and "Dear heart," were accompanied by the composer, Signor Tito Mattei, who also played some brilliant pianoforte solos; Gounod's "Lend me your aid" was very well sung by Mr. Orlando Harley; Miss Grace Woodward sang Mercadante's "Se m'abbandoni" and a charming new song by F. Allitsen, entitled "Unto thy heart," with violin obbligato, played by Miss Anna Lang, who also performed some solos on that instrument; Signor Luigi Mhanes joined Miss Woodward in a duet, "Deh vieni, O cara," by Claude Trevor; Mr. Miles and Mr. Grice sang some songs by Benedict, Löhr, and Lovett King. The accompaniments were played by Mr. Turle Lee.

An interesting Concert was organised on the 11th ult., at the London Homœopathic Hospital in Great Ormond Street, by Dr. George Carfrae, himself an enthusiastic amateur violinist. The programme included Mozart's Quintet (No. 9), in which the Doctor joined forces with Lord Chelmsford (clarinet), Hon. E. Thesiger (first violin), Mr. Torrens Johnston (second violin), and Mr. Somers Cocks (violoncello). Mozart's Quartet in G minor was also given with great effect, the pianoforte part being played by Mr. Moray Maclean. Dr. Carfrae was fortunate in securing the co-operation of some professional vocalists, including Miss Hope Glenn—who has just returned from her American and Canadian tour—and Mr. J. Robertson. Miss Bessie Waugh presided at the pianoforte.

At the University of London Intermediate Examination in Music the following candidates satisfied the examiners, and their names were placed on the Pass List:—First Division—Locke, Harry, B.A.; Moody, Gerald T., D.Sc.; Owen, Thomas; Wilkes, William Robert. Second Division—Banister, John Ratcliffe, B.A.; Chatwood, Arthur Brunel; Connah, James; Herridge, Henry; Musselwhite, Edward William H.; Norris, James, B.A.; Smith, Maurice Alfred Wretts. For the B.Mus. Examination the following was the Pass List:—First Division—Hannam, William Simpson. Second Division—Thatcher, Edwin. For the Intermediate D.Mus. Examination the following was the Pass List:—First Division—Miller, Harry Collin.

AN agreeable Musical and Dramatic Soirée was given by Signor Carlo Ducci on the 19th ult., in the Whitehall Rooms, Hotel Métropole. The programme was of a diversified description. It was intended to amuse a general audience and answered its purpose thoroughly. Signor Ducci was assisted by Miss Lucille Saunders, Mdlle. Noemi Lorenzi, Mrs. C. Elgood, Miss Grace Arnold, Miss Alexes Leighton, Madame Schlüter, Mr. A. D. Saxon, Signor Abramoff, M. Paul Richard, M. Johannes Wolff, and Mr. Raphael Roche. A company of Swiss mountaineers, under the direction of Mr. Muhlemann, also appeared, in their national costumes, and sang several characteristic Swiss pieces in capital style.

MISS DAMIAN gave a Concert at the Princes' Hall, on the 9th ult., previous to her departure for America as a member of the Albani Concert party. The artists who assisted her were mainly those who were engaged to accompany the Canadian prima donna in her tour, and the programme was of the ballad order, the songs being only varied by some instrumental solos, introduced by M. Nachéz, Signor Bisaccia, and Mr. W. L. Barrett. Miss Damian's fine contralto voice was heard to advantage in Schubert's "Aufenthalt" and Gounod's "Ruth," and among those who gave satisfaction to a large audience were Miss Alice Whitacre, Madame Larkcom, Mr. Lawrence Kellie, and Mr. Oswald. Mr. Randegger and Miss Bessie Waugh accompanied.

On Saturday, the 5th ult., a performance of Handel's "Messiah" was given in the Chelsea Town Hall, by Mrs. A. J. Layton, F.C.O., in place of the usual miscellaneous programme provided for the "Saturday Evenings for the People" held here. The choruses were admirably sung by a choir of about sixty voices, the group of five from "Behold the Lamb of God" to "He trusted in God" being specially well rendered. The solos were sung by Mrs. Luff, Miss Kate Cherry, Miss Jessie King, and Messrs. Tingey, Humphry, Catten, and Alfred J. Layton. The work was conducted throughout by Mrs. Layton, who received a hearty ovation at the close.

THE members of the Grosvenor Choral Society gave their 203rd monthly Concert at the Grosvenor Hall, on Friday evening, the 18th ult., consisting of a miscellaneous selection. The soloists were Miss Maud Cameron, Miss Lucy Etheridge, Mr. James Gawthrop, Mr. T. H. Nye, and Mr. Charles Ortnor. Miss Jessie Davies and Miss Madge Potter were highly successful in their respective pianoforte solos. Mrs. Frame presided at the pianoforte. Mr. David Woodhouse conducted. Mr. Henry J. Wood's new dramatic Oratorio "St. Dorothea" will be performed at the next monthly Concert, with orchestral accompaniments, and conducted by the Composer.

A FINE performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was given by the Kyrle Society, at St. Clement's, Notting Hill, on the 23rd ult., the choir numbering about eighty voices. The part of the Prophet was sung most admirably throughout by Mr. James West. Miss Ada Loaring was heard to great advantage in the music of the Widow. Mrs. Edwards gave the contralto music with genuine feeling, "O rest in the Lord" being worthy of special notice. Mr. George Micklewood sang the tenor music. Mr. E. H. Turpin presided at the organ and Mr. F. A. W. Docker conducted.

THE North-East London Choral Society gave the first Concert of the season, at Morley Hall, on the 23rd ult., the works performed being Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus," Lloyd's "Hero and Leander," and a brief miscellaneous selection. The solo vocalists were Miss Eleanor Falkner, Mr. Albert James, and Mr. Musgrove Tufnail. Solo violoncello, Miss Lilian Watson; accompanists, Mr. Fountain Meen (pianoforte) and Mr. Louis B. Prout (harmonium); Conductor, Mr. John E. West.

THE Holy Innocents', Hornsey, Musical Society gave a performance, on the 14th ult., of Barnett's "Ancient Mariner," at the Hornsey National Hall, Mr. Donne Smith, Conductor. The solo parts of the Cantata were allotted to Mrs. Trust, Miss Coyte Turner, Mr. James Gawthrop, and Mr. Musgrove Tufnail. The choruses were given with spirit. The accompanying instruments were the American organ, played by Mr. E. Drewitt, and the pianoforte, played by Mr. S. S. Hodges. The second part of the programme was of a miscellaneous character.

THE second Smoking Concert of the season of the Civil Service Vocal Union was given in the Great Hall at Cannon Street Hotel, on Thursday evening, the 24th ult., the spacious room being occupied by a crowded audience. The part-music included a graceful number, "When twilight dews," by the Conductor, Mr. J. H. Maunder, which was encored. The soloists were Messrs. Charles Chillely, Musgrove Tufnail, Herbert Schartau, and George Horton (oboe). Mr. Maunder conducted.

THE St. Stephen's Choral Society, Clapham Park, gave its first Concert this season on the 16th ult., at Balham Hall, to a large and appreciative audience. Macfarren's "May Day" and Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer" were given successfully, together with a miscellaneous selection. The performers were Miss Annie Swinfen, Mr. Donnell Balfe, Mr. Arnold Russell (pianoforte), and Miss C. Lowndes (violoncello). Miss Starkey and Miss Helen Smith were the accompanists, and the Conductor was Mr. J. H. Olding.

AT St. Ethelreda's Catholic Church, Ely Place, on Christmas Day, the Choir gave an artistic rendering of Gounod's "Messe Solennelle." The solos were entrusted to Master M. Moran, Mr. W. F. Dutton, Mr. B. Cunningham, and Mr. Conrad Formes. The accompaniments were given by a contingent from the Crystal Palace Orchestra, who also played a movement from Haydn's "Second Symphony." Mr. B. B. Barrett presided at the organ, and Mr. Henry Lewis conducted.

THE Distribution of Diplomas and Certificates in connection with the half-yearly Higher Examinations held at Trinity College in January, took place on Tuesday evening, the 15th ult., the Warden (the Rev. B., Camb.; George Frederick Potter, of Grantham; and William Willoughby, of Plymouth.

Wade, the pianoforte was played by Mr. J. T. Corbin, and the harmonium by Mr. J. A. Batchelor. The Conductor was Mr. A. Bond.

THE Old Acquaintance Musical Society gave its ninth Smoking Concert at the Freemasons' Tavern, on the 22nd ult., when a most attractive programme was provided by the excellent Musical Director, Mr. J. Kift. The artists were Messrs. Albert James, Sidney Tower, W. G. Forington, Walter Coward, H. W. Schartau, C. T. Johnson, E. Moss, F. C. Everill, and a small choir of boys. Mr. G. T. Miles was solo harp, and Messrs. A. Izard and J. Kift presided at the pianoforte.

A LARGE number of the readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES will join with the members of the Choir Benevolent Fund in regretting the great loss they have sustained in the resignation of their Secretary, Mr. Charles Fry. He has conducted the business of the Society since his appointment in 1875 with faithfulness and zeal, and by his untiring care, his business qualifications, and his courtesy has gained the esteem of all with whom he has been brought into contact.

AN evening Concert was given by the Countess of Dudley in aid of the Delph Mission at the Town Hall, Brierley Hill, on Thursday, the 17th ult. The artists were Miss Georgina Ganz, Miss Marian McKenzie, Mr. Philip Newbury, Mr. Avon Saxon, the Rev. E. Vine Hall, and Herr Hans Wessely. Mr. Augustus Spalding recited, and Mr. Wilhelm Ganz conducted a very successful performance in his usual able manner.

THE new organ which has been built for Christ Church, St. Giles's, Endell Street, Long Acre, by Mr. A. Monk, of Holloway Road, was formally opened on Monday evening, the 21st ult., by Mr. James Loaring, F.C.O., with a Recital. Compositions by Paer, Mozart, Rossini, Handel, Haydn, Arne, Lemmens, and Loaring were performed, Mr. Loaring's playing being very much admired. Miss Ada Loaring was the vocalist.

A SPECIAL Epiphany Service was held at St. Andrew Undershaft, E.C., on Tuesday, the 15th ult., when the Missionary Cantata "St. Andrew" (for choir and congregation) was repeated. The work was effectively rendered by the Choir of St. Andrew Undershaft, assisted by members of the All Saints' (Clapton) Choral Society. The composer, Mr. W. M. Wait, presided at the organ, and Mrs. Wallis at the pianoforte.

MASTER T. SHARPLES, of Worsley, aged fourteen, pupil of Mr. R. Froude Coules, has passed the recent examination for the Diploma of Associate of the College of Organists. He is the youngest candidate by several years who has ever gained this diploma. He was appointed Organist of Christ Church, Patricroft, after competition, at the age of thirteen.

A VERY successful performance of "Judas Maccabæus" was given by the New Southgate and Friern Barnet Choral Society, at New Southgate, on Thursday, the 17th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. William Horsey. The soloists were Miss Mary Bliss, Miss Alice Suter, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. John Bridson.

MR. FRANK T. LOWDEN, Organist and Choirmaster, Christ Church, Woburn Square, W.C., gave an Organ Recital at Christ Church, on the 17th ult. The Recital was composed of selections from Mendelssohn, Smart, Bennett, Lowden, and Bach's works. Some solos were sung by Mr. J. Dalgety Henderson.

WE hear through the Melbourne papers, the Argus and Age, of December 11, that a Romance for orchestra, by Mr. Walter Wesché, has been played by the Exhibition orchestra, under Mr. F. H. Cowen, and is well spoken of.

THE historical painting of "Wagner in his home, Wahnfried," has been purchased from the artist, Professor Beckmann, by Mr. Rud. Ibach Sohn, and is on exhibition at his new Pianoforte Show Rooms, 113, Oxford Street, W.

ON Christmas Day the music at the High Mass, at the Church of St. Aloysius, Clarendon Square, was rendered with orchestral accompaniment, under the direction of Mr. Talbot Notcutt.

MISS GRACE BATCHELDER, who has just obtained the Norfolk and Norwich Scholarship at the Royal College of Music, has been for the last five years a pupil in Miss Helen Kenway's Orphan School for the Daughters of Musicians.

MRS. SAMUEL HASLUCK, who as Miss Alice Aloof distinguished herself as a clever pianoforte player, gave, in association with her husband, a Recital at Steinway Hall, on Thursday evening, the 3rd ult.

REVIEWS.

Hector Berlioz, sa Vie et ses Œuvres. Par Adolphe Jullien. [Paris: A la Librairie de l'Art.]

THE position which Hector Berlioz now occupies in the kingdom of art was won for him after his death. The judgment of his contemporaries was reversed, and a more diligent study of his compositions, undertaken for the most part by those who were willing to believe the earnestness of his character and the possibility of the genius shown in his works, despite the coldness of the public and his brother musicians towards them, proved that there was much in them which was new and fresh in art. Berlioz was certainly a deep thinker, and one whose thoughts soared beyond the vision of the majority of those by whom he was surrounded in life. He was original in his forms of expression, and the few points they presented in common with conventional and recognised formula were held to be of the weakest character, and by his weaknesses he was judged. His strength was beyond the comprehension of his critics.

Their minds and tastes were guided by the principles which had been inculcated through the works of the leading composers of the Italian school—Rossini, Donizetti, Bellini, and their many imitators. Their works abounded in melodies which satisfied the ears if they did not always appeal to the mind. Berlioz was never a melodist in the accepted sense of the term. His great strength lay in his novel treatment of orchestral resources. These effects had, it is true, been suggested by more than one of the composers who belonged to the schools represented by the names just mentioned, but they had never been prosecuted to such an issue as that undertaken by Berlioz. He was on new and hitherto comparatively unexplored ground. It did not occur to his critics that it was possible to find new and thoughtful uses for material at the disposal of all. It was easy to decry that which could not be measured by accepted tests. Art in a general way was always difficult, but criticism such as was then brought into exercise was of all operations the most easy. Ridicule was a safe form of criticism where true knowledge failed and sympathy lay dormant or dead.

That which could not be grasped was derided. If his designs could not be measured by the then accepted rules of treatment, they could be subjected to ridicule. Those who were acquainted with the facts of his life knew to a certain degree, if only vaguely, that few musicians had been laughed at more frequently, or had been more frequently made the butts for the shafts of satire than Hector Berlioz. The publication of Adolphe Jullien's remarkable memoir of the great musician shows how he was treated in his lifetime. In this splendid book full of illustrations, reproduced from many sources, there are many that are most interesting, viewed by the light of after-knowledge. Some of the original lithographic drawings by M. Fantin-Latour, such as "Venite," "Tuba mirum spargens sonum," "Symphonie fantastique," "Un Bal," "Lélio," "La harpe Eolienne," "Harold en Italie," and others, fourteen in all, illustrative of his chief productions, are clever though fanciful, but they serve to give a character of elegance to the book, even if they are described as outside the text. Those which properly belong to it and really serve as illustrations are of more importance to the musical student. Fac-similes of autographs—one, a letter to Pleyel in 1816, remarkable for the firmness of its written style—of title-pages of the first publications of some of his early works, portraits of himself at every stage of his career, from the year 1831 when he was in the twenty-eighth year of his age, each showing the same marked characteristics of feature which made his face the easy sport of the caricaturist, adorn nearly every page of this splendid work. One of the best is the portrait drawn by Baugniet in London, in 1851, while Berlioz was acting as one of the delegates from France to the great Exhibition. The portraits of Miss Smithson—with whom Berlioz fell in love and whom he afterwards married—as Juliet, as Ophelia (alone and in groups in which Charles Kemble also appears), as well as in the costume of everyday life, will be not without their interest for English readers. The caricatures by Cham, by Gavarni, by Gustave Doré in 1850, and by the great and small artists who attacked Berlioz all his life, and did not even spare him after death, are faithfully and copiously reproduced. It is true that he was often in such company as the world now calls honourable—Jules Janin, Victor Hugo, David d'Angers, and Paul Delaroche. The ways of these men were strange to the world, they were therefore gibbeted as charlatans, mountebanks, saltimbanques, &c. Berlioz was drawn as the man whose every limb was an orchestral instrument. It was proposed by some of the wits to employ certain of the notes in the score of "Les Troyens" with which to kill cattle, and so to supersede the pole-axe. He is represented as conducting a Concert, surrounded by cannon, double basses, brass instruments of enormous size, before an audience stopping their ears. Happily the hall is well built, and can stand the shock—"Heureusement la Salle est solide—elle résiste." Box openers propose among themselves to lay in a stock of cotton wool for the ears of the patrons of the Berlioz Concerts. Doctors are called in to patients who have become deafened by constant attendance at the Concerts. Our composer is depicted as conducting a European Concert with a telegraph pole. His scores are represented as having been made by upsetting the ink bottle on music paper. Even after his death sarcastic drawings occasionally appeared in the Charivari and like papers. Here is one à propos of the subscription being raised for his monument in 1883: "My dear friend, the amount you have given is very handsome, and your manner of giving it touches me deeply, the more especially as you so persistently attacked Berlioz during his lifetime." "Oh! he cannot write any more music, you know." These, more than the higher artistic pictures which adorn the book, tell of the attitude of his literary and artistic contemporaries towards him. Their peculiarities, however, in no way influenced the author, Adolphe Jullien, in the manner in which he tells the story of the life of Berlioz; they rather anticipate the purpose of those who supply additional illustrations to books of biography or quaint phases of history. Every detail is told exhaustively yet with a due amount of artistic skill, from the day of the birth of the hero, through his youth and his varied career, until the day when his statue was unveiled in the Square Vintimille in 1886 and the completion of the monument in the Montmartre Cemetery in 1887, so that everything is brought up to the latest date. It would be a work of supererogation to repeat in these pages the several passages of the life of Berlioz, considering how ably that duty has been done already by a well-skilled hand. It may not, however, be superfluous to allude to the extraordinary popularity which his works attained after his death. This, it may be humiliating to say, was not so much due to a full recognition of their artistic merit as to a feeling of a phase of patriotism. The death of Berlioz occurred in 1869, the war between France and Germany in 1870. The growing influence of Wagner was discouraged out of a hatred for all things Teutonic. It would be thought unwise to take a retrograde step in musical art by setting up as an idol of the passing hour the works of any musician who did not represent in some degree the advanced condition of things musical. Wagner's music showed this attainment, but Wagner was a German. The music of Berlioz, written in a form for which his contemporaries were not prepared, yet contained many of those controversial qualities, if they may be so called, with which the public had to a certain extent become familiar. Nothing was better for the object. So the works of the much caricatured musician, which had first received important and substantial acknowledgment from the Italian Paganini, and subsequently from M. Benazet, the lessee of the gaming tables at Baden-Baden, to whose enterprise is owing the production of many of the compositions of Berlioz, were at last recognised by his own countrymen in a manner more suggestive of pique than of a true admiration for art.

Theo. Bonheur's Standard Pianoforte Tutor.
[W. Marshall and Co.]

THE author of this Tutor tells us in his preface that what he has felt the want of in his teaching is an instruction book that is progressive, "not leaving one thing for another till the first has been thoroughly learned." What he means is, we presume, "till the first has been thoroughly explained," for certainly if it be not thoroughly "learned," that must be the fault of the pupil. We quite believe that the early chapters of a Tutor ought to be as simple as possible; but every explanation given, however concise, should be strictly true, so that a young student may have nothing afterwards to unlearn. Now, in reading about the different kinds of time, when he is told, in the book before us, "6-8 time shows that there are six quavers in a bar, or notes to the value of six quavers," we contend that he has only become acquainted with the quantity of quavers in each bar, without having the slightest idea how these quavers are grouped; and this is still more extraordinary as in 9-8 time he is informed that "there are three dotted crotchets in a bar, or notes to the value of three dotted crotchets." Again, in the minor scales (which in this work always ascend with the sixth and seventh degrees raised, and descend with these degrees restored to the signature), it is said, with reference to the scale of G sharp minor, that "a double sharp raises the note to which it is prefixed two semitones." Unquestionably "the note to which it is prefixed" in this scale is F sharp, and assuredly this sign, \times , does not raise it "two semitones." We could multiply instances of this old-world teaching were we so inclined, but prefer to pass to the portion of the work which can be unreservedly praised, and may at once say that all the lessons for practice, and melodies easily arranged, both as solos and duets, will be found highly attractive by young players. The book, too, is carefully got up; and at the conclusion is a good Dictionary of Musical Terms.

Six Songs. By Arthur Somervell. Five Songs. By H. F. Birch Reynardson. Four Songs. By K. Boundy. [J. and J. Hopkinson.]

SONG albums are rapidly replacing single compositions issued in full music size and at a price far above their genuine value. The change is to be commended on all grounds, and we congratulate the composers of the above-named songs on their adoption of the reformed procedure, though we cannot give them equal praise concerning the abstract merit of their music. Mr. Somervell's songs are settings from Burns, most, if not all, of which have done duty on previous occasions. The peculiarities of Scottish music are not made prominent in every phrase, but they are pleasantly suggested now and then, and combined with a measure of expressiveness and musicianly feeling not often met with in English ballads. The songs are really charming, and are as suitable for the concert-room as the private circle. Mr. Reynardson has sought inspiration from English poets of various epochs, but he has not gained it so freely as could be wished. He writes in a musicianly style, but three of the five songs are rather laboured and dull. No. 3, "Where go the boats?" is very pleasing; and No. 5, "A song of the four seasons," would be better still if it were not for the too restless accompaniment. These two, however, have sufficient merit to enable us to commend the album to the notice of vocalists. The composer of the third set is a young lady who has also wisely taken standard poets as the foundation of her musical superstructure. In musicianly qualities they are well-nigh perfect, and they are also marked by true feeling and even passion. Miss Boundy, however, should not forget that the interest of a song necessarily centres in the voice part. Her phrases are not always vocal, and her songs require singers possessing extensive compass, though her accompaniments are unexceptionable. Still, it is pleasant to meet with efforts of this kind as showing that the worthless royalty ballad has not the field entirely to itself.

The Office for the Holy Communion, in A. By William Tattersall. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS is a very full service in the sense of completeness, the composer having included the Benedictus, the Agnus Dei, the Nunc dimittis, and a Eucharistic Hymn, beside setting every possible portion of the Office as it stands in the Prayer Book. We regret, however, to be unable to speak in high terms of his achievement. Some of his ideas are fresh and pleasing, but the frequent violations of the elementary laws of harmony, as well as the patchy construction of the longer portions, such as the Credo and the Gloria in Excelsis, betoken an inexperienced hand. Mr. Tattersall will do better with further study; his present effort cannot win favour from those who possess even an ordinary amount of musical feeling.

Treatise on Musical Intervals, Temperament, and the Elementary Principles of Music. By W. S. B. Woolhouse, F.R.A.S., F.I.A., &c. Second edition.

[Charles Woolhouse.]

IT is an advantage to the musical student who desires that his knowledge should be thorough, that he should know some of the scientific truths which surround a certain portion of the practice of music. For all the ordinary purposes of musical exercise in every-day life there is very little in the mathematical aspects of music that could be called useful. Still, as "perfect knowledge bringeth confidence," according to the writing-master's maxim, a slight acquaintance with the arithmetical aspects of music is very useful, and to some minds especially attractive. Mr. Woolhouse's treatise on "Musical intervals" may certainly be recommended as one of the best and simplest works on the subject. It is written by one who possesses not only an accurate grasp of the facts he has to deal with, but also a love for its application. These things make the book more than ordinarily valuable. It contains some 128 pages, divided into a series of eighty-four articles comprised under the heads of Sound, Intervals, Temperament, Harmonics, Beats of Imperfect Concords, True Intonation, Intervals technically considered, Scales, Chords, and miscellaneous additions, in which the Tartini tones, the dimensions of Stradivarius instruments, the proportions of violin bows, Dr. Stone's improved Contrafagotto, and other matters, so that all the student requires to know at the outset is comprised within the covers of the book. Should he desire to extend his researches, the Treatise offers a valuable, because trustworthy, guide to more elaborate disquisitions on the same theme.

Hand in hand; One; Waves; Only. Songs by Olga. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

FOR reasons which, no doubt, are sufficient, the composer of these songs has elected to conceal his or her identity under a nom de plume, and we have no right to question the motives which prompted this modest course. Indeed, we may commend it, for although taken collectively the compositions have undeniable merits, they are defaced by errors of musical grammar which are probably due to want of experience. As instances we may quote the crashing discord in bar 8, page 2, of "Hand in hand," and the faulty progression between bars 3 and 4, page 4, of the same song. They are all written for contralto voice, and the first three are very much alike in metre and sentiment. Olga writes simple, unsophisticated tunes with ease, and the rest is only a matter of study and exercise of that judgment which should influence every composer before committing ideas to paper.

Drusilla. Sacred Cantata for Mixed Voices. By James C. Beazley. [Weekes and Co.]

THE composer of the music of this Cantata has also compiled and selected the words suitable for his purpose. The story relates to one of the early Christian Martyrs, and the manner in which the music illustrates the story does not indicate more than a very modest ambition to follow in the wake of those who have invested like themes with more elaborate treatment. There are solos, duets, recitatives, chorales for Christians, and choruses for heathen, with martial music for the Roman legionaries, all of which serve the purposes of variety if they do not always succeed in awakening the corresponding charm. Simplicity of design has been aimed at and attained, and Choral Societies of modest pretensions will doubtless be glad to add the work to their répertoires.

At Evening. Idyl for the Organ. By Dudley Buck. [Forsyth Brothers.]

THE approaching performances in London of this American composer's important Cantata "The Light of Asia," give, at any rate, a temporary interest to mere trifles from his pen. This organ piece, however, is not a trifle, if we regard it from a high standpoint, for the musicianship is of a first-class kind, and exhibits far more fancy and originality than is usual in a quiet Andante for the organ. There is an orchestral feeling in the directions for registering, and if played on an instrument with fair resources it should be extremely effective.

The Carrion Crow. Humorous Part-Song for Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass. Words from an Old Rhyme.

Ben Bowlegs. Humorous Part-Song for Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass. Words by Edward Oxenford.

Composed by W. W. Pearson. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE composer of these Part-songs has already made a name by his setting of humorous words for choirs, and certainly the two under notice show no sign of waning power. "The Carrion Crow" is as quaintly comic in the music as in the rhyme, an excellent effect being gained by the frequent repetition of the words, and the whole composition has a merry ring in it which cannot fail to please. "Ben Bowlegs" is equally funny, but so delicately handled as to commend itself even to the most critical listener. The reiterated "bow, wow, wow" is ingeniously woven in with the more quiet portions of the song, and the harmonies are always good, and never obtrusive.

Original Compositions for the Organ. By Walter H. Sangster. No. 6. Prelude and Fugue in G minor. No. 7. Overture in G. [Weekes and Co.]

EVEN in these days of activity in organ composition we do not often meet with works equal to these in pretence. Dr. Sangster does not write for amateurs; his Prelude and Fugue are, in point of difficulty, on a par with the most arduous of Bach himself, and—the Prelude especially—distinguished by much boldness and freedom of treatment. The Fugue is treated on an attractive subject, and is effectively, if not very strictly, worked out. We cannot speak in such high terms of the Overture. It is very lengthy and complex, but rather vague in outline, and much of the writing is more suitable for the pianoforte than the organ. The composer will do well to put a slight curb to his ambition; his talent is considerably above the average.

Daybreak. Part-song for mixed voices. Words by Longfellow. Music by C. A. Macirone.

[J. and J. Hopkinson.]

THIS unpretentious little composition forms No. 10 of the "Grosvenor Series of Part-songs," and is written throughout with that refinement and artistic feeling which characterise all Miss Macirone's choral pieces. Longfellow's words are treated most sympathetically, the music, in E minor and major, being as spontaneous as the poetry, and consequently presenting no sign throughout of over-elaboration. The running semiquaver accompaniment, occasionally introduced, is extremely effective; but, before concluding, we must call attention to bar 10, page 5, in which we imagine the bass voice, instead of dipping down to E, should hold on, or repeat, the G.

The Artist's Series of Easy and Attractive Duets. For Violin and Pianoforte. By Michael Rice.

[Beare and Son.]

IN the thirteen numbers of the series which have reached our hands, there is much that is most commendable and useful. The charm and piquancy of the melodies call forth the first qualification, the knowledge of what is required to excite the attention of young players justifies the second. The duets are well arranged and fully carry out their own description as being "easy and attractive."

Favourite Melodies for Violin and Pianoforte. Arranged by Frederick Weekes. [Weekes and Co.]

THE thirty-first number of the series contains Braga's "Serenata," originally written for voice with violin obbligato. Here a combination of the violin and voice part is arranged, and the result is a charming little solo, which should by no means be beneath the notice of the most advanced players.

Come, fill ye right merrily. Bacchanalian Part-Song. By C. E. Stephens. (The Orpheus, No. 212.) [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

MALE voice choirs should make acquaintance with this excellent piece of writing. It is interesting in the several parts, and the varied rhythms give it an additional piquancy and effect.

FOREIGN NOTES.

THE Bayreuth Festspiele will be resumed this year on July 21, and will continue until August 18 following, "Parsifal," "Tristan und Isolde," and "Die Meistersinger" being the works selected for performance. The Prince Regent of Bavaria has, it is announced, informed Frau Cosima Wagner that he will act as patron to the Bayreuth institution.

A new Sonata for violin and pianoforte, by Johannes Brahms, has been recently performed privately at Vienna, and is pronounced by connoisseurs, including Dr. Joachim, to be one of the most charming productions from the pen of that eminent master.

A season of Italian Opera is to be opened next month at the Kroll'sche Theater, of Berlin, when Léo Delibes's "Lakmé" will be introduced, for the first time, to German audiences. Mlle. Van Zandt, the gifted prima donna who, some years ago, met with such ungallant treatment in the French capital, will be the "star" of the undertaking.

At the Munich Hof-Theater 166 performances of opera took place during the past year, the most important novelties produced here having been Verdi's "Otello," Weber's "Die drei Pintos," and Wagner's early opera "Die Feen."

The Athenæum says: "The Berlin journals speak very favourably of the new works by Dr. Villiers Stanford, performed in the Philharmonic Society's Hall of that city, on the 14th ult. The Symphony especially is described in glowing terms, the Kreuz Zeitung declaring that there is not a weak moment in the entire work, while the Berliner Reichsbote says that it 'sets him in the front rank of the composers of our own day.' Other papers are equally flattering."

According to the Berlin Allgemeine Musik Zeitung there have been during the past year thirty-nine new operas first introduced to the world of music—viz., sixteen Italian works, seven German, five French, four Dutch, three English, two Russian, one Danish, and one Croatian. To these should be added thirty comic operas—viz., thirteen French, eight German, and nine Italian. In the production of operettas the year has been especially prolific, their numbers being no less than seventy-three, whereof twenty-four are of Italian, twenty-three of German, and nineteen of French origin.

A "cyclust" of Wagner's operas, from "Rienzi" to the "Nibelungen," will be given next month at the Hof-Theater of Darmstadt.

An Austrian Ladies' Vocal Quartet is just now making a highly successful Concert tour in Germany, whence the fair vocalists will proceed to Switzerland and France.

Wagner's "Tannhäuser," in the version given it by the composer for the ill-fated Paris performance of that work, is shortly to be produced at Karlsruhe, under the direction of Herr Felix Mottl. The same opera is to be performed ere long at Prague, for the first time in the Bohemian language.

A Symphony superscribed "Aus Italien," by the gifted young composer Herr Richard Strauss, first performed at a recent Gürzenich Concert at Cologne, has produced a highly favourable impression, and is considered by connoisseurs to be an important addition to symphonic literature.

Herr Franz Rummel, the excellent and ubiquitous pianist, having just completed a very successful series of Chamber Concerts at Berlin, has left that capital for a tournee in southern Germany and Austria, after which he will pay a visit to this country, previous to his departure upon another artistic tour in the Scandinavian countries.

Having regard to the fact that Mendelssohn contributed not a little to his own fame by writing the popular "Wedding March," a young Teutonic aspirant to similar distinction is (a fastidious German contemporary assures us) just now engaged upon the composition of a correspondingly elaborate "Divorce March."

Herr Albert Niemann, the famous Wagner tenor, has retired from the personnel of the Berlin Opera, with which establishment he had been associated for twenty-two years. Niemann is now in his fifty-ninth year, and is in the full possession of his fine voice.

The Viennese Männergesang Verein has just given its five hundredth public performance, this excellent Institution having been founded some forty-five years ago.

A. T. W. (Malvern).—We shall be glad to have news of the work done; it is more interesting to our readers than statements of intentions.

E. M. R.—The invention for moderating the tone of the pianoforte during practice, alluded to in an "Occasional Note" in our last number, is called the "Dulcephone," and was patented by Challen and Son, 46, Oxford Street, W.

F. ST. JOHN LACY.—It is altogether a bogus affair.

F. W. BYLES.—The Ocarina, with all the latest improvements, can be obtained in all sizes and at all prices, from two shillings to ten guineas, of Mr. Barr, 38A, Bow Lane, Queen Victoria Street, London. The instrument is easy to learn, and has an extensive compass, with all the intermediate chromatic semitones—namely, from C to F

There are some which are also made with two keys, giving extra F and G in addition. Others are made with tunings to regulate the pitch. The Ocarina is made in seven sizes.

HENRY LITTLEWOOD.—Henry Russell is still living, and is both well and hearty.

L. M. D.—The legal right to grant hoods belongs only to the Universities having the power to make graduates. Neither of the bodies you have mentioned possess that right legally.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

ALFRETON.—On New Year's Day a Concert was given in the Town Hall. Mr. W. W. Windle, Organist and Choirmaster of Belper Church, was responsible for the programme. The performers—Miss M. A. Fisher, Miss Donnelly, Masters Banks, Adderley, Eley, and Mills, of the Belper Choir, were very successful. Romberg's "Toy Symphony" was performed. Mr. Windle conducting, he also playing duets with his pupils, Miss Radford, Miss Forreth, and Master Frank Robinson.

BARNET.—A Concert was given by Mr. J. W. E. Hale at St. Andrew's Schools, on the 5th ult. A choir of boys and girls performed, with orchestral accompaniment, two vocal waltzes and some part-songs, under the conductorship of Mr. B. B. Barrett. Miss Alice Musgrove, Messrs. C. Odell and E. Lewis, and Masters W. Harvey and C. Grant contributed the remainder of the programme, which was concluded by Sir Michael Costa's setting of the National Anthem. Messrs. Barrett and Vinter and Master E. Murray were the accompanists.

BLACKBURN.—The Creation was given on the 1st ult., at James Street Congregational Church, under the direction of Mr. W. H. Robinson. The principals were Madame Graefe, Mr. Barlow, and Mr. Edward Grime. The chorus of eighty voices included many members of the Vocal Society. The soloists met with much appreciation, and the choruses were given with great effect. Mr. Robinson presided at the organ, and directed the entire performance.—The St. Cecilia Society gave a capital performance of Berlioz's Faust, on the 11th ult., in the Exchange Hall. Mrs. Mary Davies, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Higginson, and Mr. Santley were the principal vocalists. The hall was extremely full and the Committee are to be congratulated on their enterprise. The Society never gave a Concert which opened more auspiciously, went more smoothly, or closed more satisfactorily. Herr Ernst Schiever had been retained as leader of the band, but owing to a slight accident to his thumb he was unable to be present. A very efficient substitute was obtained in Mr. Willy Hess. The splendid singing of Mrs. Mary Davies and Mr. Lloyd created a fuore, and the cheering at the close of the duet in Scene 13 completely drowned the voice of Mephistopheles and sounds of the band in the opening bars of the following scene. Mr. Santley sang well, and Mr. Higginson was a capable Brander. The Easter Hymn, the dance of Sylphs, and the chorus of Students were all excellently done, and it appeared as though especial care had been bestowed upon the preparation of the chorus of Infernal Spirits in the Pandemonium Scene. The band, sixty in number, worked admirably, and were deservedly applauded. Mr. J. H. Rooks conducted. The performance was in its way a triumph and a vindication of the vocal ability of Blackburn.—At Mr. W. H. Thorley's second Concert, given in the Exchange Hall on the 18th ult., Haydn's Creation was given. The principal artists were Mdlle. Spada, Mr. Sydney Tower, and Mr. Brereton. The choruses were somewhat unequal in merit, but the first, "Achieved," and "For ever blessed," were excellent. The last chorus, "Sing to the Lord," was very poor. Mdlle. Spada has a charming voice, and will do greater justice to the part when she is more intimately acquainted with its requirements. In the last chorus Mdlle. Spada did not attempt any of the "Amen" soli, and the effect of the alto, tenor, and bass voices alone was somewhat strange. Mr. Tower gave an excellent rendering of "In native worth." The band was led by Herr S. Jacoby. Mr. W. H. Thorley conducted.

CHIGWELL.—On Sunday afternoon, December 30, an interesting and devotional Carol Service was held at Chigwell Church. There was a numerous congregation, and the Vicar delivered an appropriate address. In addition to suitable hymns, the following programme of music was well rendered, Mr. H. Riding, F.C.O., Organist and Choirmaster, presiding at the organ, the tenor solos being sung by Mr. Clinch and the bass solos by Messrs. Smith and Simmons:—Opening Voluntary, Andante Pastorale (H. Riding), Responses (Tallis), Psalm lxxxv. (Wesley), Magnificat (Stammers) in A, Anthem, "Sing unto God" (Noël), Carol, "Come, tune your heart"; Carol, "In the fields with their flocks abiding"; tenor solo, "Comfort ye" and "Every valley" (Messiah); Carol, "I sing the birth was born to-night"; Carol, "Sleep, Babe Divine"; Carol, "In the country nigh to Bethlehem";

Carol, "See amid the winter snow"; bass solo, "When I view the mother holding"; Carol, "Sleep, Holy Babe"; tenor solo, "Refrain thy voice from weeping" (Light of the World); Carol, "Good King Wenceslas."

CREWE.—On the evening of the 3rd ult. the members of the Philharmonic Society testified their appreciation of the services of their late Conductor, Mr. G. Young, by presenting him with a handsomely bound full score copy of Elijah and a silver inkstand.

DINGWALL, N.B.—A Concert, for the benefit of the poor of the town, was given here on the evening of Tuesday, the 22nd ult., in the Masonic Hall. A number of well-known pieces, such as "The Cough and Crow" and the Gipsy Chorus from Preciosa, were sung by a glee party with good effect. The feature of the evening was found in the singing of Mrs. Munro, who delighted the audience with several songs. Miss Clara Fraser gave some English, Irish, and Scotch ballads. Miss Ross, Miss Paterson, Miss Davidson (of Tulloch), and Mr. Boulton were also most successful in their several contributions. The other soloists were Miss Maude Hill, Miss Bruce, Miss Macalister, and Mr. Wallace. The accompanists were Mrs. Davidson (of Tulloch) and Miss Ross.

DUNSTABLE.—On Thursday evening, the 3rd ult., Mr. John Anstee, Organist of the Congregational Church, gave a Concert of sacred music in the Town Hall, when the Oratorio Josiah (Ogden) was performed, with a chorus of fifty voices selected from all the choirs in the town. The solos were entrusted to well-known local performers. The choruses were rendered with a precision and style which reflected great credit upon the Conductor. Mrs. Proverbs and Mr. W. Duncombe presided at the pianoforte and organ respectively, while Mr. Anstee conducted.

EPSOM.—The annual Concert of Mr. James Hailes took place on Thursday, the 17th ult., at the Public Hall. Madame Charlotte Wilkes, with Miss Phæbe Wilkes and Mr. G. Wilkes, gave a skilful performance of some chamber music by Beethoven, including the Andante Cantabile and Rondo from the Quartet in E flat, the pianoforte part of which was ably rendered by Miss Kate A. Davies. Madame C. Wilkes also played violin solos by Vieuxtemps and Dancla in good style. The vocalists were Miss Annie Swinfen, Miss Carrie Curnow, Mr. Herbert Clinch, and Mr. James Hailes. The accompanists were skilfully played by Mrs. Hailes and Miss Kate Davies.

EXETER.—A new organ has been erected in the choir school, Exeter Cathedral. The instrument, designed by Mr. Wood, has a reversed keyboard, so that the player sits facing the choir, and as the whole of the manual pipes are in a swell with shutters opening at the back, the effect is to give much support to the singers. The shutters of this swell are of an improved construction and vertical in action. The organ was built by Messrs. Hele, of Plymouth, for the Dean and Chapter.

GREAT MARLOW.—A performance of Barnett's Ancient Mariner, with a short miscellaneous selection, was given by the Marlow Musical Society, on the 16th ult. The soloists were Miss Charlotte Hanlon, Miss Ada Carter, Mr. Lawrence Fryer (St. Paul's Cathedral), and Mr. Daniel Price (Westminster Abbey). The accompaniments were given, with pianoforte and harmonium, by Mr. E. T. Sweeting, Mus. Bac., and Miss Brown. Conductor, Mr. R. H. Whall, F.C.O.

HENFIELD.—An excellent Concert was given by the Choral Society, on the 22nd ult. The first part was taken up with Barnby's Rebekah, in which Mrs. Mobsby took the part of Rebekah, Mr. F. J. W. Ford that of Isaac, and Mr. Marten Barling, Eleazar. The choruses were sung with spirit and precision, and did great credit to the careful training of the Conductor, Mr. H. C. Young, B.A., Organist of St. Barnabas' Church, West Brighton. The second part consisted of miscellaneous items, including Caldicott's "Boy and Bee," Eilenberg's "March of the Mountain Gnomes," and a selection from the May Queen of Sterndale Bennett. Miss Tobitt accompanied throughout on the pianoforte, and there was a small orchestra, with Mr. J. M. Gray as leader.

HOUSLOW.—A selection from The Messiah was given in Holy Trinity Church, on Wednesday, the 16th ult. There was a chorus of sixty voices, and the organ accompaniment was strengthened by a few brass instruments. The music was generally well rendered, and was appreciated by the large congregation present. Mr. W. A. Griesbach, Organist of the Church, presided at the organ.

KIDDERMINSTER.—The first Concert of this season (being the eleventh by the Instrumental Society) was given in the Town Hall, on the 10th ult. Mr. Wadely, the Conductor, is to be congratulated upon the excellent manner in which the orchestra (which consisted of forty performers) achieved their work. Herr Suck, the leader, contributed some violin solos, and Mr. C. Blagbro' and Miss Mabel Grove (of the Birmingham Town Hall Concerts) were warmly applauded. The programme contained pieces by Rossini, Daniel, Wieniawski, Barker, G. Lange, Barnby, A. M. Smith, Weber, E. Prout, Pontet, Alard, Watson, Allan Macbeth, Lucantoni, Braham, and Meyerbeer.

LEEDS.—An admirable Pianoforte Recital was given on Wednesday, the 23rd ult., at the Philosophical Hall, by Mr. John A. St. O. Dykes. His programme was extensive as regards its range, which was from Bach to Liszt; peculiar in its interest, including as it did more than one work not a stereotyped feature of Pianoforte Recitals. Among other pieces performed were Mendelssohn's Variations Sérieuses, which stand out among Mendelssohn's compositions for the instrument in respect of nobility of character and masculine "grip"; bearing comparison with the two Romances by Schumann, which succeeded it in the programme. These two pieces afforded a pleasant contrast, the one all Sturm und Drang, the other the embodiment of peaceful beauty. These, and a composition by Scarlatti, which Mr. Dykes interpolated at this point of the programme, were played with a breadth, accuracy, and fire which displayed the performer's powers to the greatest advantage. No programme of pianoforte music can be considered complete without one or more works by Chopin, whose great and poetical genius was devoted almost exclusively to the instrument, and accordingly Mr. Dykes gave two Etudes, a Nocturne, and the stupendous Polonaise in A flat (Op. 53), in which his refined phrasing and great executive ability were fully illustrated. His playing of the Polonaise, and especially of the wonderful crescendo passage in octaves, hardly came up to our ideal, but it is only by comparison with the performances of the greatest of pianists that any exception could be taken to Mr. Dykes's rendering of this wonderful conception. The last section of the programme included two pieces by Joachim Raff, "La Fileuse," and a "Ländler," followed by "La Campanella," by Paganini-Liszt, a combination of names suggesting a double-distilled quintessence of virtuosity. And indeed this last-named piece by no means belied its parentage, for anything more brilliant it would be difficult to imagine, though its difficulties were made light of by Mr. Dykes, who certainly rose to the occasion, and more than maintained the excellent impression his previous performances had made. The whole of the programme was played from memory, in an admirable and artistic style.

LINCOLN.—The St. Andrew's Choral Society gave Macfarren's May Day and Aspa's Gipsies, on the 14th ult., Mr. W. Pulletin conducting an efficient band and chorus. The solos were sung by Miss Winnie Beaumont, Mr. Orange, Mr. Dunkerton, and Mr. Fenley.

LONDONDERRY.—An Organ Recital was given in the Cathedral, on the 21st ult., by Mr. D. C. Jones, Mus. Bac., F.C.O., when the following programme was performed: Overture (Occasional), Handel; La Carità, Rossini; Andante (Pianoforte Duet, No. 3), Weber; Nuptial March, Guilmant; Canto d'Aspetto (Admetus), Handel; Offertoire on two Noëls, Guilmant; Spring Song, Henselt; Triumphal March, Garrett.

LUTON.—Mr. Fred. Gostelow gave his second annual Concert in the Town Hall, on Tuesday, the 8th ult., when he was assisted by Miss Emily Freeman, Miss Greta Williams, Miss Mary Derbyshire, Mr. Owen Roberts, Mr. S. Heath, Mr. B. P. Parker, Mr. P. Elliott, several of his pupils, and a select choir.

MELBOURNE.—The Orchestral Concert on the afternoon of December 10, at the Exhibition, was not up to the average level in point of attendance, although not far behind it. The music itself should have been sufficient attraction, but most of it had been played previously, as far as constant Melbourne patrons were concerned, and these may be forgiven if they did not present themselves in customary numbers. The programme consisted of the following items—namely, Overture "L'Etoile du Nord," by Meyerbeer, very showy and full, and characteristic of its author's style; the superb Andante movement from the "Scotch" Symphony, by Mendelssohn; the brilliant "Scotch" Rhapsody, by A. C. Mackenzie, which shows such high musically treatment of old Scotch themes, especially that of "Braw, braw lads," a perfect instance of rich chromatic adornment in harmony of a well preserved theme. All these had been heard before, and were welcomed on repetition. They were followed by a Romance for orchestra, by Wesche, heard here for the first time. The author is an Englishman of French extraction, living and working in London, and to judge from this evidence of his mind and method, he must be a composer of serious and refined thought, and of acceptable skill in giving good orchestral expression to his ideas. The Romance alluded to is an Andante movement in common time, agreeably written in all parts. This was followed by the familiar ballet music to La Reine de Saba, by Gounod, which contains many pretty and various movements, amongst which the solo part, played by Mr. G. Weston, must not be forgotten.

MELTON MOWBRAY.—The principal portion of Elijah was sung by the Choral Society, before a large audience, on the 9th ult. The work was well rendered and much appreciated. Miss Winnie Beaumont, Mr. Dunkerton, Miss Whitehead, and Mr. Tufnail took the solos. The band and chorus performed their parts very creditably.

NEWPORT, MON.—An Organ Recital was given at Victoria Road Congregational Church, on Tuesday, the 15th ult., by Mr. Alfred J. Eyre, of the Crystal Palace. The programme included compositions by Handel, Wagner, Bach, Krebs, Bennett, Guilmant, Smart, and Lemmens, and were all well received by the large audience, who thoroughly appreciated Mr. Eyre's performance. Miss Alice Gomes was the vocalist.

NORWICH.—An Organ Recital was given by Mr. W. Lain in the Church of St. Stephen, on Friday evening, the 4th ult. His selection was made from the works of Guilmant, Tours, Mendelssohn, Batiste, Thomé, and Handel, and included two pieces for violin and organ, in which he was joined by Mr. F. W. B. Noverre. The vocalists were Miss B. J. Alden and Mr. J. Lowe.

OLDHAM.—On Saturday, the 5th ult., Mr. W. H. Jude, of Liverpool, gave a lecture at the Art Gallery, on "Musical Masterpieces." The lecture was of a most entertaining character, and the audience were in thorough accord with the Chairman, Mr. Councillor Jackson, when he remarked that he had never known an hour to pass so quickly.

POOLE.—A Concert, possessing unusual attractions, was given by the Longfleet Musical Society in the Amity Hall, on Monday, the 14th ult. The Concert began with the performance of an Operetta, entitled Pride and Policy, written by H. T. Craven and composed by Dr. Lemare, the Conductor of the Longfleet Musical Society. The remaining portion of the Concert was taken up with a performance of Sir Arthur Sullivan's beautiful Oratorio The Prodigal Son, which was given in an excellent manner. Signor Bertocini was the leader of the orchestra, and the soloists were Miss E. M. Lemare, Miss E. Painter, Mr. W. Townsend, and Mr. Mannell. Dr. Lemare conducted. The chorus performed the parts allotted to them satisfactorily, and the orchestra also deserve praise for their careful work.

READING.—Mr. W. H. Strickland has been presented with a testimonial in the form of a purse of money amounting to £116 and an illuminated address, to mark the completion of twenty-five years' work as Organist and Choirmaster of the Minster and Conductor of the Philharmonic Society, he having founded the Society more than a quarter of a century since. He has also received from the Minster Choir a magnificent desert service of Limoges china, as a token of their personal esteem and regard. During the above period many of the finest works of the great masters have been performed by the Philharmonic Society, and great improvement has been made in the Church services in the town and neighbourhood, which is in no small measure due to Mr. Strickland's successful labours.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.—Two Concerts were given at the Royal Concert Hall, on Friday, the 11th ult., by Mr. J. Maughan Barnett, who has been recently appointed Organist of St. Mary Magdalen Church, the performers being Mons. Tivadar Nachéz, Miss Edith Thairwall, and Mr. Barnett. Mons. Tivadar Nachéz's violin solos, which were much applauded, included Mendelssohn's E minor Concerto, several of his own compositions, and the Prayer theme and Variations, by Paganini. Miss Edith Thairwall's singing was tasteful and effective, and her songs were well and suitably chosen. Mr. J. Maughan Barnett displayed ability as a solo pianist in Schubert's Fantasia (Op. 15), "The Wanderer," Beethoven's "Moonlight" Sonata, C sharp minor, two compositions of his own, and pieces by Chopin, Jensen, Fumagalli, and Grieg.

SALISBURY.—The Vocal Union, assisted by the Rev. H. S. Lushington and his party of Handbell Ringers, gave a very successful Concert in the Hamilton Hall, on the 21st ult., on behalf of the Benevolent Fund of the New Sarum Lodge of Oddfellows. At the close of the performance, Mr. E. H. Hulse, M.P. for the City, who presided, supported by the Mayor, S. Parker, Esq., presented Mr. J. M. Hayden with a large and handsomely framed photograph of the Cathedral in recognition of his musical services.—St. Thomas's Choral Society, recently formed for parochial work by the Choirmaster, Mr. J. M. Hayden, gave a highly successful performance of Sir John Stainer's Cantata The Daughter of Jairus, in the Church, on Wednesday evening, the 23rd ult. The band and chorus numbered eighty performers. Mr. J. T. Calkin led the former, and Mr. Bowey, the Organist, rendered valuable assistance at the organ. The soloists were Miss Ruth Hunt, Mr. J. M. Hayden, and Mr. Sidney Crook. Mr. Hayden conducted.

SOUTHSEA.—On Friday, the 4th ult., a Concert was given in the Portland Hall, by Mrs. Graham Coles' Concert Party, consisting of vocalists and instrumentalists. The artists engaged were Mdlle. Gambogi, Mr. Orlando Harley, Mr. Franklin Clive, Miss K. Thomas, and Miss E. Armstrong and Mr. H. A. Story (accompanists). Mrs. Coles herself was the contralto. Unfortunately, Mdlle. Gambogi was unable to appear, but her place was taken by Madame Lorenzi. Miss Kathleen Thomas was the solo violinist. Miss E. Armstrong and Mr. H. A. Story played the accompaniments in an intelligent manner.

STOURPORT.—A performance of Mr. A. R. Gaul's Joan of Arc was given by the Musical Society in the Town Hall, on the 3rd ult. The choir consisted of seventy voices, who sang the choruses under the direction of Mr. Fred. J. Griffiths, Organist of All Saints', Wilden. The soloists were Miss Lilian Mills, Mr. Lloyd-James, and Mr. Thomas Horrox, of Birmingham. Messrs. J. L. Wedley and Irving Glover, A.C.O., rendered valuable assistance at the pianoforte and harmonium respectively. In the second part of the programme Mr. C. Singleton Graves gave two flute solos.

STRABANE.—The Choral Society recently inaugurated in this town, under the presidency of Her Grace the Duchess of Abercorn (who is also one of the performing members), gave their first Concert of the season on Monday evening, the 14th ult. The first part of the Concert consisted of Bennett's May Queen, and the second was miscellaneous. The solos were sung by Mrs. Burrows, of Cavan, and Messrs. Cattley and Hemingway, the principal tenor and bass of Derry Cathedral. Mr. D. C. Jones, Mus. Bac., conducted, and the accompaniments were ably played by his assistant pupil, Mr. L. Buchanan.

WIDNES.—On Thursday evening, the 10th ult., a large and appreciative audience assembled in the Drill Hall to listen to a musical performance, by Mr. W. H. Jude (Principal of Liverpool College of Music), which was announced as "A grand descriptive musical evening." In every sense these words were fully borne out. The whole programme was sustained by Mr. Jude.

YARMOUTH.—A Concert was given on the 16th ult. by the Cecilia Band. Several pieces were played by the band, and a number of songs and part-songs were performed. A feature of the Concert was the duets for two pianos, performed by Miss E. Poock and Mrs. Rogers, the two performers playing in such a way as to give one the impression that one mind regulated the performance of both. Miss Poock's rendering of three other solos by Mendelssohn, Chopin, and Henselt respectively, was splendid, and well received.

BIBLE VERSION

BY THE

REV. DR. TROUTBECK.

CLOTH, ONE SHILLING.

The principles on which the pointing has been done are mainly those of the Cathedral Psalter, of which Dr. Troutbeck was Co-Editor, a Psalter which has now successfully endured the test of long experience. The book is not, of course, divided into daily portions like the Prayer Book Psalter, as it is intended for the use of those Christian bodies in which the Psalms are not sung throughout a monthly course, but it can easily be so divided by those who use it.

EXTRACT FROM THE PREFACE.

THE following collection of "Words of Anthems" is mainly founded on that issued some years ago under the joint Editorship of the Rev. W. Rayson, M.A., Sir John Stainer, M.A., Mus. Doc., and the Rev. J. Troutbeck, D.D.

Not only, however, has it been made more comprehensive, but it has been almost entirely re-arranged on a plan commending itself to many distinguished and experienced church musicians, from whom also many valuable hints and much kind help have been received.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The Volume commends itself for use in Cathedrals and Churches where Anthems are commonly sung; but it is also a book for the Musical Library, whose studious owner may depend upon getting a good deal of information from it, assisted by a remarkably complete set of Indexes.

MORNING POST.

It is the most comprehensive book of the kind ever issued, it is also the best arranged. It is easy of reference, and is set forth on an intelligent and intelligible plan. It has a copious series of Indices, so that it presents the means within itself of a right and ready use.

JOHN BULL.

This, which is a standard work, is indispensable in all churches where Anthems form a regular part of the service.

ECCLESIASTICAL GAZETTE.

This volume will be found a great assistance to percentors and organists whose task of making out lists of Anthems usually demands much thought and time. The Index of "Anthems suitable for certain days or seasons" is very exhaustive and of great value. There is a list of composers' names, with short biographical notices. A table of Anthems with Latin words is given, as also one for men's voices only. The volume includes about 1,600 Anthems, together with some 180 more taken from 47 Oratorios and Cantatas, beside the complete words of 42 Oratorios and Cantatas, which makes the total considerably over 2,000. Much credit is due for the many improvements made on former editions to the compiler, Mr. Henry King, of St. Paul's Cathedral.

For orders of 100 copies and upwards of this Book, Messrs. Novello will, if desired, print a special Title Page.

OF

EDITED BY

JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus. Doc.,

Magd. Coll., Oxford,

AND

W. A. BARRETT, MUS. BAC.,

St. Mary's Hall, Oxford.

PREFACE.

THE call for a third edition of the DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS has given the Editors an opportunity of correcting several little inaccuracies which had crept into the earlier issues. They cannot but feel gratified at the manner in which it has been received by musicians and the public generally, and they venture to hope that students will always find it a useful storehouse of facts associated with the art, science, and archæology of music.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Even as the work stood before, it met with favour as by a long way the most valuable of its kind available to the English reader. The definitions are clear, and the articles confine themselves to statements of facts, waste no words, and go straight to the mark. Musical amateurs as well as students should have this book by them; it is capable of telling them what they want to know.

MORNING POST.

The Editors may be heartily congratulated upon the success of their labours, and upon the popularity of their work. Notwithstanding the appearance of other books of like character, the Dictionary holds its own for usefulness and value. There is no attempt to conceal the want of knowledge under the mass of verbiage. The subjects are treated in a terse, straightforward, plain, and accurate manner, with a manliness of style which at once convinces the reader of the capacities of the writers. There is, however, a grace and elegance in the English, relieved where possible by touches of humour, which makes the Dictionary fascinating reading, apart from its authoritative statements.

THE WORLD.

The same great qualities must be acknowledged in a work that ranks very high indeed, a work called "A Dictionary of Musical Terms," edited by Dr. Stainer and Barrett, M.B., with a knowledge, a patience, a completeness which render it a valuable book of reference. . . . This book contains so many interesting paragraphs, that I was arrested against my will and prevented from flying through the pages as usual. One quality beside the extreme clearness of the type is the nearly total absence of printing faults.

BY

HAYDN GROVER

OF THE TEMPLE CHOIR, LONDON.

Sung in Westminster Abbey; the Temple Church; St. Stephen's, Westbourne Park; Christ Church, Down Street, Piccadilly, W.; also in several Provincial Cathedrals and Collegiate Choirs.

The Musical Review, May 30, 1885, says: "Mr. Haydn Grover has written a good Service, and has succeeded in his evident intention to give due effect to the varying expression of the words. The Gloria to the Magnificat is in unison with free organ accompaniment, the melody being bold and coming in with fine effect after the 'verse' preceding. Mr. Grover has evidently profited by the traditions of the Temple Church, and has given us an Evening Service of sterling merit."

Words by EDWARD OXENFORD

MUSIC BY

"The work, like the 'Holy City,' is full of beautiful orchestral passages, while the vocal score abounds with charming numbers."—Bucks Herald.

"Bright, tuneful, fresh, and musicianly—this work will be a great favourite, and will add to Mr. Gaul's reputation."—Birmingham Weekly Dart.

"'Ruth' has been set to music by several composers; none, however, has become so worthily popular as the Cantata under notice. . . . It contains some charming music, and is highly characteristic of the story it so vividly illustrates."—South Wilt's Express.

"Full of flowing melody."—Salisbury Times.

COMPOSED BY

A. C. MACKENZIE.

(Op. 37.)

Full Score, 5s.; Orchestral Parts, 3s. 6d.;

Also, as originally written for Violin Solo with Pianoforte
Accompaniment, 1s. 6d.

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.

As an exceptional case, this movement absolutely gains by the change to which it has been subjected, the impassioned religious melody acquiring force by being played in chorus, and added beauty by a rich accompaniment of strings, horns, and wood-wind. The audience at once pronounced the piece a success, and the composer bowed his thanks for sustained applause from his place in the gallery.

STANDARD.

Dr. Mackenzie's "Benedictus" was originally written for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment. Since then the author has appreciated the capabilities of the music in an orchestral sense, and after several attempts—this composer, like Mendelssohn, never being satisfied at the offset—has written his score for a small orchestra. . . . So charming did this piece prove that the applause was unanimous, and was maintained until the composer had appeared at the end gallery and bowed his acknowledgment.

DAILY NEWS.

The remaining novelty was a brief but charming "Benedictus," originally written by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, as one of a set of violin pieces which Lady Hallé last summer introduced to London. The pianoforte accompaniment has, however, now been scored for wind orchestra by the composer, and the solo is given to all the violins of the orchestra.

MORNING POST.

There are beautiful harmonies accompanying the phases of melody, and the whole piece, which is replete with dignity and distinguished by originality, forms a most grateful addition to orchestral répertoires.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The clever musician has since scored it for a small orchestra, assigning the violin solo to the whole of the violins, and providing work for the other strings, flutes, clarinets, bassoons, and horns, in which form it is likely to obtain as much popularity on the platform as the first setting in the salon. It is a beautiful, quietly flowing melody, with such an elegant accompaniment as only a composer of genuine taste and sympathetic nature, having a perfect knowledge of the means of the instruments he introduces, could place upon paper.

THE OBSERVER.

The two leading themes are in themselves beautiful, and their scenic beauty is enhanced by exquisite orchestration, in which the wind instruments above-named, in conjunction with the violas, violoncellos, and double-basses, are happily employed. . . . This "Benedictus" is likely to become popular throughout the musical world.

THE GLOBE.

Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's new "Benedictus" for violins and orchestra (first public performance) is short and comparatively simple, but will add to his fame. . . . The "Benedictus" is a polished gem.

SUNDAY TIMES.

Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's new "Benedictus for Orchestra," a transcription of one of his "Six Pieces for Violin and Piano," Op. 37, is a gem of melody encased in a beautiful instrumental setting.

THE CHRISTIAN PILGRIM

COMPOSED BY

J. E. NEWELL.

PREFACE.

The growing custom of performing complete works in places of public worship has led the composer of "The Christian Pilgrim" to hope that his Cantata may be found acceptable in choirs, where the larger and more difficult works of the great masters are often inadmissible; it contains twenty-four numbers of solo and concerted pieces, and can be effectively rendered, with either Pianoforte or Organ accompaniment.

The words are selected passages of Holy Writ and well-known hymns, and are intended to portray the life of the Christian Pilgrim through the many trials and temptations that beset him on his Heavenly way, to the final triumph of eternal life.

STANDARD SERVICES AND ANTHEMS

The Pianoforte Accompaniments Arranged and the whole Revised

BY

W. J. WESTBROOK,

Mus. Doc., CANTAB.

In making a new Edition of these Popular Services and Anthems, it seemed well that the Accompaniments should be made playable upon the modern Organ, the old G manual having almost disappeared from churches and "places where they sing." In doing this, the Editor has been careful to make it easy to play—easier than it was before—and at the same time clear and effective. As these Services have been, and most likely will continue to be, more widely sung than any others, there can be no reason why they should remain in a fossil condition.

This Edition claims to be, therefore, something more than a mere reproduction of existing copies.

JOAN OF ARC

AN HISTORICAL AND DRAMATIC CANTATA

FREDERICK ENOCH

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"The music throughout is of a very high order, and full of beauty and interest, so much so that it is hardly possible to single out any numbers for special praise. The various movements are widely contrasted in style, in some considerable dramatic power being manifest, but all overflow with melody, and there is a happy absence of the restlessness of tonality which disfigures so many modern works. The vocal parts, whether for soli or chorus, are written within the range of average vocalists, and are therefore grateful alike to the singers and hearers. The Cantata is a credit to English art, . . . one of the most interesting works yet given by the Annerley Society."—Crystal Palace Reporter.

"In 'Joan of Arc,' particularly in the latter part, there are some exquisite passages—some charming descriptive pieces. The lovely 'Hark! thy spirit voices call,' carried one away in the spirit into veritable realms of dreamland, and the chorus 'Fret not thyself to-day' is picturesquely beautiful, graceful, and effective."—Stratford-upon-Avon Herald.

"Few cantatas are as rich in chaste melodies, charming choruses, and exquisite orchestration as Alfred R. Gaul's 'Joan of Arc,' performed for the first time in Plymouth by the Vocal Association in the Guildhall last evening."—The Western News, December 6, 1888.

"Proved an unqualified success, . . . the bulk of the Cantata is allotted to the chorus. In fact, the choir of this Association has seldom had such a good opportunity for giving their sterling worth a good display."—The Western Daily Mercury, December 6, 1888.

"Drew forth enthusiastic plaudits. . . . Of the Cantata, as interpreted last evening (in the Town Hall, Leeds, with a band and chorus of 250 performers), it is impossible to speak in terms of anything but praise. Solos and choruses alike are full of melody, while the orchestration is descriptive to a degree. For each of the principal vocalists there is one song that singles itself out, and each received an encore."—Leeds Mercury, November 7, 1888.

"The theme is one of the most romantic in the pages of history. In the earlier and poetic passages there is something of the charm of Sir Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen.' The last chorus is set to music which would be not unworthy of the great masters."—Herts and Cambridge Reporter.

"An advance on the earlier work, 'The Holy City.' . . . The choruses are written with much knowledge of effect, and an 'Ave Maria' and the final chorus of the 'Spirit Voices' may be named as really charming."—Athenæum.

"Bound to be widely taken up, doubtless to attain which end the composer has employed but three soloists, and has given a more than usually large degree of importance to the choral work. . . . The 'Ave Maria' is singularly beautiful."—London Figaro.

"Obviously written with a special view to the requirements of choral societies, and likely to become highly popular."—Daily News.

"Calculated to delight performers and listeners, being full of melody and taking effects."—Referee.

"Must enhance the high reputation of its composer."—Liverpool Courier.

"The inspiration of a highly-refined musician. . . . The Cantata is even a more masterly and beautiful work than 'The Holy City.'"—Huddersfield Examiner.

"No more charming Cantata than 'Joan of Arc' could have been chosen. It abounds in delicious music. There is not a tedious note in it."—Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Chronicle.

"Gives the listener a vivid and realistic impression, its attractiveness being continuous instead of spasmodic."—Bradford Observer.

"It would not be surprising if it attained to even the almost phenomenal popularity of 'The Holy City'; contains a similar wealth of melody and effective part-writing."—Birmingham Daily Times.

"Reading the score convinces us that it is our townsman's greatest production. . . . Could have been originated by none but a born melodist."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"A distinct advance upon Mr. Gaul's previous work in cantata form. . . . A constant flow of exquisite melodies and effective choral writing."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"A thoroughly melodious work, and should find favour with choral societies. It is not difficult to sing, and contains sufficient variety to keep up the interest to the end."—Manchester Guardian.

GEO. SHINN, MUS. BAC., CANTAB.

During the few months the Work has been published it has been taken up at the following places: St. Margaret's, Westminster (Canon Farrar's); Christ Church, Lambeth (Rev. Newman Hall's); St. Luke's, Bermondsey; East Dulwich; Peckham; Camberwell (two performances); Islington; Walworth (three performances); Brixton; Streatham (two performances); Southwark; Liverpool; Brighton; Leeds; Edinburgh; Glasgow; Bristol; Sheffield; Chelmsford; Chesterfield; Hastings; Luton; Whitby; Bilston; Gainsborough; Workop; Bromley; Hinckley; Coleford; Bradley; Hatton; Maldon; Portsmouth.

"Mr. Shinn is well known as the author of several Cantatas and other compositions, all of which are written in a style at once musicianly and popular. 'The Captives of Babylon' may be highly commended as an interesting and valuable addition to our shorter Oratorios and Cantatas. The work contains several solos of much beauty; also duets, quartets, and choruses in great variety."—Sunday School Chronicle.

"Mr. Shinn is well known as the writer of many popular pieces for choral societies; but this is certainly the best thing he has produced."—Nonconformist Musical Journal.

"In our judgment no better work of the kind has yet been published. It is brimful of pretty melodies, and the harmonic effects show the skill of a painstaking and talented musician."—Free Methodist.

"It is cleverly written, and in an attractive style. The music is of a varied and pleasing character, so that it is likely to become very popular."—The Portsmouth Evening Mail.

"Mr. Shinn is well known, and deservedly so, for his musical talent. Continuity of design and freshness of conception are apparent throughout the work. It contains many effective solos and choruses, and the music is not difficult. There is no doubt that the Oratorio will become very popular."—South London Press.

"Mr. Shinn has produced a work which is one of the most acceptable of the minor Oratorios."—Bristol Mercury.

PASSION SERVICE

FOR THE SEASON OF

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL,

Composer of the "HOLY CITY," "RUTH," &c.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed, the work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul have to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively: 'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

THE TIMES.

The Finale of the first act, in which the two hostile nations are brought into conflict, is masterly in design and full of impetus. . . . The Finale of the second act is again splendidly developed, but the gem of that act is its third scene, introduced by the orchestral Nocturne. . . . Here the composer has fully grasped the situation, and has succeeded accordingly.

At St. James's Hall, where such causes for local enthusiasm do not exist, the new oratorio went through a severer ordeal, from which, however, it emerged with undiminished credit, the attitude of the public during the performance being sympathetic, and in some cases demonstratively favourable.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Turning from Dr. Parry's book to his music, I am disposed to cry, "Welcome home!" as Handel is said to have done at the close of a particularly long and discursive cadenza. There was a time, not so far distant, when the composer of "Judith" appeared to me as a wanderer in the wilderness, roaming aimlessly over a pathless waste. . . . Dr. Parry has been coming back for some time past. We can trace his progress stage by stage. Out of darkness into light he has steadily advanced, till now, on the evidence of "Judith," he stands in the full blaze of orthodoxy, and has "found salvation." . . . The success of "Judith" with the audience was never in doubt, Dr. Parry being recalled and vociferously applauded not only at the close of the performance, but at the end of the first part.

THE STANDARD.

Without any preamble, let me say at once that Dr. Hubert Parry's oratorio "Judith" was produced this morning under the most favourable conditions and with emphatic success. The performance, under Herr Richter's guidance, was all that the most critical taste could have desired; and the composer (who is his own librettist) was called to the orchestra amidst prolonged acclamations, both at the end of the first act and the termination of the work.

The favourable opinion formed at Birmingham was distinctly confirmed by the verdict of last night's audience. The choral music of "Judith" is exceedingly fine. . . . Indeed, wherever Dr. Parry writes for chorus he does so with an evident mastery, not merely over technicalities, but over means of expression. We should find it difficult to point out a single instance in which his choral effects fail to convey an accurate sense of the dramatic situation. . . . In its present shape, therefore, "Judith" stands every chance of achieving wide favour.

MORNING POST.

Dr. Parry was most enthusiastically received after each part, and was honoured by a most hearty burst of applause at the end, so that the verdict of the audience was distinctly and deservedly in his favour. He has shown in "Judith" considerable powers of invention and scholarship, and a large sympathy with dramatic needs. . . . The musician who could produce such a work as "Judith," so full of power, character, and expression, has surely not said his last word.

DAILY NEWS.

That Dr. Parry is a consummate master of all the resources of the orchestra lovers of music need not be reminded, while particularly in the "Moloch" scenes he has treated the chorus in a manner which not infrequently shows a touch of true genius. His reception at the end of each part was most enthusiastic.

Very greatly owing to the magnificent singing by Novello's choir of the Moloch and other choruses, "Judith" achieved a far greater success in London than even amid the enthusiasm of a provincial festival.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

"Judith" may be warmly praised for the general excellence of writing, which in more than one situation is really masterly, for its wealth and variety of thematic material, for its dramatic spirit, and, above all, for its clearness. Both in its martial and more reposeful elements it is one of the most taking compositions in its peculiar line produced for some time. That it will be heard again, and speedily, can scarcely be doubted.

A success even greater than that attending its introduction at the Birmingham Festival in August, was last night achieved in St. James's Hall, by Dr. Hubert Parry's oratorio "Judith; or, the Regeneration of Manasseh," with which another season of Novello's Oratorio Concerts has commenced. . . . Dr. Parry, we believe, has but to write a few works with the spirit, strength, and musical consistency of "Judith" to become one of the most popular composers of the day.

THE ATHENÆUM.

In speaking of a performance of "Prometheus Unbound" three years ago, we referred to the great skill evinced in some of the choral writing, and ventured to anticipate that it would eventually yield good fruit. This prediction has been exactly fulfilled in the Oratorio entitled "Judith," produced on Wednesday morning with every evidence of a triumphant success. . . . No finer oratorio music than this has been written for many years.

That "Judith" is an immense advance on its composer's earlier efforts must be at once conceded, and from the striking enthusiasm with which it was received last week it would seem to contain the elements of popularity.

GUARDIAN.

The success of Dr. Hubert Parry's new oratorio was of the most unequivocal kind, the audience finding it impossible to obey the printed injunctions concerning applause at the morning performances, and cheering the composer heartily after both parts of a work which will not be long in being recognised as among the highest achievements of English music.

GOLD MEDAL, SOCIETY OF ARTS, 1886.

STEINWAY AND SONS

Are the only Manufacturers who make all component parts of their Pianofortes, exterior and interior (including the casting of the Full Metal Frames), in their own Factories.

GRAND AND UPRIGHT PIANOFORTES

With the Patent Double Cupola Frame of Solid Steel, and cast in the Steinway Foundries; also the New Patent Capo d'Astro Bar; Patent Overstrung Scaling and Patent Harmonic Duplex Scales; Patent Soundboard Resonator; Patent Ring-Bridge; Patent Repetition Action and Patent Metallic Action Frame; Patent Indestructible Hammers; Graduating Soft Pedal Cased in Metal; Three Strings to each Note; Seven Octaves; &c.

Every one probably has heard something of the Steinway Inventions and Improvements, which have both revolutionised the construction of the Pianoforte and rendered the Steinway Instruments THE MOST PERFECT PIANOFORTES IN THE WORLD.

It need, therefore, only be mentioned that public opinion throughout civilisation amply recognises their unrivalled merits, the Steinway Instruments having by far the largest annual sale of any Pianofortes in the world.

THE STEINWAY GRAND AND UPRIGHT PIANOFORTES chiefly appeal to the taste of the cultured and musical classes. It may be truly said that the Steinway Piano is the CHEAPEST, because the BEST and most DURABLE.

THE STEINWAY UPRIGHT PIANOFORTES (which, in respect to their internal Construction, are really Grand Pianofortes in an upright form, and have therefore almost nothing in common with the productions of the European makers) HAVE ALSO A FAR GREATER ANNUAL SALE THAN THE UPRIGHT PIANOFORTES OF ANY OTHER MAKER IN THE WORLD.

Attention is now directed to the NEW UPRIGHT MODEL, which is intended to meet the requirements of those who have wished for a "Steinway" at a somewhat lower price than had previously existed, and at the same time without any sacrifice of the Steinway characteristics, either in respect to the quality of the tone or the solidity of the construction.

THE CRUCIFIXION

A MEDITATION

ON THE

Sacred Passion of the Holy Redeemer

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY THE

REV. W. J. SPARROW SIMPSON, M.A.

J. STAINER.

This Work is an attempt to supply the want long felt of an easy and short form of Passion Music suitable for use in ordinary parish churches. It is composed for two solo voices, a Tenor and a Bass, and for the church choir. At intervals hymns occur, in which the whole congregation can join. The performance will probably not extend over forty minutes in duration, thus giving an opportunity for a suitable "address" if thought advisable. No orchestra is required, the accompaniments being specially adapted for the organ only; much of the expense usually attending Passion Services will therefore be avoided. The book of the words, for distribution among the congregation, will contain the music of the Hymns; by this means it is hoped that the congregation will be induced to take part heartily in the service.

THE RIGHTS OF FOREIGN COMPOSERS.

THE two actions for infringement of the rights of French authors, brought in the Westminster County Court on the 13th ult., by Mr. Alfred Moul, the British representative of the Société des Auteurs, Compositeurs, et Editeurs de Musique, were of little interest in themselves. Had the cause of action been of greater consequence and the Judge of higher authority the decision would have been of more value to the French Society. Nevertheless, these actions were, we believe, the first attempts to enforce at law the rights conferred by the British legislature in conformity with the International Copyright Convention of 1885, and may serve to draw the attention of the public to the present state of the law in relation to the performance of music of foreign origin. When we consider the vast number of foreign compositions, new and old, which are performed in this country, it is clear that the question of the conditions under which the composers may control, and derive profit from, the performance of such compositions is one of public importance.

The whole law of International Copyright is of recent growth, for until late years the remuneration to be received from the most successful literary or artistic work in any other country than that of its origin was so inconsiderable that the subject did not demand the attention of the legislature. The first statute giving protection in this country to works originally produced abroad was not passed until the first year of the present reign. Increased facilities of production and intercommunication have created a different state of affairs, and a successful composer now looks to a public far larger than that of his own country.

The history of the British law on the subject of the right of performance is briefly this: By the first Copyright Act, passed in the reign of Queen Anne, the author of a dramatic or musical work first produced in this country was given the exclusive right of multiplying copies, but obtained no right to prevent unauthorised representations of his work. The statute of 1833, generally known as Bulwer Lytton's Act, gave a certain sole right of representation to the authors of dramatic works, and an Act of 1835 (Talfourd's Act) extended this right to the authors of musical compositions. The composer of a musical work first produced in England has, under these Acts, two entirely distinct and separate rights: that of copyright and that of performing right, each subsisting until the end of seven years from the death of the author, or forty-two years from the first publication in the case of copyright, or from the first public performance in the case of performing right. There are sundry provisions as to registration and other attendant matters, with which we have not space here to deal; but it must be noted that the Copyright (Musical Compositions) Act, 1882, orders the owner of the performing right in a musical composition, who desires to retain that right, to print, or to require the owner of the copyright to print, upon every published copy of the work, a notice that the right of public representation or performance is reserved.

The International Copyright Act of 1837 made no provision for securing to the authors of foreign works any exclusive performing right, but by the further Act passed in 1844 Her Majesty was empowered by Order in Council to confer such a right upon the authors of music which should, after a future date, be first performed in the countries named in the Order, and Orders in Council were from time to time made under this Act extending its benefits to foreign countries which had concluded reciprocal conventions with the British Government. But a provision which made it necessary to register foreign compositions at Stationers' Hall, in order to obtain for them protection in this country, debarred from the benefit of the Act many works which, at the time of their production, were not thought worth the trouble of registration, but afterwards obtained popularity without benefit to the composers.

In September, 1885, a conference upon the subject of International Copyright was held at Berne, between the duly accredited representatives of Great Britain, Belgium, France, Germany, Hayti, Italy, Spain, and Switzerland, and the draft of a Convention was agreed to which was subsequently ratified by the Governments of those countries. In order that full effect might be given to the Convention in this country, the International Copyright Act of 1886 was passed, and the privileges agreed upon were formally conferred by an Order in Council, which took effect from the 7th December, 1887. The general effect of the provisions which then came into force is, subject to certain reservations in particular cases, to give to the author of a work first produced on or after the above date in any of the countries which were parties to the Convention the same rights (including performing right) in the British Dominions as if the work had been first produced in this country, provided that his rights may be no greater than those enjoyed in the country in which the work was produced and are subject to the accomplishment of the formalities prescribed by the law of that country. The necessity for registration in England is removed, and the author of any work first produced in any of the countries named in the Order in Council, having properly conformed to the local Copyright Law, has now, in addition to the copyright, the sole liberty of performing that work in this country, and may take proceedings for infringement of that right. It may be questioned whether the Act of 1882, which we have cited above, applies to such foreign compositions as are entitled to the benefit of the International Copyright Act. We understood Judge Bayley, in the case of Moul v. Hawtrej, to hold that it does not. But with due respect to the learned Judge and to the ingenious argument brought forward by Mr. Moul's solicitor, we may venture to say that we are not yet convinced on this point. It was held, in cases decided under the Act of 1844, that authors of works of foreign origin claiming copyright in England were not exempt from the conditions affecting authors of works produced in this country. For instance, that the proprietor of a foreign print must comply with the Engraving Acts and print his name upon it. The Order of 1887 gives to the foreign author the same rights as if his work had been first produced here, in which case the Act of 1882 would clearly apply to it. But it must be remembered that the Act of 1882 does nothing to remove any right. It merely makes it obligatory upon the owner of the performing right to give public notice of his intention to reserve it, and his omission to give such notice would enable the courts to refuse to enforce his right in the event of an unauthorised performance. It may very reasonably be considered that the obligation created by the Act cannot be taken to affect a foreign production so necessarily as it affects a native work, and that the omission of the notice upon a foreign title-page need not be a bar to relief. But, at any rate, in the case of English reprints of foreign works, it would be wiser to insert the notice and so avoid the possible question.

One most important innovation was introduced by the Act of 1886—namely, the extension of protection to works produced abroad before the commencement of the Order in Council. The previous enactments were in no way retrospective, but the Act of 1886 and the Order of November, 1887, give to the author of a work produced before the date at which the Order came into operation the same rights and remedies as if the International Copyright Acts and the Order had applied to the country of origin at the date of the production, provision being made for the protection of those who have lawfully produced such works in this country before the date of the Order. The result is that foreign composers have now gained a copyright in, and a right of sole performance of works which have, in some cases for many years, been freely reproduced and performed throughout the United Kingdom, and it is important that concert-givers and performers generally should understand that these rights now exist. Instances of such works are known to all of us, and are played and sung and ground out by piano-organs all over the country. We do not suppose that the Société des Auteurs will attempt to suppress the piano-organ. But we are afraid that they will have to spend a considerable portion of their funds in collection, and probably in legal proceedings, before they succeed in impressing upon the public the fact of the existence of the rights now vested in foreign composers. As to the best means of gathering profit from these rights and from the rights of our native musicians, we are hardly in a position to form an opinion. We think that we are correct in saying that in this country the performing right is, as a general rule, made over by the composer to the publisher with the copyright; and in such a case it is for the publisher to judge whether it is more to his interest to sell the work free from any reservation or to make a charge for its performance in public. In France, we believe, such a charge is generally made, and the profits, as a rule, are divided equally between the composer, the author, and the publisher. We understand that the Société des Auteurs, a large and well-established institution, undertakes the office of collecting dues for its members, who comprise nearly the whole musical profession. To the office of this Society the programmes of Concerts given in all parts of France are sent to be taxed. The fees charged for performance of songs and short compositions are small and, as a general rule, promptly paid, and by the multiplication of threepences and fourpences a handsome income is realised for the owners of the rights in a popular song. Whether such a method would succeed here must remain at present a matter of opinion.

There are still prominent absentees from the Convention. The sole adhesion which has been signified since its establishment has been that of Luxemburg, Austria, Holland, and Russia still stand apart, and, most important of all, the United States. But it is not unreasonable to hope that in the course of a few years the Convention may include, at any rate, the whole of Europe, and though public opinion on the other side of the Atlantic is slow to favour such a course, we may be confident that in time the United States Government will, even on this point, agree with Mr. Lowell that "no successful substitute for Justice can be discovered," and will join the Union.

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

No. XXVII.—HANDEL (continued from page 81).

We have now to deal with the circumstances under which Handel, leaving the "grand duke" at Cannons, connected himself with Italian Opera, not only as composer, but as composer and manager.

Italian opera at that time, as always in England, led a precarious existence. Fashion adopted it in a spasmodic kind of way, mainly determined by the question whether its exponents were worth hearing, but the mass of the people regarded the exotic with indifference, while the wits and literary men made it the favourite butt of their sarcasms. Everybody has read Addison's Spectator papers on this subject; but Pope also declared war against the fashionable "craze." Here is a passage from the Dunciad:

To Court
Her seat imperial Dulness shall transport.
Already opera prepares the way,
The sure forerunner of her gentle sway.

And here another—

When, lo! a harlot form soft sliding by,
With mincing step, small voice, and languid eye;
Foreign her airs, her robe's discordant pride
In patchwork fluttering, and her head aside,
By singing peers upheld on either hand,
She tripped and laughed, too pretty much to stand.

Pope's languishing woman, propped up by nobility because unable to stand alone, is a severe but undoubtedly true presentment of Anglo-Italian opera in the early years of the eighteenth century. The evidence and opinion of Colley Cibber on the same subject must be taken with the proverbial grain of salt, because, being a dramatist, he regarded opera as a rival interest. But there is no reason to believe that he greatly misrepresents facts. In his Apology we read, with reference to some extravagant hopes that had been formed of a venture made in 1709: "But, alas! the fairy vision was vanished; this bridal beauty was grown familiar to the general taste, and satiety began to make excuses for its want of appetite. Or what is still stranger, its late admirers now as much valued their judgment in being able to find out the faults of the performers as they had before in discovering their excellencies. The truth is that this kind of entertainment being so entirely sensual, it had no possibility of getting the better of our reason but by its novelty; and that novelty could never be supported but by an annual change of the best voices, which, like the finest flowers, bloom but for a season, and when that is over are only dead nosegays. From this natural cause we have seen, within these two years, even Farinelli singing to an audience of thirty-five pounds, and yet, if common fame may be credited, the same voice, so neglected in one country, has in another had charms to make that crown sit easy on the head of a monarch which the jealousy of politicians feared, without some such extraordinary amusement, his satiety of empire might tempt him a second time to resign."

Under the pressure of various adversities, Italian opera fell into a state of suspended animation in 1717; but the nobility cherished memories of its active life, and, at last, determined upon a serious effort for its revival. "A long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether" was to be made by persons of quality on behalf of their favourite amusement. Dr. Burney gives us full particulars of the inception and character of the enterprise:—

"No Italian operas were performed from this time (1717) till 1720, when a plan was formed for patronising, supporting, and carrying them on, and a fund of £50,000 raised by subscription among the first personages in the kingdom; to which, as his Majesty, King George I., had subscribed £1,000, this establishment was called the Royal Academy of Music, consisting of a governor, deputy-governor, and twenty directors. The first year the Duke of Newcastle was governor; Lord Bingley, deputy-governor; and the directors the Duke of Portland and Queensborough, the Earls of Burlington, Stair, and Waldgrave, Lords Chetwynd and Stanhope, Generals Dormer, Wade, and Hunter, Sir John Vanbrugh, Colonels Blathwayt and O'Hara, with James Bruce, Thomas Cole of Norfolk, Conyers D'Arcy, Bryan Fairfax, George Harrison, William Pulteney, and Francis Whitworth, Esqrs."

Here were blue blood and yellow gold in such abundance that the directors might have been pardoned had they thought that little else was required. But the noblemen and gentlemen above-named were shrewd enough in their way. They saw that rank and cash must be supplemented by genius and ability, and set about securing both. Burney continues his story:—

"And, in order to render this design as complete as possible, it was determined by the directors not only to engage a lyric poet in their service, but the best vocal performers that could be found in the several parts of Europe where there was a musical theatre, and the three most eminent composers then living who could be prevailed upon to visit this country. For this purpose, Buononcini, as he tells us himself, had been invited hither from Rome; Attilio Ariosti from Berlin, and Handel, who resided at this time with the Duke of Chandos at Cannons, was not only included in this triumvirate, but commissioned to engage the singers."

We must admire the comprehensiveness and liberality of the Duke of Newcastle and his colleagues, who certainly gave Italian opera a chance such as had never fallen to it before and never came in its way afterwards. If the directors could only have foreseen the troubled waters that lay before them! But, being only mortals after all, the peers and esquires went on with preparations for launching a ship such as the winds and waves must treat with proper respect or have their impotence for mischief demonstrated. Two poets, Rolli and Haym, were engaged to provide libretti; Heidegger came on the scene as stage-manager; the King's Theatre was taken and fitted up for the accommodation of a thousand persons; season tickets were advertised at twenty guineas, and the prices of single admissions announced as ten shillings for boxes and pit and five shillings for the gallery. Meanwhile Handel set about getting together a company of artists, for that purpose journeying to Dresden, in February, 1719. A letter written by him at this time to his brother-in-law, Dr. Michaelsen, has been preserved, and an English translation appears in Mr. Rockstro's biography. Michaelsen's wife, the master's elder sister, had died in August, 1718, and to this family affliction the letter at once addresses itself: "Sir, my most honoured Brother, do not, I entreat you, judge of my desire to see you by the delay connected with my departure; for, to my great regret, I find myself detained here by indispensable business, on which it is not too much to say that my whole fortune depends, and which lasts much longer than I expected. If you knew the sorrow I feel at not being able to put that which I so ardently desire into execution, you would be indulgent to me; but I hope I shall be able to come to you in a month from this time, and you may be sure that I shall make no delay, but shall continue my journey without interruption. I entreat you, my dear brother, to assure my mother of my obedience, and let me know once more how you are, and my mother also, and your dear family, to lessen the anxiety and impatience I feel. You know well, my dear brother, that I should be inconsolable had I not the hope of soon repaying myself for this delay by staying the longer with you." The letter, after referring to matters of no interest now, goes on: "I long to see you more than you can imagine. I thank you most kindly for the greetings you sent me on the occasion of the New Year. For my part I trust that the Almighty may grant you and your dear family every sort of prosperity and alleviate with His most precious blessings the deep affliction with which He has seen fit to visit you, and to grieve me also in an equal degree. You may be sure that I shall ever entertain a lively remembrance of your goodness to my late sister, and that my gratitude will last as long as my life . . . I embrace you, with all your dear family, and am, with life-long affection, Sir and most honoured brother, your very humble and obedient servant—G. F. HANDEL." The letter places us very near Handel's heart, and we find it a warm one, instinct with sympathy, affection, and dutiful feelings. It is through such means that the heroes of the past, instead of being abstractions connected with great deeds, are seen clothed in flesh, and subject to like passions with ourselves.

Handel was promptly successful in obtaining singers, all eager for a share of the £50,000. It is hardly worth while to give more than the names of Durastanti, the prima donna; Boschi, the bass; and last, but not least, the castrato, Francesco Bernardi, better known as Senesini, and, afterwards, the great attraction of the opening season. Much was expected from this artist, and a foretaste of the modern puff preliminary appeared about him in one of the journals of the day:—"Signor Senesini, the famous Italian eunuch, has arrived, and 'tis said the company allows him two thousand guineas for the season." Apart from the main object of his journey, very little is recorded about Handel's doings on the Continent at this time. We are told that he performed on the harpsichord at the Saxon Elector's Court, and excited the curiosity of Sebastian Bach, then Capellmeister at Coethen. Bach naturally wished to meet his famous contemporary, but failed in doing so, and the fact is sometimes spoken of with a reflection upon Handel, as though he avoided an interview. It becomes desirable, therefore, to quote from Spitta's "Life of Bach" a paragraph that tends rather to "put the boot on the other leg":—

"In the autumn of 1719, he (Bach) made another journey, which took him to Halle; this town, no doubt, was not the only goal of the excursion, but we hear of his being there from a circumstance connected with him. Handel had arrived in Germany in the spring from England, to find singers for the newly-founded operatic academy in London; on his return journey he remained for a short time with his family at Halle, and Bach sought him out, but was so unlucky as to find that Handel had, that very day, set out for England. Another attempt made by Bach, ten years later, to make a personal acquaintance with the only one of his contemporaries who was in any way his equal was just as unsuccessful. Inferences, unfavourable to Handel, have been drawn from these incidents, but there is no sufficient reason for supposing that he would have repelled Bach's courteous advances. We nowhere find any indication that he intentionally took himself out of Bach's reach by leaving Halle on the day of Bach's arrival there; while, on the other hand, it is difficult to overlook the fact that Bach, in this first attempt at a meeting, merely availed himself of an opportunity. Otherwise, as Handel had been in Germany since the previous March, he might have arranged a meeting somewhere or other." Coming from a writer so careful as Spitta, this vindicates Handel, and is entitled to the more credit because the biographer's conclusion is somewhat at the expense of his hero, to whom he would naturally incline.

The new operatic enterprise was launched on April 2, 1720, when Porta's "Numetor" was performed as a sort of lever de rideau, the actual attraction coming out seven nights later in the shape of a new opera, "Radamisto," libretto by Haym, music by Handel. How this work was welcomed let Mainwaring tell: "If persons who are now living, and who were present at that performance, may be credited, the applause it received was almost as extravagant as his 'Agrippina' had excited: the crowds and tumults of the house at Venice were hardly equal to those at London. On so splendid and fashionable an assembly of ladies (to the excellence of their taste we must impute it) there was no shadow of form or ceremony, scarce, indeed, any appearance of order or regularity, politeness, or decency. Many, who had forced their way into the house with an impetuosity but ill-suited to their rank and sex, actually fainted through the excessive heat and closeness of it. Several gentlemen were turned back who had offered forty shillings for a seat in the gallery, after having despaired of getting any in the pit or boxes." We are accustomed in these days to see ladies of the caste of Vere de Vere not only hold their own in a "scrummage," but take a good deal of other people's. With difficulty, therefore, can we estimate the excitement which, in an age of great precision and formality, led to the scenes described by Mainwaring—scenes which naturally made a great impression.

Speaking of "Radamisto," Dr. Burney describes it as "more solid, ingenious, and full of fire than any drama which Handel had yet produced in this country." In his synopsis of the work he particularly mentions the fine air "Ombra casa," which was "regarded by Geminiani and contemporary masters as one of Handel's first compositions for a single voice. . . . I remember hearing Reginelli sing this air at the opera in 1747, among some light Italian songs of that period, and it seemed the language of philosophy and science, and the rest the frivolous jargon of fops and triflers." Finally, Burney remarks of the opera as a whole: "Few of Handel's operas would offer more amusement to a modern audience than 'Radamisto,' in which there are so many fine songs in various styles that, with a few changes to accommodate the singers and comply with the taste of the times, its intrinsic worth and Handel's still increasing celebrity would excite attention and renovate its favour." The airs in "Radamisto" were quickly published by Handel himself, in a volume of which Schœlcher says: "With the exception of the book of 'Suites de Pièces pour le Clavecin,' from the press of Cluer, there is nothing of that epoch superior to this publication."

Handel did nothing more for the Academy during its first season, which closed on June 25, 1720. The second season opened (November 19) with Buononcini's "Astarto," in which Senesino made his début. This was followed by "Muzio Scævola," wherein all the three composers retained on the establishment collaborated, Ariosti writing the first act, Buononcini the second, Handel the third. With regard to this tripartite work, Mainwaring makes statements to the following effect, after referring to alleged rivalry among the composers: "In order to terminate all matters in controversy, it was agreed to put them on this fair issue. The several parties concerned were to be jointly employed in making an opera, in which each of them was to take a distinct act. And he who by the general suffrage should be allowed to have given the best proofs of his abilities was to be put in possession of the house. The proposal was accepted, whether from choice or necessity, I cannot say. The event was answerable to the expectations of Handel's friends. His act was the last, and the superiority of it so very manifest that there was not the least pretence for any further doubts or disputes." Mainwaring adds that, in the result, Handel was appointed composer to the Academy. It is difficult to conceive how he could have fallen into the errors of this statement, especially as, when he wrote, many living persons could remember the whole transaction. As a matter of fact the composition of "Muzio Scævola" was not a struggle for the survival of the fittest, but simply an unwise attempt at a special attraction, like Lumley's famous Pas de Quatre. Both Ariosti and Buononcini retained their places as Handel's colleagues while the enterprise lasted. The composite opera was no great success. Produced April 15, 1721, it was succeeded by another work on July 5, having been but occasionally heard in the interim.

In the course of the third season, which began in November, 1721, Handel produced (December 9) a new opera "Floridante," followed in the fourth season (January 12, 1723) by "Ottone," at the first performance of which the famous Cuzzoni made her appearance, and (May 14) by "Flavius." All this time the funds of the Academy were running out fast, and it appears from public advertisements that the noble lords and ladies, while quite willing to give their names, were less free with their money. Some calls per share having been made in 1721, the directors issued an advertisement warning defaulters, but to no purpose in many cases, and a sharper intimation appeared threatening exposure and "the utmost rigour of the law." In all seven calls were made, and £15,000—more than a fourth of the capital—sunk in little more than a year from the opening. Nevertheless, the directors persevered. Their fifth season witnessed the production (February 20, 1724) of Handel's "Giulio Cesare," in which Senesino set the town talking by his delivery of the famous recitative "Alma del gran Pompeo." Apropos, Schœlcher quotes a magazine writer of the period: "When I was last at the opera of 'Julius Cæsar,' from which I took the hint of writing this paper, a piece of the machinery tumbled down from the roof of the theatre upon the stage, just as Senesino had chanted forth these words, 'Cesare non seppe mai, che sia timore' ('Cæsar does not know what fear is'). The poor hero was so frightened that he trembled, lost his voice, and fell crying. Every tyrant or tyrannical minister is just such a Cæsar as Senesino." We evidently owe knowledge of this operatic incident to a good Radical among the subjects of George I.

Our somewhat dull record of Handel's operas at the King's Theatre may here be agreeably interrupted for the sake of a peep at the man as distinguished from the composer. To Crysander's research is due the information that, in 1725, Handel was extremely desirous to visit his mother, but not being able to do so, he addressed his brother-in-law Mattheson in a noteworthy strain of filial devotion. Mr. Rockstro very properly observes, introductory to his translation of the epistle: "It is true Frau Dorothea Handel was a mother whose devoted love few sons could have been ungrateful enough to treat with indifference, but sons do forget their duties sometimes; and it is refreshing to find a man of genius, famous and busy, who has been universally described as before all things an astute citizen of the world, disguising, under the courteous formality of the period, a child-like simplicity such as could scarcely have been exceeded had his whole life been spent within the influence of the loving little home circle:

at Halle. Now let us look at this letter. Addressing his "most honoured brother," Handel apologises for not having performed his duty as a correspondent, and then proceeds to thank the Doctor for his family goodness: "I cannot be so ungrateful as to pass over in silence the goodness you have shown to my mother in her advanced age, for which I offer you my very humble thanks. You know how deeply I am interested in all that concerns her, and can therefore judge the depth of the obligation under which you have placed me. I should esteem myself happy, my very dear Brother, if I could engage you to send me some news from time to time, and you may depend upon my sincerity and good faith in reply. . . . In the meantime, it would be a great consolation to me if I could flatter myself that you would think of me sometimes, and still honour me with your friendship, since I shall never cease to be, without devoted affection and attachment, Sir and most honoured Brother, &c., &c." Handel remembers the Doctor's second wife and his household in a postscript: "I send my very humble respects to Madame, your wife, and I embrace tenderly my dear god-daughter and the rest of your dear family. My compliments, if you please, to all my friends." Here, again, Handel's affectionate nature asserts itself, and gives us a better opinion of him than had Hawkins when he wrote: "His social affections were not very strong."

Returning to affairs at the Academy of Music, we find Handel producing "Rodelinda" in 1725, and "Scipio," with the famous March, still to be heard at the Guards' parade on the Queen's birthday, followed by "Alexander." Handel became a naturalised Englishman in 1726, and, in that character, went steadily on with his work, producing "Admetus" in 1727, and "Siroe" and "Tolomeo" in 1728. These were his last works for the Academy. The capital of £50,000 having all been spent, the directors gave up business, and the artists betook themselves to other lands. Regarding this collapse, Burney says: "The governors and directors of the Royal Academy of Music, after the sum originally subscribed for its support was expended, relinquished the idea of entering into new engagements for amusing the public at their own expense. . . . Whether the feuds which so long agitated the critics and patrons of music, concerning the abilities of Handel and Buononcini, and of Faustina and Cuzzoni, precipitated the dissolution of the Royal Academy, or the disagreement between Handel and Senesino, cannot now be easily determined. Perhaps all these causes conspired to relax discipline, and to tire the public, for though zeal and attention were at first stimulated by these debates, yet they seem to have been succeeded by disgust and indifference." The directors of the shipwrecked concern wound up affairs in business fashion. They called one meeting "to receive any further proposals for carrying on the operas," and another to consider about collecting and paying debts, disposing of property, and so on. Finally, in December, they summoned a third, to choose a deputy-governor and officers, but this seems to have been no more than formal compliance with the terms of the charter, and no record exists of a meeting actually held. So ended the greatest effort ever made by co-operation to establish Italian Opera in this country.

The story of the enterprise contains many an incident, ludicrous or regrettable, about the rivalries of artists, &c., but we are concerned here with Handel's work and bearing in the midst of it all. This is a subject about which Mainwaring has something of interest to say. He describes Handel as keeping the singers and band in total "subjection"—a fact not to be wondered at if he dealt with them all as with Cuzzoni, when he called her a devil, and threatened to throw her out of window. With Senesino, however, he had a great deal of trouble. The pampered Italian, like Jeshurun, waxed fat and kicked. "Handel," writes Mainwaring, "perceiving that he was grown less tractable and obsequious, resolved to subdue these Italian humours, not by lenitives, but sharp corrosives. To manage him he disdained; to control him with a high hand he in vain attempted. The one was perfectly refractory, the other was equally outrageous. In short, matters had proceeded so far that there were no hopes of an accommodation. The merits of the quarrel I know nothing of. Whatever they were, the nobility would not consent to his design of parting with Senesino, and Handel was determined to have no further concerns with him." It may be that, if Handel had taken to managing his people instead of brow-beating them, there would have been greater harmony, but his imperious and irascible nature refused to obey the suggestions of policy. Upon all these squabbles a contemporary, Colley Cibber, looked with cynical amusement, and wrote: "What pity 'twas these froward Misses and Masters of Musick had not been engaged to entertain the Court of some King of Morocco, that could have known a good opera from a bad one! With how much ease would such a director have brought them to better order? But, alas! as it has been said of greater things, 'Suis et ipsa Roma viribus recit.' Imperial Rome fell by the too great strength of its own citizens! So fell this mighty opera, ruined by the too great excellency of its singers. For, upon the whole, it proved to be as barbarously bad as if malice itself had composed it."

A MUSICAL PORTRAIT.

WE are acquainted with no more signal instance of hereditary genius than that afforded by the justly illustrious family of Perkins, whose proudest living ornament is the seventh in unbroken descent from a celebrated bugler who took part in the Civil War on the Parliamentary side, and won from his admiring comrades, in virtue of his extraordinary lung power and sonority of tone, the agnomen of "the Ear-waker." His youngest son gained permission to adopt this sobriquet as a surname, and his descendants are to be found to this day in large numbers in Lancashire and the adjoining counties. Passing over Cadwallader Perkins—who evinced such extraordinary talent in the earlier decades of the last century that his services were invariably retained by theatre-goers desirous of organising any hostile demonstration—and Handel Perkins, the reputed originator of that melodious theme by which the vagrant milkman signalises his advent from the area railings, we are bound to accord more than a cursory notice to Pompey Perkins, the father of the subject of this paper, whose Barndoor Symphonies and Ethiopian Rhapsodies (scored for a small orchestra) used to awaken extraordinary enthusiasm amongst the fashionable habitués of Henley, Epsom, and Newmarket some thirty years ago. This gifted and remarkable man was a complete master of no less than six instruments—the banjo, guitar, bones, Jew's-harp, concertina, and coffee pot—besides possessing the unique accomplishment of rapping out tunes with his fist on his chin, so as to be distinctly recognised by the naked ear. His voice, with which he could imitate every imaginable noise, from the buzzing of a gnat to the scream of a peacock or the trumpeting of an elephant, was an organ of singular flexibility and nasal charm. Indeed, it may be said of it, without the least exaggeration, that once heard it could never be forgotten. Professor Perkins, as he styled himself, deserves to be held in grateful recollection for the disinterested zeal with which he recognised in his son the existence of a talent destined to eclipse even his own, as well as for the unflinching energy with which he exerted himself to impart to his child those manifold accomplishments of which we have given the bare outline above. In the year 1861 the Professor, having met with an accident which deprived him of the sight of his right eye, retired from the active pursuit of his profession. The exact cause of this calamity has never transpired, but there are good grounds for believing it to have been due to an unexpected blow from the English boomerang or tipcat. Having amassed a considerable sum of money in the exercise of his profession, Professor Perkins invested his savings in the purchase of a hostelry at Brixton, a suburb long famous as the resort of musicians, where young Apollo saw the light. At the early age of five he electrified his parents by correctly repeating the interval of the minor ninth given out by a donkey in an adjoining field, and before he was fifteen he had harmonised a great number of popular airs in consecutive thirds and fifths, the latter being an interval for which he has always displayed a great partiality. These interesting compositions were unfortunately never committed to paper, an omission which all true musicians must deeply deplore. Although he had ceased to perambulate the country, Professor Perkins was in the habit of giving small but select réunions, or "banjovial meetings" as he called them, in the bar-parlour of his inn, where a favoured few used to listen with delight to the performance by their host and his gifted son of a variety of exhilarating morceaux. On one of these occasions, Mr. Seyton, the proprietor of the Pandemonium Music Hall, who was then stopping in the inn, was so struck by the vivacity and humour of the young Apollo that he offered him an engagement on the spot at the rate of four guineas a week. Considerable interest attached to the first public appearance of the new artist, about whose remarkable powers a variety of rumours were afloat; but from the moment that his sonorous and strident tones broke forth in the chaste composition with which he had chosen to make his début: "My Polly's a regular snorter; She dotes upon winkles and porter"—his success was assured, and he leapt at one bound into the front rank of the topical vocalists of the day. Apollo's voice was at that period of positively stentorian power and penetrativeness, to which one of his artistic pseudonyms—"the Great little Bull of Bashan"—bore pointed testimony. Indeed, he often won large sums of money off sceptics who were rash enough to lay against his cracking gas globes with his ut de putrine. In subsequent seasons he assumed the title of the "Human Foghorn," in reference, probably, to a proposal which emanated from an Irish member that he should be employed to replace the Siren on the North Foreland. As the terms, however, which the Government offered were not sufficiently remunerative to induce him to give up his engagement at the Pandemonium, nothing resulted from these negotiations. Whether the diminution of loss of life at sea, which would undoubtedly have in this way been secured, would have been a greater boon to humanity than the pleasure which Perkins has afforded to the world by his performances and compositions, is one of those complex ethico-æsthetical problems which do not admit of an off-hand solution. The question, however, is of so interesting a nature that it is our intention to return to it on some future occasion.

Several years of hard work having slightly impaired the freshness of Perkins's organ, it occurred to him that an equally lucrative and less exacting career lay open to him as a musical composer and publisher, a métier which he accordingly embraced and has followed ever since with signal success. At an earlier date he had been fortunate enough to make the acquaintance of Mr. Daniel Rudge, who had rendered him efficient service in reducing the artless irregularity of his accompaniments to a stricter conformity with the rules of harmony. Perkins now resolved to retain Rudge's services exclusively as his scorer, to use his own facetious expression, and an agreement was accordingly drawn up by which, in consideration of an annual salary plus a certain percentage on the profits of the sale of copies, Rudge pledged himself to give Perkins the entire benefit of his services in overlooking, editing, and scoring the latter's MSS., it being strictly understood that Rudge's name should never appear on the title-page. It might not be inappropriate at this stage of our remarks, to give a brief account of Perkins's method of composition, a method which, while differing considerably from that of the great masters from Bach to Brahms, nevertheless bears at every turn the impress of originality and independence. It is his invariable practice to compose at the pianoforte. He first whistles or hums the melody as it has taken shape in his brain, and then proceeds to reproduce it on the instrument. When he has played it over six or seven, or, in the case of his more elaborate efforts, sixteen or seventeen times, he summons the faithful Rudge, who transcribes it note by note, and the labours of the great master are over. It remains for his collaborateur to decide what key and time are demanded by the character of the composition—such trivial details being seldom or never indicated by Perkins—to harmonise the melody and, if need be, to bring it within the compass of the human voice, before despatching it to one of the numerous poets employed by Perkins to adapt or write words for his music.

The musical partnership of Perkins and Rudge has been fraught with the happiest results for the advance of music in England. It has emancipated us from the dominant and domineering influence of Teutonism, and furnished us with an apparently inexhaustible supply of exhilarating ballad music, which bears the same relation, in point of digestibility, to the heavy productions of the modern German masters that an omelette aux fines herbes does to a plum pudding, and is therefore admirably adapted to counteract our national stolidity. No intellectual effort is needed to appreciate Perkins's music. You know exactly where you are and what is coming. The two chief characteristics of Perkins as a composer are undoubtedly his hearty insularity and the catholicity of his faculty of assimilation. The combination of these two qualities may sound paradoxical. But the difficulty will disappear if we may be allowed to illustrate our meaning. There is not a single phrase in the whole range of his works which a good musician is not prepared to swear that he has heard somewhere else. Or, as it has been well put, nearly all the classical composers have been guilty of prospective plagiarism from him. Some notion of the success and popularity achieved by Perkins may be gained by the following statistics. It has been calculated that if all the copies of his compositions now in circulation were piled in a heap, they would exceed by sixteen feet the height of Mount Everest; that if placed lengthwise they would reach to the moon and back; while their superficial area would suffice to paper the whole of the solar system.

Perkins has written more than twice as many songs as Schubert, his income is estimated at £10,000 a year, and his name is a household word in the music halls of every English-speaking country in the world. And yet, such is the apathy displayed by England towards her most distinguished sons—an apathy rendered all the more remarkable when it is contrasted with the extravagant adulation lavished on all foreign musicians—no University has conferred on him the distinction of an honorary degree, nor has any ministry seen its way as yet to bestow so much as a baronetcy upon the man who has done more than any other native composer to maintain the impression prevailing on the Continent as to the character and aims of English music.

SOME KINDS OF MUSIC.

By F. CORDER.

V.—POPULAR MUSIC.

IF, dear reader, you should ever be about to produce an opera—a contingency which, for your own peace of mind, I trust may not occur—the first question your manager and your publisher will ask you will be—"Which is to be the popular number?" In every large work, especially an opera, there must, by unwritten law, be one number, one tune, which shall be so much more forcible and simple than any of the rest that it shall serve as a handle for the dullest member of the audience to lay hold of and carry the work away with for closer examination. Everyone knows that even such exceptionally brilliant works as "Faust" and "Carmen" would not have survived without such handles, not to speak of minor instances. If an opera could be written in which every number was an absolute gem—such is almost the case in "Don Giovanni"—this would not be enough. There must be one salient point, one very bold tune, repeated several times, if possible—in a word, one popular number. The writers of comic opera bear this in mind with better results than other musicians, but the necessity for such a thing is all the more curious in their case, where the whole work is supposed to appeal to the masses. Admitting this axiom—which is indeed indisputable—of the imperative need of one popular tune in a work, the question I here seek to solve is—"What constitutes popular music?" A little while ago a well-known composer published a very nice Suite for pianoforte. It had not been performed in MS., but he, or his publisher, decided that one number would "take the public," so it was published separately, for solo and duet, scored for orchestra, for organ, for brass band, as a song in four keys, as a duet, as a chorus (male and female, and both), and arranged as a solo for every instrument. Must have cost a lot of money. Well, it wasn't a success at all, and I can't think whatever made them fancy it would be. On the other hand, eight years ago a little-known composer of dance music wrote a Gavotte. It went the round of the theatre and pier-bands, and was liked very well. Being easy and effective it stuck in the programmes, and thus, by familiarity, got popular. Then what a sale it had! During the first two years it was scarcely known, during the next three there was scarcely a programme without it. It was "arranged" like the other piece, and the sale was incredible, and all this without any puffing or pushing. The "Stephanie Gavotte" is now a household word.

Take another instance. A certain song-writer made a sudden success. He then wrote another song, exactly in the same style as that which made his fame, neither better nor worse. It was advertised from one end of the kingdom to the other, singers were paid to sing it everywhere, it was puffed and belauded, but all in vain—it fell dead. On the other hand, Arthur Sullivan wrote a song called "The Lost Chord" (did you ever hear of it?). It had, of course, a good success, and was duly admired. Suddenly, after it had been published for several years, it occurred to some artistic soul to play it as a cornet solo, with organ accompaniment. That was all that was wanted to make it popular. A really noble song with a melody depending for much of its beauty upon the accompanying harmony, it now got on the street-organs and was actually whistled by the boys. It is anything but a typical popular tune in the sense that the "Boulanger March" and "Two lovely black eyes" are popular tunes, yet it has now become the absolute possession of everyone who can recognise tunes at all.

Are there then any particular features about the popular tune as distinguished from the unpopular? Or is it a question of cramming a thing down the throats of the public? Or is the popularity of a tune purely a matter of chance? If we collate all the instances of phenomenal popularity with which we are acquainted we are perplexed by finding, as in the above instances, that sometimes one theory seems probable and sometimes another. It is impossible, on mature consideration, to adopt any closer definition of "melody" or "tune" than Sir G. Macfarren's vague one of "notes in succession," and therefore it is equally impossible to generalise with any degree of closeness on such a large and varied class. That a "tune" to be worthy of the name should be diatonic, and of the simplest and most forcible rhythm, is all that we can safely declare. Some consider that the ideal popular melody should contain no skips or awkward intervals, but move, like a Beethoven melody (as Sir G. Grove has often pointed out), mainly by step of a second. But the awkward jump up of a major seventh in the "Boulanger March" does not affect its popularity, though few street-boys can whistle it correctly, and the numerous repetitions of the tonic in the "Lost Chord," odd as they sound without the accompaniment, are relished far more by the crowd than the melody of "Freude, schöne Götterfunken" in the ninth Symphony. Perhaps we can get at something definite by reviewing such of the works of classical composers as are popular. We must not go back further than Beethoven though, or we shall find ourselves in debateable ground. Amongst young people who learn the pianoforte (are there any who do not?) one may sometimes discover signs of liking towards certain of the pieces they learn. Only sometimes. It will usually be found, for instance, that among the Beethoven Sonatas those in A flat (Funeral March), C minor ("Pathétique"), C Major ("Waldstein"), and the first movement of the C sharp minor ("Moonlight") are much the most relished—not to say admired. The titles must be accorded some of the credit, but not the whole, I think. On the other hand, the C major (Op. 2), the B flat (Op. 22), and the magnificent D minor (Op. 31) are very little appreciated. In Mendelssohn's pianoforte works the popular pieces are simply those with the broadest melodies, which is natural enough; but it is, to my mind, hard to account for the immense preference shown for Schubert's Impromptu in A flat compared with any of the others. The cheap "Albums" of the day afford a clear gauge of the popularity of many other composer's works; thus, in Chopin we perceive (taking into account the obstacles formed by difficulty of execution) that the third Ballade, second Scherzo, and last Impromptu are preferred to their equally fine companions; that the F sharp major and G major Nocturnes, though two of the most difficult, are the most admired and attempted by learners, while the early Rondos, showy and not over difficult, are ignored. In Schumann the popular pieces are rather curious, none being his best. The two first "Fantasiestücke," a scrap of the first "Nachtstück," the Romance in F sharp, the first Novellette, the Arabesque and, above all, the "Schlummerlied." It is noticeable concerning this last that Schumann had no idea he had written anything particularly popular, and laid it aside for years after writing it. But though clumsily written for the instrument, it is by far the most played of anything he ever wrote. I have recently met with it as a part-song for female voices, and as a Waltz of the true town band type. The melody is taken without any acknowledgment of its authorship in either case. The music of Liszt and Henselt is too much restricted in its popularity by questions of difficulty, so it cannot be classified, and as regards the more shallow kinds of salon-musik I am not sufficiently well-read to give much opinion, save as regards Raff and Rubinstein. The former composer aimed unceasingly at popularity, and achieved it about once in every twenty attempts, which is a good proportion of success as times go. From such a man we ought to gather something of the secret, yet I don't find, after thinking over the Polka de la Reine, the Cavatina for Violin, and the rest that they afford much light on the subject. Whatever Raff did he did a dozen times over; there are plenty of his pieces as brilliant and tawdry as the Polka and lots of other melodious Cavatinas, yet they did not succeed in the least. With Rubinstein it is different; few of his works have any legitimate raison d'être, as far as I can see, and pieces like the Melody in F and Valse Caprice are few and far between. No! On endeavouring to generalise from this mass of music, one can only say that, to be popular a piece must be easy in proportion to its showiness, must have a clear melody somewhere, must be either sentimental or descriptive, or both, and yet many popular pieces fail to fulfil all these requirements. In vocal music the mystery is still more perplexing. We have in England, as they have in Germany, but one type of song, which is multiplied with very slight variations unceasingly. One song out of hundreds becomes enormously popular—take "Queen of my heart" as an example—though it presents no unusual feature whatever, and the remainder sink into merited oblivion. Grieg has written seventy or more songs, each one a gem of art; after twenty years one only—"Ich liebe dich"—has achieved great popularity, the remainder are, with four or five exceptions, unknown still. It is the anomalies which one meets with on every side whilst considering this subject that render any dogmatising almost impossible. Beethoven's "Adelaide" is his one popular song—why? Handel's oratorios are supposed to be adored by the English public, but to put up any save "Israel" and "The Messiah" means a half empty room—why? What comparison is possible between the favour shown to "Elijah" and "St. Paul"? Yet the latter is generally deemed, by competent judges to be, if anything, the better work of the two. And, to return again to opera, why have certain works only of certain composers kept the stage to the entire exclusion of all others? The répertoire sometimes narrows, but is never extended. Verdi and Donizetti wrote plenty of operas as good as the half-dozen which live. Why have the others died? Balfe wrote scores of tunes as pretty as those in the "Bohemian Girl," but this one work bids fair to out-last the institution of opera itself. Methinks I see some Franz or Costa of the twentieth century re-scoring it in accordance with modern ideas. Why this enormous disproportion in the favour shown to certain works in comparison with others? Who shall answer these questions?

There are a few ground-principles of popularity which are easy enough to grasp, but they do not go very far. Thus the modern developments of the pianoforte and pianoforte music have rendered it very hard indeed to produce works which shall be effective if badly played. Music of the Jensen and Kirchner school is hopeless for the amateur, easy as it looks and sounds. We know we must avoid accidentals and close modulations—the two leading features of modern music—to be popular. In vocal music we must, in addition, avoid any passages involving rapid execution; but while it is only too clear what we must not do, it is every day harder to find anything to do which has not already been done. The unpopularity of beautiful music like that of Hermann Goetz's "Taming of the Shrew" is easy to comprehend, and the popularity of "The Golden Legend" is as inevitable as fate, but these are exceptional cases, and their success and failure spring from obvious causes. No! the phrase "the secret of popularity" is truer than most common phrases; the true reasons of popularity have ever been a secret and a mystery.

But there is another mystery more curious still. Some tunes attain undying popularity; such are many old folk-melodies like "Marlbrook," "The Bluebells of Scotland," and the like; others live for the most unequal periods, varying from six months to a century, and then die and are forgotten. How to account for this? Not by saying that they get old-fashioned; the fashion in tunes can hardly be said ever to change. Offenbach had twenty years of unbounded popularity, but who sings "Voici le sabre" or "Il grandira" now? "Ehren on the Rhine" was a perfect nuisance in its day, but it is never heard now. Time was when the Huntsmen's Chorus and Bridesmaid's Chorus from "Der Freischütz" extinguished all other popular tunes throughout Germany and England; what street-boy knows them now? Ten years ago the Prussian Government had to forbid military bands to play the March from "Fatinitzza," the incessant repetition of which had grown unbearable; the tune is now quite forgotten. And this brings us to the most curious point of all. Why is no popular tune ever resuscitated? Why does the attempted revival of a comic opera, whether by Offenbach, Auber, or Sullivan, result in failure? Why does no popular piece of music ever gain a second run? I know nothing more dreary than to play over any of the melodies which were once all the rage and are now dead and buried—Godfrey's Waltzes, for instance. It seems impossible to assign a reason for this, but the fact is undeniable that all the sparkle has gone out of them and they are like ginger-beer opened a second time—flat, stale, and decidedly unprofitable. The popularity of any particular music is hard enough to account for, the duration of its favour still more mysterious, but the reason why once dead it should be dead for ever simply baffles conjecture.

MR. FREDERIC COWEN is now on his way home and has leisure to reflect upon the labours performed and the successes achieved during his eight months' stay in Melbourne. The retrospect cannot fail to be gratifying. From the moment of his landing our Australian cousins received Mr. Cowen with open arms, and his personal success has been on a par with the artistic triumphs that have fallen to his share. The Centennial Exhibition Concerts will occupy a prominent place in the musical history of the Colony. Moreover, the high character of the works and the performances now heard there for the first time has assuredly tended in a marked degree to raise the standard of musical taste and create the desire for further cultivation of the same kind. It is not merely that a large number of novelties have been introduced by Mr. Cowen, but that a new light has been thrown upon many of the old choral and instrumental masterpieces by the executive resources which he has been able to bring to bear upon their rendering. In this regard we may also make mention of the services fulfilled by the leading English violinist, Mr. Max Klein, who went out with Mr. Cowen and shared the duties of chef d'attaque with a local player, Mr. George Weston. On several occasions Mr. Klein stepped out of his place at the leading desk and executed the solos in compositions of importance for violin and orchestra, being thus the first artist to play in Australia such works as the Mendelssohn Concerto, Benjamin Godard's "Concerto Romantique," the Romances of Beethoven and Max Bruch, &c. These efforts invariably evoked hearty acclamations and unqualified praise. Indeed, from first to last the Melbourne folk appear to have testified a keen and ready appreciation of the high-class musical fare put before them, and we repeat that the good seed sown in their midst cannot fail to ultimately bring forth rich fruit.

MANY years ago, and before the establishment of examining musical boards for the granting of diplomas to qualified teachers, we drew attention in this journal to the importance of separating the competent from the incompetent, so that the general public might have some guarantee of the fitness of a candidate for the post to which he or she aspired. The necessity of passing such an ordeal seems now to be generally acknowledged, and we are pleased to see that teachers are usually preferred who are entitled to place the word "certificated" after their name. If recognised qualified professors attached to public institutions were invariably judges on these occasions, the value of a diploma might be accurately gauged; but unfortunately in the present day the term "certificated" seems to act like magic, many appearing neither to know nor care by whom and where this "certificate" was granted. Doubtless any person or persons can open a school for musical instruction, engage professors and sign certificates; but such diplomas, being unsanctioned by any authority, really carry no more weight than—before the rise of examinations—they would have done had they been attested by professional men at their private residences. We all know that certain bodies in England have the sole power of granting what are termed musical "degrees"; but are certificates really "degrees"? and should not, therefore, the issue of these be subject to very careful supervision? Unquestionably, no one will dispute the worth of a diploma legitimately gained before a well-known tribunal—in fact, it is, as we have already said, what we have for years ourselves laboured to establish—but there are certificates and certificates, and those who will not believe in any teachers who have not gained this distinction must be careful, therefore, that they do not rush into the opposite extreme of believing implicitly in those who have.

A WRITER in the Brass Band News has made a careful and exhaustive survey of the Amateur and Volunteer Bands of the metropolis, ending with a comparison between them and the famous contesting bands of the North of England. All this may seem to the general reader a case of history repeating itself in the matter of "tweedledum and tweedledee." But as these amateur bands represent the hobby of a great many who might, but for their existence, be spending their leisure hours in less creditable pursuits, the question involved is of no little importance. Many of these amateur bands play with a precision of attack and warmth and delicacy of expression which delights as much as it surprises educated musicians when they hear them. If the question now agitated would lead to an improvement in the performance of some of the London brass bands it will have been worth while proposing it. The raising of the question will perhaps tend to quell the horror caused by the untrained and ill-balanced noises made by many amateur bands, not only in London, but elsewhere, whose chief desires at present seem to be the production of an unnecessary amount of "blare and bang."

WHEN authentic news becomes scarce, many of the musical journals abroad fall back upon stories of amateurs who are lucky enough to discover—of course, in a pawnbroker's window—genuine Stradivarius violins, of which they become masters on payment of a few shillings. One such story is reported from Norwich, Connecticut. A "perfect specimen of Antonius, the pupil of Andreas Amati, was sold, so the story goes, by a sad-faced, red-eyed stranger" for five dollars. It lay unregarded in the shop window for years, was ultimately purchased for one hundred dollars, and after the owner had cleaned "several inches of dust out of its body," he found that he was the owner of a genuine Stradivarius, dated 16—. It is not stated whether the Amati became changed during the process of cleaning into a Stradivarius; such a description would probably have spoiled the story. There is every reason to believe that this fiddle tale will ultimately stand in musical journalism in the place of the enormous gooseberry and the shower of frogs in the newspapers of every-day life.

VERDI'S "Otello" does not seem to have been brought out under a lucky star, though it must be admitted that on the occasion of its first performance at the Scala of Milan no pains were spared to promote its success. It has since been given at all the principal theatres of Italy. But neither in Paris, London, Berlin, nor St. Petersburg has it yet been heard; whereas in former days a new work by Verdi had scarcely been produced when it was at once announced for representation in all the principal capitals of Europe. At the Paris Opera-house there was a difficulty about the prima donna. At Drury Lane M. Jean de Reszke is said to have objected to the part of Otello, which has the disadvantage, indeed, of being inferior to the part of Iago. At Berlin everything had quite recently been arranged for the performance of a German version of the work when suddenly the celebrated tenor Herr Niemann, who was of course to have impersonated Otello, declared his intention to sing no more, and, according to present appearances, has left the stage for ever.

THAT the sound of a singer's voice can be translated by the phonograph is well known, or at least has been often asserted; but that instrument seems less successful in transmitting singers' names. The Belgian newspapers, for distances of 100 or 150 miles, use it in preference to the telegraph; and the Indépendance Belge was informed two or three weeks since by its correspondent at Calais that "Madame Nicolani" had just arrived and was on her way to Brussels. Whoever Madame Nicolani might be, she is less known to fame than Madame Nicolini, who herself is less celebrated as Madame Nicolini than as Adelina Patti. In consideration of these facts "Madame Nicolani" was transformed in the office of the Indépendance Belge into "Adelina Patti," and as Patti could only have come to Brussels for one purpose it was straightway announced that she was visiting the Belgian capital in order to fulfil an operatic engagement. She had entertained no such intention and was all the time at her castle in Wales.

As we find, from announcements in the daily and other papers, that the musical compositions of amateurs are "corrected and prepared for publication" by competent professors, we often wonder that literary works and pictures cannot, "for a consideration," be as carefully supervised by authors and painters, so that before submitting them to public judgment we may at least feel sure that the recognised rules of language and of drawing will not be glaringly violated. The only difficulty in extending this idea would be that a reviewer in pointing out certain defects in a work would not be certain whether he was criticising a promising young artist or giving a gratuitous lesson to an old established professional "coach." At all events, in these days of prolific publication, we think the matter worthy of thought, for, as one of the audience at the Dublin Theatre exclaimed during the performance of a thrilling melodrama, "we don't expect acting, but you might give us grammar."

THE following advertisement, which appeared in The Public Advertiser, March 10, 1769, p. 3, col. 3, shows the estimation in which some persons then held the practitioners in music:—"Wanted, a Performer on the Organ, who is willing to act as Butler; and if he can shave and dress a Gentleman the more agreeable. Such a person applying to Mr. Woodfall, Stationer, at Charing Cross, may hear further." The profession would be rather shocked by such an offer now, though there are advertisements occasionally appearing which are couched in the like spirit. The desired qualifications vary, but the animus remains the same. It is not always a gentleman who is to be shaved and dressed.

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

THE Bury Times has a Manchester correspondent who cherishes a grudge against the "Song of Solomon." Most people agree that the canonical book in question is an exquisite example of ancient Eastern poetry, both in its style and significance pure and lofty enough to bear the allegorical character traditionally assigned to it. But the gentleman who illuminates the columns of our Lancashire contemporary seems to be one of the nice people who have nasty ideas. He compares "Solomon's Song" to Ovid's "Art of Love," drawing a broad distinction between it and the other scriptures, in which "beauty and purity of expression seem to accentuate the suggestiveness," &c.

All this is à propos to a performance of the "Rose of Sharon" at Manchester, and, of course, our critic falls foul of the libretto, calling it an "incongruous literary mess" and "decidedly incongruous in style," presumably because, in his view, the "Song" and other portions of scripture decline to mix. He is good enough to describe it, further, as "a hash of sacred warp and secular woof" (what a fine "derangement of epitaphs") and as "cum-Bible-cum Arabian Nights-cum-Twaddle." After reading this and much else about the oratorio, we searched the article very carefully and at last came upon a solution of the doubt it had excited. Here is a key to the whole matter: "Sir Francis Bacon, the most gifted mortal who ever lived, has taught us the fundamental rules of good taste, both for the drama and music, in his 'instructions to the players' in the so-called Shakes- pearean but really Baconian play of 'Hamlet.'" A hopeless case apparently!

CIRCUMSTANCES rendering inexpedient the revival of Sullivan's "Light of the World" at the forthcoming Gloucester Festival, his "Prodigal Son" will be substituted. The performance, with that of "The Golden Legend," takes place under the composer in person. It is now settled to have two new compositions at Gloucester—a work by Dr. Mackenzie and Mr. C. L. Williams's Church Cantata "The Last Night at Bethany." Hopes are entertained, also, of an orchestral piece from Mr. Cowen, whose return to England must precede a definite conclusion on the matter. Anyhow, the Cathedral Festival this year will be one of uncommon interest and importance.

MR. WILLIAMS'S Church Cantata is designed for Church use in Holy Week, and has been laid out somewhat on the lines of similar works by Bach. The librettist, Mr. Joseph Bennett, has taken the Scriptural narrative of the last evening spent by our Lord in the house of Mary and Martha, and founded upon each paragraph appropriate meditations, thrown into the form of verse, rhymed or unrhymed. For example, the declaration of Judas that the ointment should have been sold and the proceeds given to the poor, suggests a chorus beginning—

The poor! O Man of Sorrows!
O Wanderer, faint and weary!
Who is so poor as Thou?

The Cantata includes one orchestral number entitled "Our Lord sleeps." In the course of this a charming effect will be produced by the hushing of the instruments midway, while boys stationed at the east end of the Cathedral softly sing, accompanied by harps, "For so He giveth His beloved sleep."

NEVER teach your dog to play the pianoforte. A correspondent writes: "I was visiting a friend some years ago who owned a very beautiful and intelligent dog. My friend had been in the habit of sitting at the pianoforte with the dog on his knees, and pressing the keys down with the dog's paws. The dog's expression at such times was really quite a study, and he seemed to realise that an important and solemn operation was under way. I was told that the dog eventually would allow no one to play the pianoforte if he was in the room, but would bark and attempt to jump on the performer's lap, in order to take his usual place at the keys. It was only when he had been carried howling from the room that anyone could play the pianoforte in comfort, and enjoy other than the animal's two-part pieces." Here is a sad case of a noble dog-like nature reduced, by association with human beings, to the level of men and women.

VENDORS of patent medicines are adepts at springing advertisements of their wares upon unsuspecting readers. You see an attractive head-line among the news of the day; your interest is stirred by a few artful paragraphs à propos des bottes, and then you are brought up short by a recommendation of Somebody's soap, or So-and-So's Heal-all. The device seems to be creeping into the music trade. When looking through a review of new music the other day, we read: "The valse I am especially in love with is numbered Op. 30, No. 2; they are all published by Breitkopf and Härtel, and can be obtained here (as can all the foreign music mentioned), at Messrs.—, of—, who keep them in stock, whereas I think the other foreign music importers would be obliged to send abroad for them, thus causing a delay of at least a week." Barefaced, but not bad!

AN American lady has discovered that "youthful singing is often very distressing indeed to the cultivated ear," and thus, from the prosaic Western continent, comes another blow at our cherished traditions. Where in poetry or romance are children's voices anything but sweet, not to say angelic? It was a poet who said of them: "Voices of cherubs are they, for they breathe of Paradise; clear, liquid tones, that flow from pure lips and innocent hearts, like the sweetest notes of a flute, or the falling of water from a fountain." How pretty! and we are now to be told that (American) children's voices, as commonly heard, are loud, harsh, and rasping; that they should be trained from the top downwards instead of from the bottom upwards, and so on. Are none of our cherished beliefs sacred!

A SHORT time ago certain newspapers stated that an opera company performing in Melbourne consisted entirely of parrots, and had but one work—Bellini's "Norma"—in its repertory. We were gravely told that the birds went through their parts like human artists, but that the representative of the heroine became so alarmed by the frantic attempts of the audience to encore her in "Casta Diva" that she fled to the wings, and would not re-appear till the manager had entreated the audience to abstain from ill-timed applause. No doubt this beautiful parrot's tail—no, tale—was invented by some Berlioz as a scathing satire on Italian opera generally, but that it was rather too deep-laid and no one saw it. Yet, regarded as sarcasm, there seems to be considerable singing in it.

THE gentleman who annotates the catalogues of the Royal Academy of Arts should be provided with a musical assistant. Describing the portrait of Mr. Piatti, by the late Frank Holl, he says: "Three-quarter figure, seated to l., full face; his double-bass, on which his l. hand rests, between his knees, a bow in his r. hand, spectacles, dark background, with tapestry." The objections to this account are, first, that Mr. Piatti does not play the double-bass, and, next, that if he did, he could not hold the instrument between his knees. In point of nomenclature, the violoncello is unlucky. There be those, on the one hand, who call it a bass fiddle, and, on the other, there be men like the R.A. scribe, who know it only as a double-bass.

"WHY is the viola so little cultivated, in comparison with the rest of the violin family?" An enthusiastic amateur answers that it is because the notes for the instrument are written in the alto clef. Musicians will of course tell us that this must be so; but considering that in music printed for the tenor voice the treble has now supplanted the orthodox C clef, there may still be some hope for our correspondent. Public opinion has much power in pressing forward any system which tends to popularise music, and as so much has already been conceded, the boldest innovator has at least a right to be heard.

THE "Automatic Pianoforte Player," lately announced, has many advantages. There is no necessity for it to practise scales and exercises every morning, or that keys should be held down whilst single notes are thumped out with one finger. Its performance need never interrupt conversation; it can be stopped at any moment by the will of the majority; and criticism, however severe, can give no offence, defects, if any, being rectified on application to the manufacturer.

UNDER the title of "A Fantasia at Suakin," the Daily Telegraph gives an account of a recent Moslem merry-making. "There were tom-toms of gourds, baked clay, bowls, barrels, and copper kettle-drums, with most ancient and quaint wind and string instruments—ram's horns shells, and the savage progenitors of banjos and harps." The Concert began with "tom-toming, horn-blowing, thrumming of strings, shrill monotonous trilling by the women, and a medley of war-whooping and sing-song repetition, three syllables and two notes, by the men." This, we should imagine, is the severest attack that has yet been made upon the British.

THERE are just now two more of those dreadful works coming out which strive to find a connection between musical sounds and colours. The authors of such nightmare productions all go upon what appears to them the convincing proof of such connection—namely, that there are seven notes in the scale and seven colours of the spectrum. But there are not seven notes, and only seven, in the scale. We Europeans choose to select twelve out of the infinite possible number, while the Egyptians, we are told, have twenty or thereabouts. And the solar spectrum has not seven colours, as any one with eyes in his head can see, but three primary and any number of secondary tints.

RECENT criticisms upon the examining mania have not been confined to England. The Musical Record, an American contemporary, observes: "Many teachers think that examining is teaching. They continually ask questions instead of imparting information, and these questions are not often Socratic. They play cat and mouse with a little morsel of information, dragging it back almost before it has parted from them. If they make the statement that 'the cat has a tail,' they must ask, 'What has the cat?' 'Who has the tail?' 'What about the cat and the tail?' And all this time the class is not learning anything."

MADAME ADELINA PATTI has been playing the part of Lady Bountiful in Swansea Valley, according to annual custom. The money value of her gifts to the poor has not been stated, but let us put it as equal to the artist's receipt from a single Concert, and say six or seven hundred pounds—no mean sum wherewith to lighten the homes of a few cottagers. We talk of the fabled achievements of Orpheus, at whose bidding

Plants and flowers
Ever sprung; as sun and showers
There had made a lasting spring.

What is Orpheus to Madame Patti, who has only to open first her mouth and then her hand in order to make glad the hearts of the distressed.

WE once heard a young student estimate the worth of Beethoven's Sonatas by their prices, declaring that her sister had got beyond her because she played a five-shilling one, whilst hers only cost three shillings. Recently we have met with another test of the merit of music, for in a notice of a Concert the critic says that a certain piece was the principal feature of the evening "because it was the longest."

THE query "Who gives lessons on the harp?" which appeared a few days ago in a morning contemporary, is evidently modelled upon the well-known "Who's Griffiths?" Let us hope that this form of appeal for pupils from members of the musical profession may not spread.

AN American correspondent has let the world know the reason why Mr. Straus, the eminent and respected violinist, remains a bachelor. "I remember a phrase of his as he was taking his violin lovingly out of its case: 'I shall never marry. This (touching his violin) has all my affection; it is wife, friend, everything to me; it knows when I am sorry and mourns with me; it knows when I am glad and rejoices with me; it never scolds, it never tires of me.'" Mr. Straus's spouse has at least two of the virtues catalogued by old Jeremy Taylor in his description of a good wife: "She is the minister of graces innumerable," and "her voice is sweet music."

MR. ANDREW LANG and Mr. Baring-Gould have recently turned attention to English folk-songs, pleading for their collection and preservation before they disappear and are no more known. The matter is certainly important for various reasons, and we hope that its urgency will lead to prompt measures of preservation. By the way, it is curious to find Mr. Lang, when talking about a thoroughly English subject, using the German word Märchen. Our folk-songs do not come to us from Germany, and surely there is no serious objection to the English term "legends."

ENGLISH clergymen are hard to beat in the matter of advertisements for musicians willing to take charge of an organ and a horse, or tend the rectorial garden when not playing in church, but our Transatlantic kin are running them hard. The following lately appeared in the New York Herald: "Musicians wanted.—An A No. 1 String Band of four or five men, who could also act as bookkeeper, night-watch, barber, telegraph operator, or other hotel work; must be sober, honest, and capable; to go South in winter and Colorado in summer." There has, no doubt, been a rush of Germans to the address given.

INFINITELY sad was the fate of Mr. John Barraclough, who lost his life in the late snowstorm. Within sight of Lincoln Cathedral, of which he was a lay vicar, and almost within calling distance of help, the merciless weather got hold of him and killed him by the road side. His actual passing away, under the benumbing influence of cold, may have been painless, but who can think without compassion of the struggle with the elements, of the growing despair and final surrender. The essentials of tragedy were not wanting in the scene of the lay vicar's death.

SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN is known to watch over his musical progeny with all a parent's solicitude, but we cannot bring ourselves to believe, without further evidence, that he objected to, and insisted on the suppression of a parody on the theme of his "Lost Chord," introduced by Mr. Solomon into that very transitory entertainment, the Guards' burlesque. Sir Arthur's known ability and readiness to appreciate a joke is such strong prima facie evidence against the truth of the report that his admirers put the rumour from them as an invention of the enemy.

ORGANISTS should not consult their clergyman about the selection of voluntaries. It is reported that when a certain reverend gentleman was approached by his musical colleague with the question: "What shall I play?" he, with his mind fixed upon the sermon, answered: "What kind of a hand have you got?" That organist left the vestry under the reproach attached to men who give occasion for the enemy to blaspheme.

"IL TROVATORE" has actually been performed at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, the temple of Wagner and German Opera, and the Wagnerian critics had to notice it. He of the Tribune said "the audience were light-hearted children"—a good thing anyhow. His brother of the Sun admitted that Verdi's music has "some genial qualities"; and the writer in the World, speaking exactly what he felt, protested that "after a heavy dose of Wagner, Verdi is thoroughly enjoyable." To crown all, a musical journal oddly declares: "Wagnerism is dying of its own too much."

THE Crystal Palace directors are contemplating the performance, in the central transept, on June 22, of Mendelssohn's "Elijah." It is not correct that the work will be given under Handel Festival conditions; because, though Mr. Manns's orchestra will, of course, be enlarged, only the London contingent of the Festival choir will attend. Mendelssohn's orchestration will assuredly lose much in so vast a space as the transept; but the choruses may be expected to come out grandly. The occasion cannot fail to be one of interest.

FOR some time past rumours have been heard of a wonderful scheme, destined, like many predecessors, to rehabilitate Italian opera. The embryo project was made very mysterious, and we could only judge by the important air of those who professed to be "in the know" that very great things were anticipated. There being, we are assured, no further occasion for secrecy, the curtain has been drawn and we see—nothing! The scheme, like Macbeth's Witches, has made itself air.

IT is stated in a New York paper that the ladies who impersonated the Rhine Maidens at the recent production of "Das Rheingold" actually suffered from "sea-sickness," due to the motions they were compelled to make by Wagner's inexorable machinery. The rehearsals, we are told, had to be interrupted on several occasions till the poor women could recover. A lively commentator puts their sad condition very tersely: "Fancy having to bring out your notes and keep down your breakfast at the same time!"

GERMAN opera at Rotterdam appears to be in a bad way. The director having made a public appeal for funds and obtained no response, has addressed himself to the guardians of the public purse, who are not expected to unloose its strings in his favour. The case of Italian Opera in Rome is little better, the total receipts of four theatres, including the two opera houses, on a given evening being no more than 3,000 francs! "C'est maigre!" comments the Ménestrel.

MUSIC has a place in politics. The Italians having revived the "Sicilian Vespers," and applauded it with significant looks towards France, the lively Gaul has replied by playing Offenbach's "La Fille du Tambour Major," with one eye on Italy. The scene of Napoleon's entry into Milan is the actual retort courteous. This sort of war is, at any rate, cheap, bloodless, and amusing, and we can wish success to both sides.

A COUNTRY correspondent who has seen two pieces advertised as the "Rage of London," writes to ask how he can be certain to purchase the right one, especially as the "rage" has hitherto been confined to the metropolis. We regret that we cannot assist him in the matter.

ANOTHER American critic of the "Rheingold" has discovered that the language used by the River Girls is Volapük. He bursts into song over the idea and exclaims:

And round it float three Maidens, for its recesses hold
The treasure they are charged to guard, the magic, mystic Gold;
And up and down, and back and forth, they go in wild gyration,
And Volapük their level best in this painful situation.
"Weia Waga" is their song, "Wagga-wagga and Wakulla, Wissahickon, Wackasassa, Witlahrochee and Walulla!"

AN incident, resembling that which followed the breaking of Mr. Beerbohm Tree's "points" at the Crystal Palace, recently took place in Rome during a performance of "Les Huguenots." While the duel scene was going on a catastrophe happened to the costume of one of the performers, and a garment which is indispensable even to a Huguenot fell down about his knees. The scene ended with a universal roar of laughter.

THE Duke of Saxe-Coburg has not yet been convinced that the composition of Italian Opera is beyond him. His first two works of the kind were produced in England, and promptly condemned, as elsewhere, but the Duke goes calmly on, and now the world is threatened with another, called "Diana di Solange." Proverbial philosophy teaches to "beware of the third time," and Mr. Augustus Harris should be on his guard.

MR. LUDWIG, now in the United States with a Concert party, finds that there is money in Irish music. The sympathy of the Americans goes with him, and, of course, the expatriated Hibernians hail him with all the emotionalism of their race. He is fortunate in having such a stock of songs to draw upon. The "distressful country" is rich in beautiful tune, and can put her sorrows to music which might melt the heart of the world.

PROGRAMME of the Leeds Festival, 1889: Mass in E flat, Schubert; German Requiem, Brahms; "Faust," Berlioz; "Lobgesang," Mendelssohn; Music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Mendelssohn; Choral Symphony, Beethoven; "Sword of Argantyr," Corder; music to Pope's "St. Cecilia" Ode, Parry; "Sacrifice of Freia," Creser; "Golden Legend," Sullivan, and some works of smaller dimensions.

ANOTHER story of Dr. von Bülow, who, unlike his countrymen generally, is said to have great contempt for titles. A singer at one of the Philharmonic Concerts addressed him three times as "Herr Professor." He took no notice the first and second time, but the third was too much for him. "Madame," he said, "if you wish to offend me at any cost, call me Court pianist."

A MEETING was held at the Royal College of Music, on the 20th ult., to consider in what way Joseph Joachim's English admirers can best celebrate his artistic jubilee. At Cambridge the great violinist will be placed by his friends in the seat of honour at a banquet—a thoroughly English procedure, which the guest, being quite at home in England, will properly appreciate.

AMATEUR pianists of the sensational school have a fine time before them. Sapelnikoff is coming from St. Petersburg, and there is talk of the advent of Rosenthal from America. Each is "the very greatest of the modern school." How the strings and hammers will fly!

THE Communal Council of Brussels have got rid of Messrs. Dupont and Lapissade, directors of La Monnaie, by a summary process. Although those gentlemen had accepted every condition for a new term, they were beaten by 14 votes to 13. The decision came as a great surprise. According to one journal the directors were not humble enough. Town Councillors stand on their dignity.

As was expected of him, Verdi puts his foot down resolutely on the project to celebrate his artistic jubilee. He does not hum and haw about it, but speaks straight to the point, declaring, through the Gazetta Musicale of Milan, that he is resolutely opposed to the scheme in whatever fashion it may be carried out. This is quite refreshing in a pushing and self-seeking age.

A PROFIT of £200 was made by the Committee of the North Staffordshire Musical Festival held at Hanley in October last, the receipts being £946 19s. and the disbursements £746 19s. The Pottery people have, apparently, found out the secret of making two ends meet and overlap. At Gloucester, the chorus, for four days' work, cost £800; at Hanley, for one day, the expense was £42 1s.!

MR. MAZZUCATO having been engaged by Mr. Harris to write an Italian version of the "Meister-singer" book, has disappeared and cannot be found. Most probably, the missing man has retired to some desert place where he can wrestle with his task, thus reviving an ancient practice. Later news: Mr. Mazzucato discovered in Milan, which is not a desert place, and probably there has been no wrestling.

WE hardly know whether or not to congratulate Mr. Max Pauer upon his inability to accept the post of professor of pianoforte solo playing offered him at the Prague Conservatorium, so much depends upon circumstances. But there is no difficulty in tendering felicitations upon the fact that while one important academy holds him to an engagement another seeks to entice him away. This is something like appreciation.

DR. MACKENZIE'S "Dream of Jubal" has been already announced for performance by the Brighton and Hove Choral and Orchestral Society, on June 6, and the Cheltenham Festival Choral Society, and one or two of the London suburban societies are contemplating the production of the work.

AT last an occasion has been found for that vocal defect, the tremolo. The Rhine Maidens in New York are all "wobblers" of a pronounced description, but they have a press friend who points out that, as they are supposed to be singing under water, the effect of their performance is realistic. So true is it that nothing has been created in vain.

M. RÉNÉ BAILLOT, a Professor at the Paris Conservatoire, has sold to the library of that Institution the autograph of Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonata in F minor (Op. 57). The sum demanded was only 600 francs, which M. Baillot has given to a musical charity. At the sale of Beethoven's effects this same manuscript was disposed of for thirty-six kreutzers.

At the Casino in New York you, wanting an opera-glass, drop a "quarter" into the slot of a box in front of your seat, and the binocular is automatically delivered. Impulsive people cry, "What faith in human nature!" not knowing that before the Automatic Opera Glass Company began operations all pawnbrokers were warned against taking the glasses in pledge.

DR. VON BÜLOW declares that he is not wanted in England. Nothing could be farther from the truth. The Doctor is welcome whenever he chooses to come. He instructs us, and blends instruction with amusement, to say nothing of a pleasurable anxiety as to what he may do next. Just now, we presume, the Doctor is forging a thunderbolt for the behoof of Rubinstein, who lately scored off him so unmistakably.

A PRIVATE letter from Madrid informs us that Mr. Mancinelli's orchestral work, "Scène Veneziane," lately produced in the Spanish capital, will be performed in London this season under the composer's direction. The piece is in five movements, founded on the incidents of a love story, and the Spanish critics speak well of it.

ONE paragraph in the latest from America is too good to be lost. While the country was mourning the death of General Grant, and memorial services were everywhere being held, the proprietor of a dime museum in Albany announced the following programme:—"In memory of General U. S. Grant. Grand Sacred Concert. Two Hours of Solid Fun!"

THE Eton College Choir sang Stanford's "Revenge" to the Queen and Empress Frederick, at Windsor Castle, on Saturday last. The theme is a good one for hearing in the palace of an English sovereign. How that "bright occidental star," Queen Elizabeth, would have revelled in it.

THE vicar of Coleford, Gloucestershire, writes to the Guardian in horror because two Church of England musicians recently lent a helping hand at a Nonconformist bazaar. It would seem that the organ gallery is a place more conducive to generous feeling and brotherly love than the pulpit.

THE last new satire on musical prodigies is immense. There is a monkey which has been taught to play the pianoforte. Being quadrumanous he performs pieces for four hands, and—turns over with his tail!

MADAME MARGARET DE PACHMANN is now residing in Paris and winning hearty applause by her excellent pianoforte playing. We are glad to learn that Mr. Arthur Chappell has engaged this accomplished artist for a Popular Concert.

MADAME PATTI kept her birthday at Craig-y-nos Castle, for the first time, on the 19th ult. The servants got up a "surprise" for their mistress in the shape of a performance of some kind, particulars of which are not to hand.

If anybody wants to spend £2,000 on a violin, he may be interested to know that the present possessor of a magnificent instrument, in Glasgow, is prepared to refuse the sum.

A CONTEMPORARY prints an excellent letter, which is headed "The Encouragement of Comopsers." By all means let the "comopsers" be encouraged if they want it.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

WE have to record two performances by this Society during the past month, the first of which, however, may be briefly dismissed. One performance of "Elijah" resembles another at the Albert Hall, so far as regards the choruses, and that of the 2nd ult. was only noteworthy on account of the fact that the list of soloists did not include a single member of the quartet usually associated with this and other oratorios—we refer, of course, to Madame Albani, Madame Patey, and Messrs. Lloyd and Santley. Madame Nordica and Mr. Henschel, however, repeated the successes they had won in "Elijah" at Novello's Oratorio Concerts in the previous week. Madame Belle Cole has greatly improved, and Mr. Charles Banks gave moderate satisfaction. One of the most acceptable solo efforts was that of Miss Julia Neilson, in "Woe unto them," and the young artist would do well to devote more of her attention to the concert-room, where she could not fail to be welcome.

The Concert of the 20th was of greater interest, as the principal item was Signor Mancinelli's sacred Cantata "Isaías," which had not been heard since its production at the Norwich Festival in October, 1887. As festival novelties are now so quickly brought to a hearing in London as a rule, we must look for some special cause for this neglect, and we may find it in the peculiar characteristics of the work, which render it utterly unlike the masterpieces of sacred musical art which have found favour in this country. Signor Mancinelli, being an Italian, cannot be blamed for writing like an Italian, and where he has permitted his talent to exercise itself naturally, he has been entirely successful. The melodic charm and expressiveness of the opening chorus of Maidens, the duet between Anna and Judith, Hezekiah's air at the opening of the second act, and both Finales is undeniable. Where the composer attempts to be picturesque, however, he becomes simply vulgar and theatrical. Much of the long declamatory solo of Isaías, in the first part, is mere bombast, and the orchestral illustration of the destruction of Sennacherib's host is melodramatic music of the most tawdry kind. It need scarcely be said that the contrapuntal elaboration which we are accustomed to look for in sacred works is conspicuous by its absence. Only pedants, however, would complain of this; a sweeping impressive unison is preferable to a fugue in which there is nothing save mere science. It is not at all likely that "Isaías" will ever be popular with choral societies, but it is the work of a very clever musician from whom much may be expected. The performance was in all respects creditable to Mr. Barnby and his forces. The choir sang with the utmost spirit, and the effect when the entire mass moved in unison or in broadly written harmony was exceedingly fine. The soloists were well chosen. Madame Nordica is essentially a dramatic soprano, and she rendered the fullest possible justice to the soprano music. Miss Lena Little and Mr. Barton McGuckin resumed the parts they had so ably interpreted at Norwich. Mr. Alec Marsh was competent in the title-rôle, and Mr. Lucas Williams made a very favourable impression in the curious solo allotted to Sennacherib. "Isaías" was preceded by Mr. Barnby's effective setting of the 97th Psalm, "The Lord is King," which, it may be remembered, was composed for the Leeds Festival of 1883.

The performance of Benoit's "Lucifer," which was postponed, will now take place on April 3. It is understood that Madame Lemmens Sherrington will re-appear at this Concert.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

ALTHOUGH Mr. Henschel has not brought forward any novelties of exceptional importance, he has given a series of programmes strong in general interest and variety during the past month. The first Concert of which we have to take note is that of January 29. This commenced with Mr. Hamish MacCunn's fresh and spirited Overture "Land of the Mountain and the Flood," which first drew attention to the brilliant talent of the young Scottish musician. It was conducted by the composer himself, and was very warmly received. A Ballad in F sharp minor, for violin, by Mr. Henschel, proved to be a favourable example of what the Germans call "Kapellmeister" music. That is to say, it is generally effective and musically without being original. Brahms's melodious and genial Symphony in D

(No. 2) was, on the whole, satisfactorily rendered, and the programme was completed by Glinka's characteristic piece, "Komarinskaja," and Wagner's "Huldigungs-Marsch."

Tschaikowsky's Solemn Overture "1812" was repeated at the next Concert, on the 5th ult. It cannot be said that the work gained much by a second hearing, for beyond the subject-matter, which for the most part is not original, it contains very little of interest. It is to be hoped that Tschaikowsky's New Symphony in E minor, which we are to hear at the Philharmonic Concerts, will prove a more worthy example of the Russian School. The orchestra was in unusually good form on this occasion, and we do not desire to hear a better performance of Schubert's Unfinished Symphony in B minor, nor of Liszt's Symphonic Poem "Les Préludes." Saint-Saëns's grotesque piece "Danse Macabre" is scarcely worthy of a place in a high-class programme; it would be more suitable at Promenade Concerts. Mr. Max Pauer's rendering of Beethoven's Concerto in E flat was mediocre, and therefore does not call for high praise nor severe blame.

The following Tuesday was the eve of the anniversary of Wagner's death, and very naturally Mr. Henschel marked the occasion by performing selections from the Bayreuth master's works, coupling therewith Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony. Of course he had his reward in a greatly increased attendance, as for some occult reason which conservative musicians cannot understand, the public persists in regarding a programme composed entirely of Beethoven and Wagner's music as more attractive than any other, so far as orchestral Concerts are concerned. The selections given on the present occasion are now so familiar, that neither description nor comment is necessary. They comprised the Prelude to "Lohengrin," Hans Sachs' Monologue "Wahn, Wahn," from "Die Meistersinger," splendidly rendered by Mr. Henschel; the Prelude and the Good Friday Music from "Parsifal," and the Prelude and close from "Tristan und Isolde." If the rendering of these excerpts was not exactly such as would have satisfied the most fervent admirers of the poet-composer, it was on the whole satisfactory, and each piece roused the crowded audience to enthusiasm.

The Concert of the 19th ult. was the last of the subscription series. There was plenty of variety in the five items of which the programme was composed, but unfortunately all of them did not prove equally satisfactory. The Overture to Wagner's early opera "Die Feen," which was recently revived, somewhat unwisely, at Munich, was of course regarded only in the light of a curiosity. Wagner himself looked upon it with contempt, and it would have been better to have allowed it to rest. The body of the work was written at Würzburg in 1833, when the composer was chorusmaster in that city, and the Overture was added during the first week of the following year. It is a fully-developed piece, in regular form. In the introduction the identity of the composer may be faintly discerned, but the Allegro may fairly be described as Weber and water until the Coda, when there is a phrase almost identical with one at the close of the second act of "Der fliegende Holländer." The Overture was received with indifference, and it is not likely to be heard again. Of the rendering of Beethoven's Violin Concerto by Mr. Johann Kruse, it is unnecessary to speak, as the player is not likely to appear again on a London Concert platform until he has made progress in the technicalities of his instrument. His engagement on the present occasion was an unfortunate mistake. Haydn's Symphony in B flat (No. 9 of the Salomon set) was very welcome, and its cordial reception should encourage those who have the management of orchestral Concerts to make more extensive use of the cheery old master's works than at present they seem inclined to do. Mozart's Overture to "Die Zauberflöte" headed the programme, and Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody in D (No. 2) closed it. Of the extra Concert, at which Mr. Broughton's Leeds Choir was to appear in Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night" and Beethoven's Choral Symphony, notice must be reserved until next month.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE announcement that Otto Hegner would play at the Palace on the 9th ult. was enough to account for the very large audience which assembled at the resumption of the Saturday series. The novelty of the programme was the Overture to Lalo's opera "Le Roi d'Ys," a sombre and elaborately scored specimen of the modern romantic French school, to which the author belongs in sentiment if not in years, the date of his birth, according to the programme-book, being as far back as 1823. He is chiefly known to English audiences by his violin music, for which Señor Sarasate exhibits a marked predilection, and by a fine Quartet which Sir Charles Hallé introduced at one of his Chamber Concerts last summer. Connoisseurs of his music assert that his true bent is towards the drama, but this is a question which cannot be decided by a single hearing of a detached fragment of his opera. Beethoven's third Concerto (that in C minor) was chosen by Otto Hegner as his cheval de bataille on this occasion, and his performance was, in spite of the necessary limitations, a signal success so far as the suffrages of the majority of those present were concerned. Adverse comment has been excited by his introduction of an elaborate and highly inappropriate cadenza in the first movement, but as this embellishment was the work of his teacher, Herr Glaus of Basle, the error in judgment may be readily condoned. For his solos Hegner gave two pieces by Liszt, and being encored for his rendering of the study "Gnomesreigen," played a Sonata of Scarlatti's. The programme also included fine performances by Mr. Manns's orchestra of Beethoven's Eighth Symphony and Wagner's "Rienzi" Overture. Miss Emily Spada, an American vocalist, who replaced Madame Nordica in "The Golden Legend" at one of the earlier Concerts of this series, and has since been heard at the Albert Hall, sang "Robert, toi que j'aime" and Elizabeth's Prayer from "Tannhäuser." Her voice is of considerable volume, but hard in quality, and both in the matter of tunefulness and production she leaves room for much improvement.

Mr. Hamish MacCunn's new and important work "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," given on the 16th ult., contains some fine thoughts, an immense amount of energy and fire, some detached scenes of considerable beauty and originality, a masterful treatment of all the resources of a full orchestra, evidences of a real rhythmical instinct, and a happy audacity in attacking a dramatic situation which seems never afraid of failure. It must be confessed that the shortcomings of the composition are due in great part to the scrappiness of the libretto. All development and continuity are precluded by the way in which the story is cut up into a number of very short scenes. A dramatic Cantata of this kind, where the chorus are not the actors of the drama but only the reciters of the occurrences in that drama, must be a hybrid sort of a thing at best. Hence writers like Dvorák in the "Spectre's Bride," being fully aware of this, use the words only as a means to an end, and, pace Wagner, Dvorák's success justifies the method. He gives us plenty of development, is not afraid to repeat words, and writes some very fine long movements. Mr. MacCunn on the other hand, goes to the extreme of saying his say once (and very well sometimes), but before his hearers have time to feel an interest in the movement it is over; the full close comes and we are started in a fresh number.

The performance of the Cantata was of very unequal merit, the chorus leaving something to be desired on the score of attack and tune, especially in the tenors. Of the soloists, Mr. Andrew Black was by far the most successful, using his fine voice with excellent result in the baritone rôle. Madame Nordica did her best with the soprano part, but failed to make it attractive. Mr. Iver McKay sang the tenor music with all possible effect. Mr. Manns conducted with great care. A very hearty welcome was given to the composer, who was called on to the orchestra at the close of his work.

Professor Stanford's new Symphony, which was performed for the first time in this country at the Concert of the 23rd ult., fully justified the high praise bestowed upon it by the Berlin press. It is not only exceedingly interesting as a piece of scholarly workmanship; it is also full of fresh and genial thoughts. The Intermezzo, already known as an Entr'acte to the composer's "Œdipus" music, is thoroughly graceful and attractive; but it is in the slow movement that the composer has put forth his whole strength. We have not space to do more than indicate the singularly effective introduction of the second subject, in which the harp accompaniment plays a most prominent part, and the impressive climax in which the movement culminates. The Finale is a most spirited movement, in which one can hear the instruments, as though endowed with human voices, for ever reiterating the word "Freiheit." The first principal subject is a fine and original tune, a fact on which we lay the more stress because the second subject of the first movement is practically indistinguishable from the theme of the first of Brahms's Liebeslieder (first series). The performance was on the whole excellent, though the Intermezzo was taken too slow and the Finale somewhat hurried. In conclusion, we have no hesitation in pronouncing this Symphony to contain the best and maturest work which Professor Stanford has yet done. It exhibits the qualities of head and heart in completer equipoise than is to be met with in any of his previous compositions. Fräulein Fillunger, the vocalist on this occasion, confirmed the favourable impression which she created at the Popular Concerts. She not only uses a good voice in thoroughly artistic fashion, but she is endowed with a thorough musical instinct and an admirable sense of rhythm. Fräulein Fillunger's selections were Beethoven's "Ah! perfido," and Schubert's "Die Allmacht," both exacting songs, and in each she achieved a marked success. Miss Fanny Davies was heard in Reinecke's Concerto in F sharp minor and Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in E minor (Op. 35). The former is not a work calculated to awaken enthusiasm, but Miss Davies managed to render the solo part very effective by her artistic and finished playing. The programme also included the Overtures to "Saul" and "Ruy Blas," and a selection from Grieg's piquant Suite "Peer Gynt."

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

So far, the present season of this enterprise has been even more quiet and uneventful than usual, and with few exceptions the programmes during the past month require little more than formal record. One of these exceptions was the Concert of Monday, January 28, with which our notice must commence. This was rendered interesting by the production of a new Sonata for pianoforte and violoncello by Signor Piatti. It is only within the last few years that the accomplished artist has devoted himself to the composition of Sonatas. No. 1, in C, was produced on January 5, 1885, and No. 2, in D, on April 5 of the following year. The present work is in F, and consists, as usual, of three movements. The general style of the music is elegant and refined rather than vigorous and passionate. In the first movement the most noteworthy features are the melodious second subject and the charming Coda. The slow movement, a Romanza in B flat, flows on pleasantly from the first note to the last, and the Finale is nearly equal to the first movement in merit. It should be added that Signor Piatti has divided the interest fairly between the two instruments. The rendering of the work by the composer and Miss Fanny Davies was of course perfect, and, equally of course, it was warmly received. Another novelty was Schumann's Fantasiestücke (Op. 111). This charming series of three pieces in the composer's most attractive manner was executed to perfection by Miss Davies, who is one of the few pianists who give perfect satisfaction in Schumann's music. Mozart's Quartet in C (No. 6) and Haydn's Pianoforte Trio in the same key completed the instrumental portion of the programme. Miss Liza Lehmann being unable to appear as the vocalist, her place was taken by Miss Marguerite Hall, whose rendering of songs by Schubert and Goring Thomas gave much satisfaction.

The Concert of Saturday, the 2nd ult., may be dismissed with a few lines. The great attraction was Schubert's Octet, which was magnificently played by the same artists as on a former occasion this season. The only other concerted work was Emmanuel Bach's Sonata in C minor, for pianoforte and violin, not so elaborate or characteristic of the composer's style as some of these not yet introduced at these Concerts, but nevertheless a pleasing work. There was only one song, Macfarren's "Pack clouds away," which was sung by Miss Kate Flinn. Sir Charles Hallé played Chopin's Impromptu in F sharp and his Polonaise in F sharp minor.

The large attendance on the following Monday was to be accounted for by the presence of Beethoven's Septet in the programme, and also because Mr. Max Pauer was announced to play Schumann's Etudes Symphoniques, a more important work than is now often heard at the Monday Concerts. Of the former of course nothing need be said. Mr. Max Pauer, who is now established as a professor at the Cologne Conservatorium, has scarcely improved as an executant since he was last with us. There were not a few mistakes in the earlier portion of the work, but he improved as he went on, and the rendering of the brilliant Finale, à la Marcia, was all that could be desired. Mdle. Fillunger, made an extremely favourable impression in Lieder by Schumann and Brahms. She has a bright, powerful voice, particularly good in the upper register, and she sings in an expressive, almost dramatic style. Haydn's Quartet in D minor (Op. 42) completed the programme.

On Saturday, the 9th ult., Mr. Johann Kruse, a new violinist, made his first appearance. We understand that he was born in Adelaide, of Belgian parents, and he has studied under Herr Joachim. The impression he made was that he has profited by the teaching he has received. An unfortunate defect, however, is his frequently imperfect intonation. This was noticeable alike in Schubert's Quartet in D minor and in Spohr's Scena Cantante, which he chose as his solo. Mr. Max Pauer brought forward Hummel's almost forgotten Sonata in F sharp minor (Op. 81). It is not a very interesting work as a whole, but the last movement is far superior to the other two. Miss Marguerite Hall was again the vocalist, and she had to decline an encore after Miss Carmichael's charming "June Song." The Concert ended with Beethoven's String Trio in C minor (Op. 9, No. 3).

Mr. Johann Kruse was again the leader on the following Monday, and on this occasion he brought forward a remarkably vigorous and effective Sonata in G minor, by Tartini. His execution in this and also in the concerted works—Beethoven's Quartet in E flat (Op. 74) and Brahms's Trio in C minor (Op. 101)—was somewhat rough and unfinished. Mr. Max Pauer played Chopin's Nocturne in E, and the Scherzo in B minor, being far more satisfactory in the second than in the first of these pieces. Thanks are due to Miss Liza Lehmann for introducing two songs by Mr. Hamish MacCunn, though it cannot be said that they show the young Scottish composer in his most favourable light. They are settings of verses by Thomas Moore, and Mr. MacCunn was evidently not so inspired as he is in illustrating the poetry of his native land.

The programme of Saturday, the 16th ult., was wholly made up of familiar works. They included Mendelssohn's Quartet in E flat (Op. 44, No. 3), Beethoven's "Waldstein" Sonata, played in her most conscientious manner by Miss Agnes Zimmermann; Schumann's Pianoforte Quartet in E flat (Op. 47), and three of Dr. Mackenzie's violin pieces, rendered by Madame Néruda. Nos. 2, 3, and 4 are evidently preferred by the artist to the others, but it would surely be well to give the latter a trial. Mrs. Henschel sang in her most charming manner Brahms's "Gute Nacht" and a very pleasing setting of verses by Tennyson, "O sun that wakenest," by Mr. F. Corder.

Again, on Monday, the 18th ult., there was little or nothing requiring comment. A wonderfully fine performance of Schumann's Quartet in F (Op. 41, No. 2) was really the most attractive feature of the Concert. Chopin's Andante Spianato and Polonaise in E flat only enabled Miss Fanny Davies to display her executive powers. Signor Piatti's new Pianoforte and Violoncello Sonata in F was repeated, and the Concert ended with Beethoven's familiar Sonata in G, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 30, No. 3). Mr. Santley gave two of his well-worn airs, with the threadbare "To Anthea" as an encore.

The public came literally in strong force on Saturday, the 23rd ult., which is the last Concert we can notice this month. The cause of this unwonted excitement was the announcement that Herr and Madame Grieg would appear for the first time at these Concerts. The Scandinavian composer is a great favourite with the English public, by whom his piquant and characteristic pianoforte music is very highly appreciated. On the present occasion he showed his exquisitely delicate touch in two of his charming "Scenes from National Life" ("Aus dem Volksleben"), Op. 19, and joined Signor Piatti in his Sonata in A minor, for piano-forte and violoncello (Op. 36), a very winning and attractive work, especially the fresh and unconventional Finale. An apology was made on behalf of Madame Grieg on the ground that she was suffering from a sore throat; but it was scarcely needed, as she was heard to much advantage in three songs from Op. 5, and another three from the set entitled "Mountain and Fjord" (Op. 44). Spohr's Quartet in A (Op. 93) and Haydn's Quartet in C (Op. 33, No. 3) completed the programme, these tuneful works being quite in keeping with the music of Grieg.

LIVERPOOL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE respected musical editor of the Liverpool Mercury has put forth an interesting and valuable record of this Society's career since its institution fifty years ago. We do not propose to examine its contents now, though we may return to them later. Our present business is with a celebration of the Jubilee in the Philharmonic Hall, on the 5th ult.—an occasion for which special preparation had been made by the liberality of the Society's President, Mr. Walter Clark. To this gentleman belongs the credit of calling Dr. Mackenzie's "Dream of Jubal" into existence. He applied to the composer through Sir Charles Hallé, the composer sought the aid of Mr. Joseph Bennett as librettist, and Mr. Bennett permitted the occasion for which the work was required to influence his choice of a subject. The poem of the "Dream of Jubal" is a poem in praise of music, because written to honour a musical jubilee.

It is not our present intention to discuss the character and quality of the new work. That may more efficiently be done in our next issue, when we shall have had the advantage of the London performance in St. James's Hall, before which we now go to press. We desire now simply to deal with the occasion of the Liverpool production, and put on record a success of the happiest augury for the future of the composition. It may be presumed that the Jubilee Concert would have excited interest whatever its programme, but the promised novelty greatly excited the curious feeling of the public, aided by the local press, which made known the special features in it, and spoke generally in most favourable terms. But however this may have been, there was no doubt about the fact that a great and brilliant audience crowded the fine hall. All the "beauty, rank, and fashion" of the great city put in an appearance, with a result that reminded us of London Concert rooms when metropolitan "society" thought music of a high class worth making the occasion of a "function." Many persons, we understand, were turned away from the doors, and many more gladly paid for mere standing room in the galleries. All this was very good, showing a real, healthy curiosity, for which those who believed in reports about "unmusical Liverpool" were not exactly prepared. The proceedings began with Weber's "Jubilee" Overture, conducted by Sir Charles Hallé, and then, amid a buzz of excitement, Dr. Mackenzie, with Miss Macintyre and Mr. Lloyd as principal soloists, and Mr. Charles Fry as reciter, took his seat in the Conductor's chair. The comparative novelty of the plan of the work may have had something to do with it, but there can be no doubt that the performance held the close attention of the public from first to last. To this result the excellence of Mr. Fry's recitation largely contributed. He had evidently studied Mr. Bennett's blank verse well, and all its changeful feeling received due expression, nor did whatever music exists in the language fail to come out with the reciter's skilful delivery. Simultaneously went on, by way of orchestral comment, some of the most beautiful music ever written by Dr. Mackenzie, or, for that matter, by anyone else under like conditions. As the work becomes more familiar, this music will commend itself more and more to admiring notice, because its application and the principles of its construction will be better known. But it does not fail to "tell" even on a first hearing, so plain is its meaning and so obvious its charm. Hence, during the recitations, there was not, as is so often the case, any falling off of interest, which kept up steadily throughout. The airs and choruses, one and all, made a great impression, rousing an audience usually deemed apathetic to something that approached enthusiasm. Miss Macintyre helped this by her very capable delivery of the consolatory air "The Lord is good unto them that wait for Him"—a gem which lost none of its brightness in her hands. On his part, Mr. Lloyd did no less efficient service in the "Song of the sickle," which he gave with such entrain that the audience would gladly have heard it again. An equal effect was made by these artists together in the duet "Mine! and the shadows have vanished from life," which pleased immensely. Of the concerted numbers, the first place should perhaps be given to the Funeral March and Chorus, the beauty and impressiveness of which no one could fail to appreciate. So, in proper degree, with the Triumphal March and Chorus, and the final Invocation, with its majestic climax. Thus there was no weak point in the work or its performance, to which Sir Charles Hallé's orchestra and the Philharmonic choir contributed in an equal degree. At the close Dr. Mackenzie was overwhelmed with congratulations, right well deserved and doubly earned as composer-conductor.

PROFESSOR STANFORD IN BERLIN.

WE extract the following remarks from a Review which appeared in the Börsen Courier of a Concert given by Dr. Stanford in the Hall of the Philharmonic Society at Berlin:—

"The principal feature of last night's Concert was an unpublished Symphony, the latest work of the composer. The subjects, which are well defined, have been worked out with extraordinary skill, and the whole effect of this very remarkable piece of writing is clear and sonorous. . . . It is difficult to say which is the most successful movement, for the style of the Symphony is even and well sustained throughout, but we should be inclined to distinguish more particularly the second and third, on account of the greater warmth of feeling by which they are characterised."

The Kreuz Zeitung is even more favourable:—

"The compositions of Dr. Villiers Stanford have taken us altogether by surprise. We did not expect such mature work from a man who has not yet left his youth behind him, and there is real ground for astonishment in his powerful handling of larger forms and masses. . . . His work is masterly. The instrumentation is admirably clear and sonorous, showing intimate acquaintance with the resources of an orchestra, and the composer's striking powers of characterisation make intervals of dullness impossible. He never loses the thread, he never helps himself out with mere patchwork, as is the way with so many of 'The Modern School' when their inspiration fails them: he never for an instant indulges in commonplace. . . . We were more especially pleased with the new Symphony. The motives are full of expression, there is excellent thematic work, the subjects are effectively wrought out, and the instrumentation is rich in colour. There is a freshness about the first movement which wins the sympathies of the audience at the very outset; it is natural, flowing, and free from any taint of pedantry. . . . The applause, which was frequent throughout the evening, culminated in repeated calls for the composer and the assistant artists."

The Berliner Reichsbote expresses itself in these terms:—

"It is seldom indeed that an Englishman is energetic enough to free himself—as Mr. Stanford has happily succeeded in doing—from national idiosyncrasies and the love of peculiarity, for the sake of a more refined ideal and the wider development of his artistic personality. We already had proof of this when the composer made his début in the Hall of the Philharmonic Society a year ago with the 'Irish' Symphony, produced under the direction of Dr. Hans von Bülow; but last night's programme sets him in the front rank of the composers of our own day. The Overture to 'Edipus' transcends the bounds of programme music, and is indeed a highly original work in perfect keeping with the play. It opens with a tragic lament upon the English horn, after which the dark enthralling legend is step by step evolved before us. A Suite for violin and orchestra reveals the influence of the older masters (especially Bach) over the younger; but the individuality which is so marked a characteristic of the other numbers in the programme is here somewhat in abeyance. The principal work performed was Mr. Stanford's new Symphony in F major. All four parts compel the attention of the hearer to the development of the themes and the gracefulness of the melody, but the first and fourth are especially remarkable for these qualities. Few composers attain such delicacy and transparency of instrumentation."

MR. AND MRS. HENSCHEL'S RECITALS.

Two of these refined and instructive entertainments were given at the Princes' Hall, on the 15th and 22nd ult., and on each occasion there was a crowded audience. It is pleasant to note that the public is ready to appreciate performances so purely artistic, although the programmes are made up entirely of songs and duets. The first of the two Recitals above-mentioned was the most pleasing, the programme being framed with much tact, a quality specially needed in order to secure the requisite variety. To the curious the most important feature was a duet from Wagner's juvenile opera "Die Feen." This excerpt is quite in the buffo style, and the young composer found his inspiration partly in Mozart and partly in Weber. The duet is sung by a pair of lovers who have been separated for some time, and who tease one another in the ordinary comic opera style.

At the second Recital the programme was composed entirely of Mr. Henschel's compositions, and it cannot be denied that some sense of monotony was felt. The "Serbisches Liederspiel" (Op. 32) was the most important item, and this clever cycle of songs was rendered almost to perfection by Mrs. Henschel, Miss Lena Little, Mr. Shakespeare, and Mr. Heinrich. In the miscellaneous portion of the programme were a few new compositions, including a setting of Margaretha's songs from Scheffel's "Der Trompeter von Säkkingen," which may be pronounced quite worthy of the composer.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

A SERIES of three Pianoforte Recitals was given by the gifted youth, Otto Hegner, on January 28, and the 18th and 25th ult. Of these we can only speak of the first and second in the present number of THE MUSICAL TIMES. Of the qualities which entitle the boy to be regarded almost as much an artist as a "wonder child," there is no occasion to speak in detail, as they were sufficiently commented upon last season. Happily, the lad evinces no symptoms of mental or physical injury by his early entry into public life; on the contrary, his powers seem to be ripening in the most satisfactory manner. The task set before him at his first Recital may truly be described as herculean, for among the items in his programme was Beethoven's Sonata in C (Op. 53), generally known as the "Waldstein" Sonata. It is unnecessary to remind musicians that the proper interpretation of this work demands manipulative and intellectual capacity of no ordinary kind, yet it was only in the former that any shortcomings were noticeable in the boy's performance. He commenced the first movement at a dangerously rapid pace, and his little fingers were unable to give the necessary crispness and clearness to the rapid passages, but in the wonderful Finale he was more at home, and though a passage here and there was imperfectly rendered it was easy to see that the conception was good. We have heard many performances of the work by adult pianists more mechanically correct, perhaps, but less satisfying in other respects. Chopin's Nocturne in F minor and the Waltz in A flat (Op. 34, No. 1) did not suit him nearly so well. They were played like studies, and it was quite evident that he had not fully grasped the import of the music. In Bach's rarely heard Partita in B flat he was note-perfect, and the Recital concluded with an astonishing performance of Liszt's Rhapsodie in C sharp and F sharp.

The degree of merit attained at the second Recital was quite as high and more uniform. The first item was Bach's Suite Anglaise in A minor (No. 2), which was played more than once last season. After this came Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 31, No. 3), which did not overtax his physical powers, and of which, with one slight exception, he gave a singularly able interpretation. The exception was in the Minuet, which was taken too fast and was not played with the tender singing tone it needs. The rest of the work is in Beethoven's brightest manner, and in fact teems with humorous touches, and little Hegner reproduced these with wonderful fidelity. After such a striking proof of the youthful executant's genius the minor pieces which followed may pass without notice.

On account of the name she bears, the Concert given by Fräulein Geisler-Schubert at the Princes' Hall, on the 13th ult., had a special interest for musicians. This lady is a grandniece of the great composer, Franz Schubert, that is to say, a granddaughter of his brother Ferdinand, to whom he was deeply attached, and who was with him in his last hours. This fact, however, would only have ensured her a friendly reception, and the cordial applause bestowed upon her was due to the striking ability she displayed as an artist. She has studied the pianoforte under Madame Schumann, and displays in a remarkable degree the advantages she has gained by such matchless teaching. There was nothing in her programme of a very arduous nature, the Pianoforte Trio in B flat (Op. 99) and the Sonata in G (Op. 78) of her celebrated relative being the most important pieces, but the charm of her playing consisted in her pure liquid touch, sympathetic tone, and exquisitely finished phrasing. These, it need scarcely be said, constitute the principal charms of Madame Schumann's style, and as Fräulein Geisler-Schubert has succeeded in winning them from her instructress, she is certain to be always well received by an English audience, provided of course that she proves herself equally at home in the works of other masters. Mdlle. Fillunger displayed her rich soprano voice to advantage in some of the Lieder, though she marred her efforts slightly by over-emphasis. Music of a more dramatic type would probably suit her better.

The three Pianoforte Recitals announced to be given by Miss Dora Bright at the Princes' Hall merit notice for the distinctive character of the programmes. While not ignoring the classics of her art, the young executant is affording a large space to pieces by English composers, who, it must be confessed, generally cut rather a sorry figure in performances of pianoforte music. Thus at the first Recital, on January 30, the scheme included Nos. 1 to 4 of a new set of Studies composed by Mr. Walter Macfarren; a set of Variations on an Original Theme in A minor, by Mr. Moir-Clark; and two pleasing trifles by the pianist herself. The Studies are not, perhaps, well suited to the concert-room, but they are nicely written and likely to be useful to students who have been through one or two books of Cramer. Not much can be said in favour of Mr. Moir-Clark's Variations; they are musicianly enough, but exceedingly dry and laboured. Miss Dora Bright is no novice in the concert-room; as a student of the Royal Academy of Music she has frequently appeared in St. James's Hall, and a very clever Pianoforte Concerto from her pen was produced last July and repeated afterwards at the Promenade Concerts. It cannot be said, however, that she proved herself quite equal to such an arduous work as Schumann's Fantasia in C (Op. 17). Her rendering was not even note-perfect, and in style it was crude and ill-considered. Miss Bright was far more at home in smaller works, such as those already named and others by Chopin and Grieg.

The scheme of Mdlle. Jeanne Douste's fifth Recital at Princes' Hall, on the 14th ult., was made up of compositions by Schumann and Brahms. The former master's Sonata for pianoforte, in G minor (Op. 22), received a commendably clear and intelligent reading at the hands of Mdlle. Douste, who is evidently capable of throwing into her work much of the romantic feeling which Schumann demands from his interpreters. This was further evidenced in a group of shorter pieces, consisting of the "Warum?" "Vogel als Prophet," "Blumenstück," and the Novellette in D major, from Op. 21. Included in the Brahms selection was a set of twenty-five Variations with Fugue on a theme by Handel, marked in the programme "first time." Whether an absolute novelty or not, this composition proved full of interest as well as scholarly resource, and the youthful artist played it, on the whole, in excellent fashion, receiving afterwards a hearty recall. A capital performance of some of the same composer's Waltzes and Hungarian Dances brought the Recital to a termination. The vocalist was Herr Oscar Niemann.

MR. MAX HEINRICH'S RECITALS.

MR. MAX HEINRICH'S third Song Recital drew a fairly large audience to Steinway Hall, on the 13th ult. This accomplished baritone singer, who has now established a firm reputation in our midst, once more proved himself an artist to whom it is an unqualified pleasure to listen. His solo morceaux comprised five Lieder by Brahms and a set of charmingly-written "Reed Songs" (Schifflieder) by Seb. Schlesienger; in addition to which Mr. Heinrich sang, with Miss Lena Little, some duets for baritone and alto, by Dvorák, Cornelius, and Schumann. Miss Little also sang some songs, and Madame Haas contributed some pianoforte solos. The excellence of all this speaks sufficiently for itself.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

ON the 4th ult. Mr. G. A. Audsley, F.R.I.B.A., read a paper on "Matters, chiefly Architectural, relating to the accommodation of Organs in Churches and other Buildings," in which he complained of the neglect with which architects treated this most important question. The mediæval builders, who were to a large extent our models, were not compelled to have any regard to the position of the organs of their time, but the instrument has now become so important a feature in the Church service that we could not afford to overlook its requirements. Too frequently, however, we found that the space allotted to it was unduly cramped, and as a consequence the organ was huddled together and boxed up instead of being made as much a part of the church furniture as the altar or the pulpit, and as properly placed with reference to the work it had to do. Under adverse circumstances he thought that a smaller organ would be more effective, and in case of a larger instrument being desired, he suggested that it should be divided in the French fashion, the accompanimental organ being near the choir, while the grand organ could be placed at the west end of the church. Both organs could be manipulated from the same clavières, which should be placed in such a position that the player could judge of the effect he was producing. Generally speaking, organ chambers were a necessity; but they should afford ample space all around the instrument so that the sound should be unobstructed. The reading of the paper was followed by a discussion, among the speakers being Dr. Bridge and Mr. Southgate.

COMEDY THEATRE.

"PICKWICK," by Messrs. F. C. Burnand and Edward Solomon, produced at the above theatre on Thursday, the 7th ult., and now well established in popular favour, is called a dramatic Cantata, but it might be better described as a Gilbert and Sullivan opera for the drawing-room. In preference to laying violent hands on any portion of Dickens's immortal epic, Mr. Burnand has taken as the foundation of his book an allusion to a certain Baker who might, could, would, or should have been Mrs. Bardell's second bridegroom. Mr. Pickwick sends Tommy Bardell to the Borough with a message for his new valet, Sam Weller, and, left alone, Mrs. Bardell muses as to "When and where am I going to meet him? What sort will he be? My next, my next." The answer, it would seem, comes with the call of the Baker, who sings his "Baker Roll," the theme of which is the principal Leitmotif of the piece. He then starts, exclaims, "Ha! my rival's voice," and after a parting duet rushes off to get a license at once. Mr. Pickwick, having completed his toilet, enters, and commences a cycle of songs named respectively "The Pickwick portmanteau," "The boy and the Borough," "The happy valet," and "The bachelor." Mrs. Bardell returns to dust, and then comes that fateful scene, the ultimate consequence of which was the transference of a considerable sum from the pocket of Mr. Pickwick to those of Messrs. Dodson and Fogg. The Baker returns to find Mrs. Bardell fainting in Mr. Pickwick's arms, and at once renounces her for ever. The three Pickwickians are not introduced, but Mr. Burnand says that we may see something of them on a future musical occasion. His present book is as full as it can well be of whimsicalities and mock heroics, and Mr. Solomon has caught the spirit of the joke by being most serious in his music when the situation is most outrageous. Beside the "Baker Roll" several of the songs and duets are extremely pretty, and he has been very happy in illustrating the lines by odd little touches in the orchestration. Mr. Arthur Cecil, wonderfully made up, is Pickwick, Miss Lottie Venne is a most attractive Mrs. Bardell, and Mr. Rutland Barrington is appropriately serious, not to say solemn, as the Baker. The dramatic Cantata is one of the most amusing, and at the same time harmless pieces of nonsense now on the stage.

OBITUARY.

WE regret to announce the death of MR. JOHN BARRACLOUGH, one of the lay-vicars of Lincoln Cathedral, and well-known as a promoter of Concerts in and about his place of residence. On Saturday, the 9th ult., he had started in the afternoon to walk to Lincoln from Owmby, a distance of about ten miles, and, apparently exhausted by the bitterly cold weather, died by the roadside near to Tollingham Lodge (about two miles on his way home), where his body was found a few hours later. Mr. Barracough was in his sixty-fifth year. He served the office of lay-vicar at Ely for eight years, and at Lincoln for nearly thirty-four years. The first part of the funeral service was performed in the Cathedral in which he had served for so long a period, a large congregation being present. The procession was joined by many Freemasons, Mr. Barracough having once served the office of Provincial Grand Organist. The remaining portion of the service was performed by Precentor Venables at the Cemetery of St. Mary Magdalen.

MRS. LIMBUS, the widow of RICHARD LIMBUS, the founder of the College of Organists, and herself at one time an excellent Concert singer, died on January 29, after a short illness.

THE death of JOSEF GUNGL, the celebrated waltz composer, at Weimar, on the 1st ult., is announced. He was born on December 1, in the year 1810, at Zsâmbék, in the province of Pesth. At first intended for a schoolmaster, he passed his examination, and was actually engaged for three years as assistant teacher, during which time he obtained his first knowledge of music from the choirmaster of Ofen. At the age of eighteen he entered an Artillery Regiment, and after serving for seven years he became bandmaster. He composed his first work ("The Hungarian March") in 1836. In 1843 he established his orchestra in Berlin. Mendelssohn was a constant frequenter of his Concerts, and the music to the "Midsummer Night's Dream" was first played by Gungl's band. In the autumn of 1848 he sailed for America, and gave Concerts in all the principal cities. His visit to England in 1873 to conduct a series of Promenade Concerts at Covent Garden Theatre is still remembered with pleasure. Gungl's compositions, which are numerous, are noted for richness of melody and for their marked and unmistakable accent. His "Amoretten Tänze," "Hydropaten," "Soldaten Lieder," "Mein schönster Tag in Berlin," "Casino Tänze," and "Dreams on the Ocean" Waltzes; "Schön Süschen" and "In Stille Mitternacht" Polkas; and the "Blue Violets" and "La Belle" Polka Mazurkas have attained great popularity; while his Marches, more especially the "Krieger's Lust," "Hungarian" (which Liszt has transcribed under the title of "Ungarischer Sturm Marsch"), "Gamera," and the "Rekrut" are considered as among the best of their kind. Besides other decorations, Herr Gungl had the Crown Order of the Fourth Class bestowed on him by the Emperor of Germany.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

MESSRS. HARRISON'S third Concert, on the 4th ult., was an improvement upon its predecessors in regard, at all events, to the instrumental selection, which had been designed more especially for the display of the powers of Master Otto Hegner, the wonderful boy pianist, with whom were associated Miss Marianne Eissler (solo violin) and Mr. Wilhelm Ganz (pianist and accompanist). The vocal artists were Madame Lilian Nordica, Madame Patey, Mr. Orlando Harley, and Signor Foli. There is no need to expatiate upon the precocity of Master Hegner, whose admirable technique, however, impressed the audience less than the maturity of thought and feeling revealed in his playing, and it will suffice to say that his success in Birmingham was as decisive and brilliant as it has been in London, Liverpool, Manchester, and the other large cities where he has appeared. It was remarked of his execution, that though never wanting in power, it excelled in delicacy and refinement rather than in force, as shown more particularly in his playing of the perfectly articulate pianissimo runs in Chopin's Nocturne in D flat, No. 2 (Op. 27), and in the fantastic dreamy grace he imparted to the quaint arpeggio phrases in Schumann's "Der Vogel als Prophet," from the "Forest Scenes" (Op. 82). In Liszt's arrangement of the Spinnerlied from Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," and the same composer's difficult second "Rhapsodie Hongroise," Master Hegner fairly electrified the audience by the sustained power and brilliancy of his playing. Miss Marianne Eissler won golden opinions by her refined and expressive playing of Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's now popular "Benedictus" and a Rhapsody by Hauser. Madame Nordica sang with fine effect "The queen of the night" bravura from "The Magic Flute," transposed, as usual, a tone lower, and, in compliance with an enthusiastic re-demand, this effort had to be repeated. Subsequently Madame Nordica gave a Vocal Waltz from the Opera of "Salvator Rosa," by the Portuguese composer Gomes, which greatly delighted the audience. Madame Patey's selection comprised Handel's "Ombra mai fu" and "Benedict's" "By the sad sea waves," both admirably given. Mr. Harley sang Gounod's "Lend me your aid" and Ganz's "I seek thee in every flower," and Signor Foli's contributions comprised Meyerbeer's "Monk" and F. Cliffe's "Buffoon."

On the 15th ult. the local public had an opportunity of making closer and fuller acquaintance with Master Otto Hegner's remarkable powers as a virtuoso, at a Pianoforte Recital which was exclusively devoted to the boy pianist. His selection on this occasion embraced Bach's Suite Anglaise (No. 2) in A minor, Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 31, No. 3), Chopin's Nocturne in D flat (Op. 27, No. 2), Weber's Rondo Brillant in B flat, a Bourrée by Hans Hüber, the youthful player's master; a Minuet by Paderewsky, Liszt's fantastic "Gnomesreigen," and, on a re-demand of the latter composition, a harpsichord lesson in E flat, of Scarlatti. There is no need to describe in detail these several performances. Suffice it that every piece was rendered with appropriate expression, admirable technique, and unerring memory, for the boy played throughout without notes. The popular successes of the evening were the pieces by Chopin, Weber, and Liszt.

Mr. Stockley's second Orchestral Concert, on the 7th ult., was of a somewhat lighter and more popular character than its predecessors, the customary Symphony being dispensed with; but it was certainly not deficient in good things musical, both new and old. Besides the "Hebrides" and "Mirella" Overtures of Mendelssohn and Gounod respectively, and the festive "Ouverture di Ballo" of Sir Arthur Sullivan, composed for the Birmingham Festival of 1870, the programme comprised Raff's Italian Suite, "In the South," which was found among the composer's papers after his death; the orchestral "Benedictus" of Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, first heard here as a violin solo on the previous Monday night; Handel's Largo in G, from the Opera of "Xerxes," arranged for violin, harp, and organ by the elder Hellmesberger; and a Fantasia on airs from Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor," arranged for the old Corno di bassetto, or alto clarinet and pianoforte. Mr. T. E. Pountney, the well known clarinetist, won great applause by his performance in the last-named piece, though the selection was somewhat beneath the dignity of a classical orchestral Concert. The Suite and the three Overtures were capitally rendered by the band under Mr. Stockley's direction. Mdle. Antoinette Trebelli greatly charmed the audience by her singing of "Let the bright Seraphim," with trumpet obligato by Mr. J. Wells, and Gounod's "Legère hirondelle," which latter was more suited to her style and qualifications. Mr. Edward Lloyd, who was in excellent voice, sang Gluck's fine air from "Iphigénie en Tauride," "Our hearts in childhood's morn"; Verdi's air from "Luisa Miller," "Quando le sere"; and "The Star of Bethlehem."

An interesting Pianoforte Recital was given, on the 9th ult., by Mr. Max Pauer, Professor at the Cologne Conserva-

toire, and son of Mr. Ernst Pauer, but, owing presumably to their ignorance of the performer's high artistic claims, musical amateurs were but poorly represented in the room. The selection comprised Bach's Fantasia Chromatica à Fuga, Beethoven's Sonata in A (Op. 101), Mendelssohn's Capriccio in E minor (Op. 16, No. 2), Schumann's Etudes Symphoniques (Op. 13), Chopin's Allegro de Concert in A (Op. 46), A. Jensen's Idyl "Dryade" (Op. 43, No. 4), three little pieces by E. Schütt, two by Moszkowski, and Liszt's "Rhapsodie Hongroise" (No. 12). Mr. Pauer exhibits a remarkably perfect technique, together with considerable power and artistic feeling, and he especially impressed the audience by his masterly playing of the Schumann Etudes and the Liszt Rhapsodie.

At the first ordinary meeting of the Midland Musical Guild, on the 4th ult., the chief features of the Concert were three MS. compositions by members—viz., a String Quartet in C (by Mr. A. E. Daniels, F.C.O.), capitolly played by Messrs. F. Ward, E. W. Priestley, T. R. Abbott, and J. Owen; a Mazurka Fantaisie for pianoforte and violin, by Mr. J. F. Davis; and an Overture for strings, by Mr. Blakeman Welch. The new works all displayed fancy and melody as well as sound musicianship. Mendelssohn's Pianoforte and Violoncello Sonata (Op. 58) was much appreciated and pleasant relief to the entertainment was imparted by pianoforte solos and vocal pieces.

Mr. J. W. Turner's English Opera Company entered upon a fortnight's engagement at the Grand Theatre, on the 11th ult. The only novelty in the company's répertoire is the late Sir George Macfarren's "Robin Hood," which was given with great success to a crowded house on the 18th ult., the leading parts being played by Mr. Turner and Miss Constance Bellamy.

At the Festival Choral Society's third Concert, on the 21st ult., the programme was of a miscellaneous character. The choir numbered 400 performers, with Madame Georgina Burns, Miss Marian McKenzie, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Leslie Crotty as principal vocalists; and Dr. R. M. Winn as accompanist, Mr. C. W. Perkins as organist, and Mr. Stockley as Conductor. Meyerbeer's 91st Psalm, written for the Berlin Cathedral Choir, Gounod's "Ave Verum," Mr. A. R. Gaul's setting of the last Psalm "O praise God," composed for the meeting of the London Church Choirs in 1886, and part of Leonardo Leo's "Dixit Dominus" were among the chief items of the programme.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

WHILST our musical societies proper are working in camera, and, it is said, with unwonted energy, for their forthcoming performances, the lovers of Ballad Concerts are just now having their fill of more easily provided musical fare. At the Saturday Popular Concert in the Leinster Hall, on January 26, Madame Lilian Nordica delighted her audience with Handel's "Let the bright Seraphim," which was given by the same vocalist at the recent performance of "Samson" by the Dublin Musical Society. The want of a band was, of course, a disadvantage, but did not lessen the appreciation of the auditory, who recalled the cantatrice again and again. The fine contralto voice of Madame Joyce Maas was heard to good advantage in her songs, "Nobil Signor" (Meyerbeer), "Cleansing Fires" (Gabriel), and "Quando a te lieta" (Gounod). Some excellent quartets were given by the Dublin Quartet Union, and Herr Rudersdorff and Herr Schmidt contributed instrumental solos. Mr. J. O'Donnell played the trumpet obligato to "Let the bright Seraphim," and Mr. Collisson, Mus. B., conducted. At the Concert of Saturday, the 9th ult., the performers were Mdle. Marie Decca, Miss Dora Maxwell, Miss Dews, Mr. Drummond Hamilton, Herr Rudersdorff (violin), and Mr. Collisson (pianoforte); and at that of Saturday, the 16th ult., Miss du Bedat, Miss Helen d'Alton, Mr. Philip Tomer, Mr. Snazelle, Mdle. Dinelli (violin), and Mdle. van Eyck (pianoforte).

On the 18th and 21st ult. Messrs. Cramer, Wood and Co. provided a great treat in the Minnie Hauk Concerts

FREDERICK CHOPIN

AS A MAN AND MUSICIAN

BY

FREDERICK NIECKS.

Ce beau génie est moins un musicien qu'une âme qui se rend sensible.—H. DE BALZAC.

IN TWO VOLUMES, CLOTH GILT, PRICE TWENTY-FIVE SHILLINGS.

WITH A PORTRAIT, ETCHED BY H. R. ROBERTSON, AND FAC-SIMILES OF THE COMPOSER'S MS.

EXTRACTS FROM PREFACE.

My guiding principle has been to place before the reader the facts collected by me as well as the conclusions at which I arrived. This will enable him to see the subject in all its bearings, with all its pros and cons, and to draw his own conclusions should mine not obtain his approval.

Whatever the defects of the present volumes may be—and, no doubt, they are both great and many—I have laboured to the full extent of my humble abilities to group and present my material perspicuously, and to avoid diffuseness and rhapsody, those besetting sins of writers on music.

My researches had for their object the whole life of Chopin and his historical, political, artistical, social, and personal surroundings, but they were chiefly directed to the least known and most interesting period of his career—his life in France, and his visits to Germany and Great Britain. My chief sources of information are divisible into two classes—newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, correspondences, and books; and conversations I held with, and letters I received from Chopin's pupils, friends, and acquaintances.

Prefixed to the first volume of the present biography the reader will find one of the portraits by Kwiatkowski, an etching after a charming pencil drawing in my possession, the reproduction of which the artist has kindly permitted.

"The two volumes are so rich in absolutely new facts concerning Chopin's life, and so valuable in interesting and for the most part unprejudiced analytical comments upon the composer's works, that in the future we may reasonably expect the book to be frequently quoted whenever the writings of the 'Ariel of the pianoforte' are in question. To the large majority of readers, however, the true story—told with all the evidence that can be collected from letters and from the reports of onlookers to support the truth—of the romantic love of the pianist-composer for the eminent novelist, Madame George Sand, will be of the supremest interest. Nearly 200 pages are devoted to this episode, which was not only the most momentous incident of Chopin's career, but which also practically broke his heart and led to his early death. . . . The volumes likewise contain a full list of Chopin's works, an index, an etching from one of the portraits by Kwiatkowski (so different from the glorified drawing by Ary Scheffer), and a fac-simile of Chopin's delicate penmanship from one of the 'Etudes,' which, with the preludes, mazourkas, waltzes, polonaises, and the rest, are a great deal more popular in English drawing-rooms now than they were at the date of the composer's death, a few months short of forty years ago."—Daily News.

"Mr. Niecks's work at once takes its place among standard biographies of Great Musicians—the first complete and wholly satisfactory life of Chopin that has been written. Mr. Niecks may be assured that its successful achievement places him in the front rank of musical biographers; while, at the same time, the production of so able and adequate a work adds one more to the laurels earned by the distinguished firm that has already given us in English form Otto Jahn's 'Mozart' and Spitta's 'Bach.'"—Sunday Times.

"It is an admirable, well-contrived, and interesting biography, in which one of the most important items is formed by Chopin's own letters. . . . How the work is brought out is said in two words: it is published by Novello & Co. That is sufficient guarantee."—The World.

LONDON & NEW YORK: NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

at the Leinster Hall. The popular prima donna, who was enthusiastically received, sang such well-known excerpts from her répertoire as the Gavotte from "Manon," the "Styrienne" from "Mignon," the "Habanera" from "Carmen," and also a "Birthday Song," by Sachs, at the first Concert; and at the second gave the Jewel Song from "Faust" and "My dearest love" (Schmidt), both of which were encored. Madame Belle Cole, whose rich and powerful contralto was much admired, gave a fine rendering of the Scena and Aria "Judith" (Concone), and on the second occasion sang the song of Ruth, "Entreat me not to leave thee" (Gounod), with no less success. Mr. Charles Banks (tenor) and Mr. Arthur Oswald (baritone) were both excellent in their ballads and in the concerted music. In company with this talented party of vocalists were Herr Schönberger (pianist) and Mons. Tivadar Nachéz (violinist), whose performances, individually and in duet, stamped them as executants of the first rank. A Broadwood grand pianoforte and the famous "Dolphin" Stradivarius violin were the instruments played on. Mr. H. Lane Wilson was accompanist.

A highly successful series of three Promenade Concerts was organised by Mr. Motherhill, of Belfast, in conjunction with Mr. Gunn, of Dublin, at the Leinster Hall, on the 4th, 5th, and 6th ult., and the combined attractions of popular vocalists and instrumentalists, a military band, and tasteful floral and lighting decorations crowded the house on each occasion. Miss Clara Leighton and Miss Jeanie Rosse were the vocalists, in company with Mr. F. Weston (violoncello) and Mr. A. McCreary (pianist and accompanist).

The Pianoforte Recitals of Master Otto Hegner at the Leinster Hall, on January 28 and the 1st ult., were attended by large and appreciative audiences, and the achievements of the child-pianist were in every mouth. It is unnecessary to particularise the items of the two difficult programmes of pianoforte music which the wonderful boy played from memory with such surprising facility, power, and feeling. Suffice it to say that his audiences, which consisted of a large proportion of musicians, dilletanti, and amateur pianists, listened breathlessly and delightedly to every note of compositions, the reading of which by the greatest living pianists was more or less familiar to them, until the fact that it was a child who now played them quite disappeared from view, and comment became as keen as though a virtuoso of twenty years' public experience was the subject of their criticism, instead of a little boy of twelve years of age in a velvet knickerbocker suit and lace frills.

The Chamber Music Recitals at the Royal Dublin Society continue to be amongst the most enjoyable of our musical events. On Monday, January 28, the works played were Spohr's Quartet in A minor, for strings (Op. 58, No. 2), Beethoven's Sonata in A major, for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 63), and Schumann's Quartet in E flat, for pianoforte and strings. On the 4th ult. the above programme was repeated, and on the 11th and 18th ult. the selection was as follows: Mendelssohn's String Quartet in E minor (Op. 44, No. 2), Rubinstein's Sonata for the viola and pianoforte (Op. 49), and Schubert's Trio in B flat, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello. The executants at the above Recitals were Signor Papini (first violin), Mr. Newman (second violin), Herr Lauer (viola), Herr Rudersdorff (violoncello), and Signor Esposito (pianoforte).

The Dublin Musical Society (reconstituted 1889) has announced Gounod's "Mors et Vita" for its first Concert, and the Dublin University Choral Society has Gade's "Psyche" in rehearsal.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE sixth and last of the series of Orchestral Concerts, under the direction of Mr. Manns, took place on January 28. Mr. Johannes Wolff was solo violinist. Sterndale Bennett's Overture "The Naiads," Scherzo from Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, Ballad, "The Ship o' the Fiend," by Hamish MacCunn, and Schubert's Symphony (C major, No. 10) formed the orchestral pieces, whilst a Concerto Romantique, by B. Godard (which, by-the-bye, hardly deserves the title of Concerto), and two solos, Svendsen's Romance and Wieniawski's Mazurka, all received excellent treatment at the hands of Mr. Johannes Wolff. Messrs. Paterson and Sons are to be congratulated for having met with a success that permits them to renew the experiment next season. At the close of the Concert Mr. Manns received a perfect ovation.

On January 31 a Chamber Concert was given in Queen Street Hall, by Herr Gallrein (violoncellist), supported by Miss Elise Fröebel (pianoforte), Monsieur Jules Guitton (violin), Mr. H. Meyrick (baritone), and Fräulein Helene Schwarz, from Weimar (soprano).

Under the auspices of the Edinburgh Literary Institute, following the plan adopted for a number of years by the Philosophical Institution, an evening Concert was given, on the 7th ult., in the Synod Hall, which attracted a large audience, Madame Nordica being the vocalist engaged. Herr Waldemar Meyer (violin) and Mr. Townsend, of this city (pianoforte). Madame Nordica's songs, "Polacca," from Thomas's "Mignon," Handel's "Angels ever bright and fair," Scottish songs, and O. Weil's "Autumn and Spring," with violin obligato, delighted the audience. Of the instrumental pieces, the most important were Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata for violin and pianoforte, Bach's "Chaconne," and Weber's "Invitation à la Valse," the two latter admirably rendered by Herr Meyer and Mr. Townsend respectively.

Sir Charles Hallé and his orchestra were engaged as usual for the Reid Festival, and, like last year, a Chamber Concert preceded the two Orchestral. The former took place on the afternoon of the 9th ult., the performers being the principals of the orchestra, besides Sir Charles and Lady Hallé. The programme was as follows: String Quintet, C major (Op. 29), Beethoven; Septet in D minor (Op. 74), Hummel; and a Trio, Schumann's "Märchen Erzählungen" (for pianoforte, violin, and viola); Violin Sonata in D, Handel, exquisitely played by Lady Hallé, and two of Schubert's "Impromptus," by Sir Charles Hallé.

On the evening of Tuesday following, 11th ult., among other orchestral numbers, Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont," Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, and Wagner's "Meistersinger" Overture were given; and Liszt's Rhapsody, No. 2, and Adagio and Rondo from Vieuxtemps's Violin Concerto in E major were played by Lady Hallé. Miss Anna Williams and Mr. W. H. Brereton were the vocalists; the former charmed her audience by her rendering of Beethoven's "Ah! perfido," and Meyerbeer's "Roberto, o tu che adoro," whilst the latter gave as his most important solo "Qui sdegno," from Mozart's "Flauto Magico."

The Reid Concert proper, on the 13th ult., began, as customary, with General Reid's "Introduction, Pastorale, Minuet, and March," after which the orchestra gave Mendelssohn's "Athalie" Overture, Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, Brahms's Academic Festival Overture, MacKenzie's "La belle Dame sans merci," and Schumann's Concerto in A minor (Op. 54), with Sir Charles Hallé as soloist, and Raff's "Ungarisches," for violin and orchestra, with Lady Hallé as soloist. Miss Anna Williams sang "On mighty pens" (from Haydn's "Creation"), and Recitative and Aria "Tears, idle tears" (by Sir Herbert Oakeley), which were greatly applauded. Mr. Brereton chose "Revenge, Timotheus cries" (Handel) and Gounod's "Vulcan's Song."

The Edinburgh Choral Union gave a successful performance of the "Creation" on the evening of the 16th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. Collinson. The solos were undertaken by Miss Emily Spada (soprano), Mr. Philip Newbury (tenor), and Mr. Glencorse (bass). Mr. Bradley was organist and Mr. Craig pianist.

A Classical Chamber Concert took place on the 19th ult., in which Mr. Della Torre (pianoforte), Mr. Colin McKenzie (violin), and Mr. Grant McNeill (violoncello) took part. Mendelssohn's Trio in D minor, Brahms's Sonata in A major, for pianoforte and violin, and Beethoven's Trio in B flat were played. Further, Mr. Grant McNeill played an Adagio and Allegro by Boccherini, and Mr. Della Torre the Minuet from "Les Etrennes," and two improvisations from "Les Roses et les Epines," by Zarembski.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW AND THE WEST OF SCOTLAND.

AT the Choral and Orchestral Concerts on January 31 were performed Mendelssohn's Ballad "The First Walpurgis Night" and Sullivan's Cantata "The Golden Legend." The principal vocalists were Miss Annie Marriott, Madame Marian McKenzie, and Messrs. Barton McGuckin, George Henschel, and R. Riddell, of the Glasgow Choral Union. The "Walpurgis Night" music is pretty familiar in this district, though it has not often been heard with orchestral accompaniment. It was last given by the Choral Union, in December, 1883, under Mr. Manns. Its performance on the present occasion was, on the whole, satisfactory. The manner in which Sir Arthur Sullivan's exceedingly popular music was rendered was distinctly creditable to all concerned. The choral execution was marked by refinement, breadth, and dignity, while all went with the exactness which is usually a feature of the singing by this Society. Miss Marriott and Madame McKenzie invested their respective parts of Elsie and Ursula with much interest, while Mr. Henschel made a decided hit in that of Lucifer. Mr. McGuckin sang with his usual success. The orchestra executed their share of the performances with their accustomed skill. Mr. J. Bradley conducted.

The season of Concerts came to a close on the night of the 2nd ult., with a plebiscite programme, comprising a selection from those pieces performed during the series which had received the highest number of votes. Mr. Hamish MacCunn's Orchestral Ballad "The dowie dens o' Yarrow" headed the poll, an act of courtesy to the composer, as well as a tribute to the ability shown in the music. Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony in B minor and the "Tannhäuser" Overture were among the other selections voted for and performed.

At the close of the "Golden Legend" Concert, the members of the Choral Union held their annual Conversation and Ball. Mr. James Campbell, of Tullichewan, for so many years closely connected with the Society, who occupied the chair, said he was afraid the balance would not be on the right side this year, but if there was a deficiency it could not be much, while in any case the scheme was certain to go on.

An Orchestral Concert was given in Paisley on the 1st ult. by the Glasgow Choral Union band, Mr. Manns conducting. The Concert formed one of the Paisley Choral Union series, the next Concert of which, a choral one, will comprise Dr. Bridge's "Callirhoë" and H. MacCunn's "Bonnie Kilmeny."

On the 30th ult. the Greenock Choral Union gave a performance of Haydn's "Creation," Miss M. Fenna, Mr. Harper Kearton, and Mr. R. Hilton being the principal vocalists, and there being a contingent from the Glasgow Choral Union orchestra. Mr. Thomas Bates officiated at the organ, and Mr. W. T. Hoeck conducted. The performance was altogether one of unusual excellence.

Chamber music is making but slow progress here. A private Society, the Hillhead Musical Association, has been getting up some Chamber Concerts, at one of which, last month, Sir Charles and Lady Hallé appeared. The Helensburgh Concerts of the same kind have not been financially successful.

The Glasgow Temperance Choral Society, which is under the intelligent care of Mr. W. H. Murray, gave a performance of F. H. Cowen's Cantata "The Rose Maiden," in the Waterloo Rooms, on the 11th ult.

Mr. Henry A. Lambert, to the regret of very many, has resigned the post of Organist and Choirmaster of Park Established Church (Rev. Donald Macleod's), which he has held for the last twenty years, and Mr. Joseph Bradley, of the Glasgow Choral Union, has been appointed in his place.

The annual exhibition of paintings in the Glasgow Art Institute is open at present, and is chiefly referred to here for the reason that excellent instrumental Concerts are being given in the rooms three times weekly. The band numbers fourteen players (all members of the Choral Union orchestra) and is conducted by Mr. W. H. Cole.

Master Otto Hegner gave a Pianoforte Recital in St.

Andrew's Hall, on the 21st ult. There was a moderately large audience.

Handel's Oratorio of "Judas Maccabæus" was performed in the Public Hall, Airdrie, by the Choral Union of that industrious community, on the 21st ult. The choruses were well sung. The soloists were Mesdames A. Paget and Annie Gray, and Messrs. Page and Riley. Mr. D. Johnston conducted. There was a crowded attendance.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE last of the three choral quasi-novelties which Sir Charles Hallé announced for this season was given on the 21st ult. Reserving them all for the latter part of the season, Herr Beyschlag was able to secure the greater efficiency of the choir, which is now fitted—especially in its alto and tenor sections—to grapple with large and trying works. Verdi's "Requiem" was performed on January 31, and contrasted strongly with the more thoughtful and less musically sensuous "Rose of Sharon," a work which excited regret that Dr. Mackenzie's latest choral effort, "The Dream of Jubal," could not be included in this winter's scheme. But arrangements had already been made for the presentation of Rubinstein's "Paradise Lost," with which the labours of the choir cease for a time.

Perhaps no thoroughly modern Oratorio, and certainly none of purely continental device, may, at first hearing, win unmitigated approbation from a people so fond as we are of our classic models, and so jealous of any deviation from their lines. Whatever allowance may be claimed for diversities of race, of temperament, and of training, musicians look, in works treating sacred themes, for thorough seriousness of character, and for adequate scholarship subordinated to high purpose. It may not be said that Rubinstein's Op. 54 at all approaches our idea of grand Oratorio in massiveness of workmanship or in depth of dramatic insight; but though it never stirs keen emotion, it rarely lapses into utter feebleness, and it is, for the most part, free from mere trivialities of superficial expression. There is throughout the work a good deal of pleasing tune, and the listener is seldom wearied by the over elaboration of important themes. Only in the chorus closing the second act, "Praise ye the Mighty One," is fugal-writing really attempted, and the result is not entirely successful. Except in the so-called double choruses (of Good and Evil Spirits), the demands upon a choir are by no means excessive; nor is the orchestration unusually laboured or exacting. Of the soloists on the 21st ult., Mr. Lloyd had—as the "Voice"—the greatest opportunity of distinction; the music assigned to Adam (Mr. Pierpoint) and Eva (Miss Marriott) being of the slightest, and the grumblings of the rebellious Satan (Mr. Henschel) naturally not very grateful to singer or listener.

At Sir Charles Hallé's other Concerts we have had the "Eroica" Symphony (an almost perfect performance) Brahms's No. 4 in E minor, the charming Larghetto from Spohr's Third Symphony, and other important orchestral works. In addition, Lady Hallé and Signor Piatti have given us Brahms's Concerto (Op. 102) for violin and violoncello, the middle movement of which at once secured the suffrages of the crowd of musicians present, although the other portions were not so readily appreciated. Miss Macintyre won loud plaudits by the vigour of her style and the extraordinary force and fulness of the upper register of her voice; but while admiring her powerful declamation, one could hardly restrain the fear that a caution ought to be mingled with the enthusiastic praise so warmly testified. Mr. Santley, on the 14th ult., summoned all his old admirers and delighted them.

Pianoforte Recitals have been numerous. Sir Charles Hallé's formed the chief attraction at the Concert Hall, although, on the 12th ult., Mr. Max Pauer, in a long and ambitious selection, demonstrated an entire suppleness of finger and wrist, which enables him to execute with force and clearness the most difficult passages.

Mr. de Jong has concluded his series, and only his annual benefit Concert remains. His announcement for next winter seems an acknowledgment that Saturday night audiences demand the lightness of miscellaneous vocal selections rather than the elaboration of large orchestral compositions. It is a pity, although probably quite true; and it is the more regrettable because of the great improvement of the band during the last two seasons. On the 2nd ult. a young local pianist, Mr. Thorley-Brown, was warmly received, and excited hope of future excellence.

Among the minor undertakings of the month may be mentioned the selection of Part-songs, &c., by Lancashire composers, by Mr. John Towers' choir, and the first public appearance of the newly formed Amateur Beethoven Society. Unquestionably more preliminary discipline for the young band would have been prudent; still, any really earnest attempt to spread among our young fiddlers a taste for high-class orchestral music deserves encouragement, and may lead to important results.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

MR. MAX PAUER gave a Pianoforte Recital in the Music Hall, Surrey Street, on the 7th ult. The young pianist is well and favourably known in the town, having played at the Lectures given by his father, Ernst Pauer, before the Literary and Philosophical Society. The programme was a lengthy one, and included Beethoven's Sonata in A major (Op. 101), Schumann's Etudes Symphoniques (Op. 13), Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, and pieces by Chopin, Liszt, Schütt, Jensen, and others. Mr. Pauer's faultless technique and the intelligence displayed throughout his Recital were cordially acknowledged by the representative audience, and at the termination of the arduous programme he was recalled four times, playing in response a Polonaise by Rubinstein.

Madame Minnie Hauk's Concert party appeared in the Albert Hall, on the 13th ult. Owing to the wretched weather the audience was very meagre, and the dingy hall had anything but a cheerful appearance. The well-known prima donna, who was a stranger to Sheffield, had nevertheless a cordial reception. The Recitative and Gavotte, "Manon Lescaut," from Massenet's "Manon," was her most successful effort. Madame Belle Cole created a most favourable impression, her rich, powerful voice being heard to especial advantage in Concone's "Judith." Mr. G. Banks made his first appearance in the town, and Mr. Arthur Oswald sang with much success. Mr. Schönberger was the pianist, and played pieces by Liszt and Raff with wonderful execution. M. Tivadar Nachéz played several violin solos, and, with Mr. Schönberger, Schubert's Rondo Brilliant in B minor.

The Mayor has recommenced his admirable series of Saturday Popular Concerts in the Temperance Hall. Under the excellent direction of Mr. Henry Coward the Mayor's generous scheme for popularising good music has achieved a marked success. A capital ballad Concert party from Manchester provided the programme on the 9th ult., and on the 16th ult. Mr. Sinclair Dunn gave a Lecture on "Great British Composers," in the musical illustrations to which he was assisted by Miss Susetta Fenn.

Mr. E. H. Lemare, F.C.O., gave an Organ Recital at the Church Institute Jubilee Soirée held in the Albert Hall, on the 4th ult. Mr. Lemare also opened the new organ at Ranmoor Church, on the 3rd ult., giving a lengthy Recital on the fine instrument built by Messrs. Brindley and Foster.

Much regret is expressed at the announcement that the choral branch of the Brincliffe Musical Society has been abandoned. The orchestral branch gave a very successful Concert on January 29, when Haydn's "Military" Symphony and other pieces were excellently rendered under Mr. Schollhammer.

The members of the Hallamshire Concert Club, which has now reached its fourth season and is exceedingly prosperous, gave its monthly Concert on the 6th ult. A new feature in the shape of classical chamber music was introduced and was so well received that the innovation is to be considerably developed at future Concerts.

The St. Cecilia Musical Society performed the "Creation" in the Albert Hall, on the 23rd ult. The work, which has recently been given twice by the same Society and also by two other Societies in the town, was rendered by a band and chorus numbering 200 performers, under the direction of Mr. W. Brown. Miss Effie Thomas, Mr. F. S. Gilbert, and Mr. F. W. Dalby were the principals.

On the 26th ult. the Amateur Instrumental Society gave its second Subscription Concert of the current season in the Montgomery Hall. The programme included Schubert's "Unfinished" and Mozart's E flat Symphonies, the Overture to "Der Freischütz," and several other interesting pieces. Mr. H. Coward conducted.

The Dromfield Choral Society gave a performance of "The Messiah," with organ, orchestra, and principals, in the Parish Church, Dromfield, on the 25th ult. Mr. Biggin conducted.

MUSIC IN THE WEST OF ENGLAND.

SINCE the collapse of the Monday Popular Concerts some few seasons ago, Bristol has been without any regular orchestral performances—the only opportunity of hearing orchestral works being afforded by the periodical visits of Sir Charles Hallé and his band. On these occasions—few and far between—the prohibitive prices make it impossible for the majority of amateurs to be present. Thus it was imagined that a real want had been created, and some enthusiasts in Bristol and Clifton took upon themselves to supply this want, and hence, on January 28, the first of a series of six Orchestral and Vocal Concerts was given. The Conductor of the band of about fifty performers, led by Mr. Carrington, is Mr. W. F. Trimmell, a gentleman hitherto unknown as a Conductor of orchestral works. Judging by the two Concerts already given—the second took place on the 11th ult.—it would seem that the management have not set themselves any very high aim, the two programmes consisting mainly of mere trifles, with one or two movements from symphonic works thrown in by way of leaven. Financially, the undertaking has thus far been anything but encouraging, the attendance being the reverse of numerous. The vocalists who have appeared are Miss Spada and Mr. Plunket Greene. The third of the series took place on the 25th ult., when Miss Whitacre was the vocalist.

On the 4th ult. Mr. and Mrs. Viner-Pomeroy, in conjunction with Messrs. Ludwig and Woodward, gave their third Classical Chamber Concert of the season. The two Concert-givers were on this occasion absent, their places being filled respectively by Mrs. J. L. Roeckel and Mr. Waite (violinello). The feature of the evening was the rendering of Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata by Mr. Ludwig and Mrs. Roeckel. The vocalist was Miss Lorenzi, who pleased her audience greatly.

On the 12th ult. Miss Mary Lock's third popular Chamber Concert of the season took place, when concerted numbers (quartets and trios) by Mozart and Mendelssohn were very well rendered by the Concert-giver and Messrs. Hudson (violin), Gardner (viola), and Pavey (violinello). Mr. Wilberforce Franklin, the vocalist, was unfortunately suffering from a severe cold, but judging from the effect he created it is not difficult to prophesy a brilliant future for him as a baritone singer.

On the evening of the 22nd and afternoon of the 23rd ult., two Concerts on festival scale were given by Sir George Edwards, the President of the Bristol Madrigal Society. These Concerts, apart from their intrinsic value, have a distinguishing feature of peculiar interest. They were the first given here on so large a scale at popular prices. Sir Charles Hallé and his band of sixty-five instrumentalists occupied the orchestra; a chorus of nearly 360 voices, specially selected and trained by Mr. D. W. Rootham, the well-known Chorus-master of the Bristol Festival Society, assisted, and the principals engaged were Miss Anna Williams, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Santley, with whom were associated two local vocalists, Mrs. Rosa Bailey and Mr. Montague Worlock. The prices ranged from 2s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. Without entering upon the question of musical dissension unfortunately still so rife in the Western Metropolis, it may be stated that the determination of Sir George Edwards to give these two Concerts was undoubtedly due to one of the charges brought forward against the Festival Committee, of which body Sir George is a member, that the non-success of the last meeting was in a measure owing to the high minimum price of admission—viz., 7s. 6d. A passing remark must be made on the undertaking as a test of the willingness of the class of musical amateurs for whom it was originated, to support high class Concerts when brought within their reach. The results arrived at are somewhat conflicting. On the evening of the 22nd ult., when a programme consisting of David's "Desert," Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer," and a miscellaneous selection was given, the attendance was far from satisfactory; on the other hand, the hall, on the afternoon of the 23rd, when Haydn's "Creation" was the chief attraction, was crowded by an enthusiastic audience. Comment on this is not called for here; it suffices to mention the fact. The Ode Symphonique, "The Desert," which was the principal item in the evening's programme, had not been heard here for six years, and to many present it came in the shape of a novelty. It was remarkably well rendered both by chorus and band, whilst Mr. Lloyd sang the exacting tenor music well. Mr. Santley was an efficient Reader. The other larger choral number in the programme was Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer," in which Miss Anna Williams sang the solo with marked success. The chorus sang extremely well, and shared the honour of a recall awarded the solo artist at the conclusion of the Motet. Mr. D. W. Rootham conducted the chorus in two of Mendelssohn's part-songs, "The deep repose of night" and "The Lark's Song," the latter of which had to be repeated. The orchestra were heard to particular advantage in Mozart's Symphony in E flat, Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture, Grieg's Melody for strings "Spring," and Weber's "Jubilee" Overture.

As already stated the "Creation" was the principal attraction at the second Concert. It is needless to speak in detail of a work so well known, except to mention that on this occasion it was given entire. The performance exhibited such choral singing as has not been heard in the Colston Hall for some time past, the quality of the soprano and tenor voices calling for special mention. Of the principals, Miss Anna Williams, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Santley, it will suffice to say that they sang the music in a style familiar to all frequenters of oratorio performances. Good aid was rendered in the final quartet by Mrs. Bailey and Mr. Worlock. Mendelssohn's setting of "When Israel out of Egypt came," never before heard here, if a performance at the Cathedral with organ accompaniment be excepted, came next. In this short work the chorus singing was so good that no praise is high enough for them or their trainer, Mr. D. W. Rootham. Taken as a whole, the Concerts may fairly be considered an artistic success, and Sir George Edwards has deserved well of those for whom he catered.

The second Concert of the Cheltenham Quartet Society took place on January 28 at the Montpellier Rotunda, before a large audience. The performers were Herr Josef Ludwig, first violin; Mr. G. Collins, second violin; Mr. Richard Blagrove, viola; Mr. W. E. Whitehouse, violoncello, and Mr. Henry Rogers, pianoforte. The programme consisted of Beethoven's Quartet in A major (Op. 13, No. 8); a Trio in F by Niels W. Gade for pianoforte, violin and violoncello; a violoncello solo, and Mendelssohn's Quartet in D major (Op. 44, No. 1). The Beethoven Quartet, with its glorious first movement, its graceful and melodious Minuet and Andante, and its catchy and brilliant Finale was finely given. In Gade's Trio one cannot help being struck with the prominence given throughout to the violoncello, a prominence of which Mr. Whitehouse was not slow to avail himself. He gained a less legitimate triumph in his solo, two short movements by no means interesting in themselves as works of art, but affording a clever player an opportunity of showing off his execution and the tone of his instrument. For this he was rapturously applauded and recalled. Then followed Mendelssohn's Quartet, the first movement of which was not particularly well rendered. The performance of the remaining movements, however, was all that the most fastidious could desire.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

New York, February 14, 1889.

THERE has been plenty of music in this city during the last four weeks, but not quite so much in other parts of the country. Halévy's "La Juive" was revived at the Metropolitan Opera House, on January 21, before a very large and enthusiastic audience. The performance was signalled by the re-appearance of Lilli Lehmann, and by the fact that the lights in the auditorium of the Opera House were kept turned up throughout the evening. This was the result of dissatisfaction among those stockholders who regard the Opera House as a place of social recreation and not as a temple of art. These gentlemen had become weary of sitting in darkness, and the ladies of their families entered a decided protest against a custom which prevented their costumes from being seen. The last straw that broke the camel's back was the initial performance of "Das Rheingold," when the auditorium was veiled in dim religious light throughout the evening. After that the Amusement Committee commanded Director Stanton to turn up the lights. The critics condemned this sacrifice of art to Mammon in such severe terms that the order was speedily modified, so that the lights are now turned up only when they will not materially injure the stage effect. Madame Lehmann returns to us in magnificent voice, and her singing is still marked by the excellence of its Italian method and the intensity of its dramatic feeling.

On January 30 the Paris version of "Tannhäuser" was brought forward, with Lehmann as Venus, Bettaque as Elizabeth, Fischer as the Landgrave, and Grinauer as Wolfram. Alvary, who was to have been the Tannhäuser, was taken ill and his place was filled without rehearsal by Herr Paul Kalisch, Madame Lehmann's husband. He achieved a very brilliant success and was at once engaged to accompany the organisation on its tour at the close of the season here.

On the 6th inst. "Il Trovatore" was brought out with great success, which gave the Italianissimi an opportunity for some loud rejoicing. One of the daily papers said: "After last evening's performance even the wind whistled."

Michael Banner, one of the leading American violinists and a young artist of much talent, has organised a strong quartet, which has given one tolerably good Concert. New York is overrun with chamber music organisations and there is hardly any hope of success for the new ones. The best we have is the Beethoven String Quartet, led by Gustave Dannreuther, a brother of Edward Dannreuther.

A number of pupils of the National Conservatory of Music appeared at the Lyceum Theatre, on the afternoon of January 30, in a programme made up of Concert selections, and acts from "Dinorah" and "Faust." The exhibition was remarkable only for the utter absence of talent. It is difficult to believe that a practically free Conservatory can be carried on with such poor results.

The feature of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Concert in this city last evening was the new Pianoforte Concerto in E flat, by Max Vogrich. Vogrich is a Transylvanian, a pupil of Moscheles and Richter. He has been residing in this city since 1885, devoting his time to composition. His Concerto is dedicated to Adele aus der Ohe, and was splendidly played by her. The Intermezzo, an original and beautiful movement, is one of the most dignified and artistic pieces of pianoforte writing recently produced here.

Your correspondent neglected to mention in the last letter that a delightful Concert was given on January 11 at the Metropolitan Opera House, by the Metropolitan Club, a choral organisation numbering among its members some of the best professional singers in the city. Among the foremost of them is Mrs. Raymond, known in days gone by to all the operatic world as Annie Louise Carey. At this Concert Cowen's "Song of Thanksgiving" was admirably sung, and was received with great applause.

A well-equipped Spanish Opera Company made its appearance in San Francisco on January 28.

The Boston Quintet had a poor audience in the same city on January 14. At the Tivoli a season of Italian opera, with a company composed of broken-down singers, has, however been prosperous.

Columbus, Ohio, is looking up as a musical town. Rosenthal, the pianist, appeared there lately to a large audience. The two musical organisations known as the Arion and the Orpheus are giving Concerts of choral music, and the Opera Club is giving light operas. The Cecilian Club is about to produce Rossini's "Stabat Mater."

News from Buffalo shows that this musical city is not forgetting its love for art.

From Chicago comes the news that Méhul's "Joseph," a Biblical opera in three acts, has been performed at the Grand Opera House, under Conductor Cintura's direction, by the German Men's Society, numbering sixty voices. The Arion Club also arranged two Concerts at the Academy, consisting of songs of various nations, selected some time ago by the Director. The solo numbers were supplied by the Concert company, consisting of the violin virtuoso, Ovide Musin, Madame Annie Louise Tanner, and Whitney Mockridge. Mr. Frederic Archer was Conductor of the Concerts.

There has been a notable absence of choral performances during the past month. Your correspondent has been able to discover only one that is worthy of mention. This was a performance of Handel's "Messiah," given at Ravenswood, a suburb of Chicago, on January 24. A local chorus sang, together with the following soloists: Mrs. Viola Frost-Mixer, Mr. Charles A. Knorr, Mr. George Gookins, and Miss G. Johnson. An orchestra from Chicago performed the instrumental accompaniments. The house was crowded, and the Oratorio was fairly well given.

At the Metropolitan Opera House last night a testimonial benefit was given to Max Maretzek, the veteran impresario, to celebrate his fiftieth year in the world of music. The house was packed and the entertainment was long and varied. A section of Mr. Daly's company began it at 7.30 with "A Woman's Won't," then Maud Powell played a Violin Mazurka by Zarzycki, Madame Fursch-Madi sang an air from Saint-Saëns's "Samson and Delilah," Rafael Joseffy played Liszt's "Fantaisie Hongroise," Dion Boucicault appeared in "Kerry," Herr Alvary and Herr Sedlmayer gave the Forging Scene from "Siegfried," Signor Del Puente sang the Toreador song from "Carmen," Madame Fursch-Madi came forward again to sing Donna Anna's grand aria, and the performance closed with the "Miserere" Scene from "Il Trovatore," sung by Madame Herbert-Foerster and Herr Perotti. Theodore Thomas, Anton Seidl, Frank van der Stucken, Adolf Neuendorff, Walter Damrosch, and Maretzek himself conducted the orchestra at various times during the evening. Maretzek made a neat speech, thanking the artists and the public, and then retired from the public gaze probably for ever.

ON Saturday, the 2nd ult., the remaining portion of the Church of St. Luke, Nightingale Lane, Battersea, consisting of nave and aisles with the lower storey of the tower, was opened for Divine Service. The choir of the church, with about forty of the neighbouring clergy, entered the church singing "We love the place, O God." The service was Smart in G, and the Anthem was "I have surely built Thee an house," by T. Tallis Trimmell. At the service on the Sunday following special features in the music were Offertory Sentences by Dr. Martin and J. C. Field, and after the offertory in the evening Handel's "Hallelujah" Chorus was sung. In continuation of the opening services, on the Wednesday following, a special festival of Battersea Choirs—namely, St. Matthew's, Lavender Hill; St. Mark's, Battersea Rise; St. Luke's, Nightingale Lane; St. John's, Usk Road; St. Peter's, Plough Lane; St. Paul's, New Wandsworth; and St. Mary's by the Park—took place. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to Tours's setting in F, and the Anthem was "O Lord our Governour" (Henry Gadsby). After the offertory Handel's "Hallelujah" Chorus was again sung. The final Hymn was "Blessed city, Heavenly Salem," the other Hymns during the service being Sir John Goss's setting of "Praise, my soul, the King of Heaven," and "Christ is the Foundation." Mr. E. P. Atkins, Organist of St. Mark's, Battersea Rise, presided at the organ. The musical arrangements were under the superintendence of Mr. C. Mason Chase, Organist and Choirmaster of St. Luke's.

THE Highbury Philharmonic Society gave its third Concert of the season on Monday, the 11th ult., at the Highbury

Athenæum, Highbury New Park, under the direction of its experienced Conductor, Mr. G. H. Betjemann. The Concert opened with Macfarren's Cantata "May Day," the choruses in which, as well as the part-song "The hunt's up," were well given. The principals were Miss Thornthwaite, Miss Rose Dafforne, and Mr. David Hughes. In conclusion of the first part of the programme Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto was played by Mr. G. H. Betjemann in an excellent and unaffected manner. The orchestral accompaniment was creditably rendered, the assistant Conductor, Mr. David Beardwell, taking the bâton. Mendelssohn's well known Symphony in A minor (the "Scotch") was performed by the amateur orchestra in an energetic and painstaking manner. The Spinning Scene from the "Flying Dutchman," with Miss Thornthwaite as Senta and Miss Rose Dafforne as Mary, including the Spinning Chorus, was very effectively given, and the programme was completed with a selection from "Tannhäuser." This included Elizabeth's Prayer (Miss Thornthwaite), Wolfram's Song "O star of eve" (Mr. David Hughes), the Pilgrims' Chorus, and the popular March and Chorus "Hail, bright abode."

THE annual general meeting of the members of the Choir Benevolent Fund took place at the Chapter House, St. Paul's Cathedral, on the 7th ult., Mr. W. A. Barrett in the chair. There was an unusually large assembly of the members, who attended to elect a secretary in the place of Mr. Charles Fry. The choice fell upon Mr. W. A. Frost, of St. Paul's Cathedral. The chairman alluded to the recent legal proceedings in the Court of Queen's Bench, when the Society successfully defended, as the ground landlord, an action relating to its rights of one portion of its property, and the Hon. Solicitor, Mr. A. Calkin Lewis, explained the course of the action. The report and financial statement of the Society, showing it to be in a flourishing position, were read and adopted. Several new members of the Committee were elected. The usual list of votes of thanks to those to whom the Society was indebted for valuable services were carried unanimously, and after a vote of thanks to the chairman the meeting terminated.

A CROWDED and well dressed, but decidedly inattentive, audience assembled at the second Concert this season of the Royal Amateur Orchestral Society, at St. James's Hall, on the 2nd ult. This is the oldest of the numerous amateur orchestral societies now in existence, and the playing on the present occasion showed that, under a first-rate Conductor, very excellent results might be obtained. Mr. George Mount is an able musician, but he does not seem to possess the art of so communicating his feeling of the music to his followers that they obey him as it were by instinct. Thus the orchestra remains a fortuitous concourse of atoms, not a single well ordered smoothly working machine. This want of unity was specially observable in Dr. Mackenzie's beautiful "Benedictus" for violins in unison. Highly creditable performances were given of Gounod's Symphony in D (No. 1) and Beethoven's "Leonora" Overture (No. 3). The violin and harp solos of Misses Marianne and Clara Eissler were deservedly well received. Of the vocal music nothing need be said.

"MUSICAL Palæography, a Collection of Photographic Fac-similes of the Principal Manuscripts of Gregorian, Ambrosian, Gallican, and Mozarabic Chant, published by the Benedictine Monks of Solesmes," is the title of the new work to be issued by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel of Leipzig. The collection will consist chiefly of Gregorian responsorials, graduals, and antiphonaries, the monuments of the school of St. Gall, and the principal representatives of neumatic manuscripts. The value of this issue can hardly be over-estimated, it will enable the student to study, as though from the original documents, the various forms of ecclesiastical chants. So delicate and so accurate is the photographic process that it is possible to forget that the fac-simile is regarded in studying these plates, and the possibility of error is placed beyond question. It is to be issued to subscribers at the price of £1 per annum, and the completed series will be a most valuable collection of musical historical monuments.

THE fifth of Mr. W. de Manby Sergison's ten winter Concerts was given at his own house, 62, Warwick Square, on the 14th ult. Schubert's Trio in B flat (Op. 99), for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, was admirably played by Miss Agnes Zimmermann, Mr. Strauss, and Signor Piatti. The solo for violoncello "Kol nidrei," a Hebrew melody arranged by Max Bruch, was given by Signor Piatti with all possible effect. Miss Agnes Zimmermann selected for her solos for pianoforte the Sketch No. 1, in C minor (Schumann), Chanson Triste (Tschaikowsky), and Valse in A flat (Moszkowski). Chopin's Polonaise Brillante for pianoforte and violoncello, given con amore by Miss Agnes Zimmermann and Signor Piatti, ended the Concert, which was agreeably varied by some vocal pieces by Miss Eleanor Rees and Mr. J. Robertson. Mr. W. de M. Sergison was the accompanist. The sixth Concert was given on the 21st ult.

IT is not advisable to say very much concerning the recital of Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde" at the Portman Rooms on January 28 and following dates. Mr. Carl Armbruster is an excellent musician and a competent pianist, but if the extreme admirers of the Bayreuth poet-composer find any satisfaction in hearing his most elaborate score reduced to the pianoforte, with second-rate vocalists to interpret the leading characters of the music-drama, they must be an easily pleased as well as a feeble folk. While giving due credit to Miss Pauline Cramer, Mr. W. Nicholl, Miss Marguerite Hoare, and the other members of the cast, it must be said that to those who had heard "Tristan und Isolde" at Bayreuth the performance was inexpressibly painful, while to others it must have been incomprehensible. It is not by such means that the popularisation of Wagner's works will be advanced in this country.

AT the second Concert of the season given by the Woodside Park Musical Society, on the 7th ult., Smart's "Bride of Dunkerron" and a miscellaneous selection were performed. The soloists were Miss Kate Norman, Mr. Percy Palmer, and Mr. R. E. Miles. The Cantata was very carefully rendered and reflected great credit on both chorus and soloists. The accompaniments consisted of a band of strings, led by Mr. E. Halfpenny; harmonium, Mr. C. E. Jolley, Mus. Bac., Oxon.; pianoforte, Mrs. Williams. In the second part violin and violoncello solos were contributed respectively by Mr. G. H. Betjemann and Mr. E. Woolhouse. Amongst the most successful items given by the chorus may be mentioned Eaton Fanning's beautiful part-song "Moonlight." Mr. Alfred J. Dye conducted as usual, and also acted as accompanist in the latter part of the programme.

THE Nieuws van den Dag, the leading Dutch daily paper, writes concerning the first Concert given at Amsterdam by Messrs. Oliver King and Theodore Werner, on the 22nd ult., that "Mr. King, whose Sonata for pianoforte and violin, and Légende and Barcarolle for pianoforte solo, were performed, is a writer with well-developed musical talent. This is shown throughout, especially in the opening part of the Sonata. The first theme itself and the working out is worthy of much praise. The second theme of the first part is very charming and cleverly treated. The Légende was equally good, and, like the Sonata, proves the ability of the composer. The works of Mr. King were attentively heard and warmly applauded by the audience. Mr. Werner's violin playing was also greatly admired, especially in Schumann's Fantasia, Wieniawski's Second Concerto, and Spohr's Ninth Concerto."

STEINWAY Hall was well filled on the evening of the 7th ult., the occasion being a Concert given by Mdlle. Jeanne Denys and Miss Ethel Meredyth, one a pleasing vocalist, the other a reciter of considerable talent and promise. Between them, these two clever young ladies could easily have contrived to supply an agreeable musical and dramatic entertainment, but, wisely enough, they elected not to depend solely upon their own unaided efforts. The balance of an attractive programme was contributed by Miss Adèle Myers, Miss Hélène Gingold, Miss Amy Thomas, Signor Luigi Mhanes, Mr. Claude Trevor, Mr. Mowbray Marras, Mr. Stefano Khardys, and Mr. Herbert Thordike—a combination which resulted in a thoroughly enjoyable Concert.

THE Clapham Choral Society (Conductor, Mr. Walter Mackway) gave, on the 11th ult., a performance of "The Golden Legend" at Belmont Hall, Clapham. The principal vocalists were Miss Kate Fusselle, Miss Lucy Etheridge (pupil of Mr. Walter Mackway), Mr. Philip Newbury, and Mr. Charles Copland, all of whom sang their respective parts in an artistic and musicianly manner. The Choir sang the Evening Hymn "O pure in heart" and the Epilogue with true intonation and expression; this result could only be obtained by a well trained body of voices. The Society was unable to give the performance with orchestra, but Mr. Sidney H. Hann and Mr. Alfred Izard accompanied the work on the pianoforte and organ, respectively, with considerable ability.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON AND WOODS sold by auction, on the 22nd ult., a number of gold boxes, medals, orders, bâtons, silver plate, and jewellery, presented by various Royal and other personages to Michael William Balfe. The set of plate given to him on the occasion of the one hundredth performance of the "Bohemian Girl," the gold and silver medals presented by Louis Philippe and Alexander II., the Cross of the Legion of Honour given by the Emperor Napoleon, the Cross and Star of the Commander of the Order of Charles III. of Spain, with a number of other interesting and valuable relics of the famous composer, including some portraits, and the original autograph score of "Il Talismano" were included in the sale.

A CAPITAL Concert was given at Steinway Hall, on the 22nd ult., by the members of No. 6 (Captain Gerald A. Shoppee's) Company of the St. George's Rifles. A long and diversified programme was carried out to the palpable satisfaction of a large and demonstrative audience. Madame Konss-Baylis worked with untiring energy, sharing both in the vocal and instrumental portions of the Concert. Mr. Reginald Groome sang well, as did Miss Fanny Parfit, R.A.M., while the cornet solos of Bandmaster Fleet were warmly appreciated. Some concerted pieces from Sullivan's comic operas were effectively given, and a number of part songs were creditably rendered by the Male Voice Choir. Mr. Frank Knight was at the pianoforte.

THE suggestion made by Mr. Andrew Lang that an effort should be made to collect the popular songs has, to some extent, been already carried into effect by Mr. W. A. Barrett, and a series of quaint songs, words and music derived chiefly from traditional sources and from the presses of the "Broadside" ballad printers, will shortly be published. Many of the melodies have been the "joy of the streets and fields," and are still to be heard in remote places in town and country on occasions more or less unusual. The music has much that warrants its preservation, and the words tell n homely speech the sentiments and the expressions if the people.

Le Ménestrel, the famous musical journal of Paris, makes a complimentary allusion to Dr. Mackenzie's new work, and corrects a statement of Le Siècle, which mistakes Sir Morell Mackenzie with the Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, à propos of the performance at Vienna of the Overture to "Twelfth Night," which it distinguishes by a translation of the second Shakespearean title "Ce que vous voudrez"; in turn we may venture to suggest that the title of Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's Cantata is the "Dream of Jubal" ("Le Rêve de Jubal") and not as it is given in Le Ménestrel, the "Dram of Jubal."

MADAME MADELINE HARDY gave an excellent Concert at Brixton Hall, on Monday evening, the 18th ult. The soli selected by the Concert-giver were Costa's "I will extol Thee" ("Eli"), Glover's "Will you love me then as now?" and a new song, "Marjorie," by F. Allitsen. The remainder of the programme was performed by Madame Antoinette Sterling, Miss Eleanor Rees, Mr. Orlando Harley, Mr. Henry Yates (who sang in the absence of Mr. Herbert Sims Reeves), Mr. Frederick Bevan, Miss Kate Cheyne (pianoforte), Herr Polonaski (violin), Mr. Bernard Reynolds (violoncello), and Mr. Turle Lee (accompanist).

THE first Invitation Concert of the St. James's Choral Society, Camberwell, was given to a crowded audience on Tuesday evening, the 5th ult., in the New Hall, Knatchbull Road, when Cowen's "Rose Maiden" was performed, the solos being given by Miss Epps, Mrs. Avery, Mr. Gregory Hast, and Mr. Harris. In the second part the Society was heard to advantage in Faning's "Song of the Vikings" and Garrett's "Good night." The Conductor was Mr. R. Felix Blackbee, and Mr. Alfred Avery accompanied.

A SUCCESSFUL Concert was given by the Thames Valley Orchestral Society on the 7th ult., at the Town Hall, Twickenham, in which vocal and instrumental pieces by Mendelssohn, Bach, Haydn, Gounod, Bishop, and others were given. The following performers took part in the programme: Madame Carrie Blackwell and Mr. D. Price, vocalists; Miss Jessie Hudson, violin; Mr. Clement Hann, violoncello. The orchestra was conducted by Mr. G. F. Huntley, Mus. Bac.

THE St. James's (Clapham) Choral Society gave an evening Concert on Monday, the 18th ult., in the School Room connected with the Church. The principal item in the programme was Van Bree's "St. Cecilia's Day," in which the choruses were praiseworthy although by no means faultlessly sung. The soprano soli were interpreted in a highly creditable manner by Mrs. Boulcott Newth, and Mr. Sidney Hann, A.R.A.M., conducted with good judgment.

A SOCIETY called the Plainsongæ Mediæval Music Society has been formed at 20, Finsbury Circus, in London, for the study of the music of the Middle Ages. After a catalogue of English MSS. has been compiled, it is intended to reproduce those of importance in fac-simile, to publish music which has not before been printed, to arrange for lectures by competent musicians, to correspond with similar societies on the Continent, and in other ways to carry out the objects of the Society.

AN Exercise for the degree of Doctor of Music, composed by Mr. Hill, Mus. Bac., was performed in the Theatre of the University of London, Burlington Gardens, on the 23rd ult. The subject of the words is taken from Dante's "Il Purgatorio." The music contains solos and concerted pieces with orchestral accompaniments and chorus. The Exercise, which was the first of the kind which has been given in the University, was conducted by the composer.

THE Popular Musical Union gave a Ballad Concert at the Holborn Town Hall on Thursday, the 7th ult. The vocalists included Miss Florence Dentry, Miss Montagu-Conyers, Miss Foxcroft (who took the place of Lady Colin Campbell), Mr. Edward Hall, and Mr. Bertram H. Latter. Miss Beatrice Ullithorne gave three violin solos, and Miss Mary Carmichael presided at the pianoforte in an efficient manner.

THE Choir of the Bow and Bromley Institute gave, on the 9th ult., at the Popular Organ Recital, Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer" (soloist, Mrs. Henschel) and Mr. Hamish MacCunn's choral Ballad "Lord Ullin's Daughter." The solo violinist was Mr. George Palmer, one of the professors at the Guildhall School of Music; the Organist, Mr. Fountain Meen; and the Conductor, Mr. W. G. McNaught.

Frost, F.C.O., and the accompanist was Mr. Battison Haynes.

THE annual meeting of the London College of Music was held at the offices, 54, Great Marlborough Street, on the 19th ult., the Hon. President, W. H. Cummings, Esq., in the chair. There was a large attendance, and the proceedings throughout were marked with great unanimity and cordiality. The report was read by the Hon. Secretary, and was in every respect satisfactory.

A COMPLIMENTARY dinner was given to Mr. L. C. Venables on the 11th ult., by the South London Choral Association, in the Surrey Masonic Hall, Camberwell, on the occasion of his entering upon the twenty-first year of his performance of the duties of Conductor and Principal of the Association. Mr. H. Knight officiated as Chairman.

THE Finsbury Choral Association gave, at their Concert, on the 14th ult., a capital performance of Costa's "Eli." Mrs. Hutchinson, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Charles Chilly, and Mr. Bridson were the soloists. There was a crowded and demonstrative audience.

MR. WALTER PARRATT, Mus. Bac., Organist at St. George's Chapel, Windsor, will give a Recital on Thursday, the 7th inst., on the organ at Westminster Chapel, James Street, Buckingham Gate, which has recently been cleaned and restored.

REVIEWS.

[New York: Dodd, Mead and Co.]

THIS interesting book will doubtless be much valued by students of musical history and collectors of instruments. It is handsomely printed in a quarto size, and the text is illustrated by 270 pictures of instruments drawn in pen and ink by William Adams Brown, one of the Editors of the work. The title-page informs us that the whole of the instruments are in the possession of Mrs. J. Crosby Brown, of New York. It is further understood that it is the desire of the owner to make the collection as complete as possible, and to present it entire to the New York Metropolitan Museum of Arts. The pictures of the instruments give a fairly good idea of their shapes, forms, and character, even though the style of the drawing does not permit of the reproduction of all the artistic peculiarities the originals may possess. In this respect the beautiful and elegant book on musical instruments published a year ago by Messrs. Black, of Edinburgh, with chromo-lithographic pictures of existing instruments drawn by Mr. Gibb and described by Mr. A. J. Hipkins, still stands unrivalled as a model. It is not necessary to pursue any further comparison between the books, as there is much in the present work which is worthy of special comment. Every contribution intended to enlarge existing knowledge on a particular subject, if earnestly and honestly undertaken, should be judged upon its own merits. The application of the old proverb on comparisons is not more generally pertinent than in the matter of music, or more particularly needless in the present case. The book has evidently been compiled with particular care, the best known authorities have been consulted, and a mass of information has been brought together which it would be impossible to find elsewhere in so convenient a form.

The book is divided into eighteen chapters. The first two treat of Chinese music and musical instruments, and give a few notes concerning the traditional history of the art, the peculiarities of notation and time, with a description of the names, shapes, construction, and purposes of the several instruments. Then follow three chapters concerning Japan and the Corea, and after these two chapters on India. The individuality of Hindu music, the twenty-two Srutis, or sub-divisions of the octave, which minute divisions make the music of this and of other Eastern nations so unintelligible, because so undefinable to European ears, are touched upon. The Rabab, the Ravanastron, the parents or prototypes of the violin, with other instruments of string, wind, or percussion, and their uses in religious and social life are clearly described, as are also the music and instruments of Siam and Burmah.

In speaking of the music of the Arabs and others in Arabia, Syria, and North Africa, the influence of the art on European music is pointed out, the special study of the various instruments made by the authors confirming the opinions of those who assert that more than one of the instruments in use in Europe were derived from an Eastern ancestry. The cultivation of music among the Persians and Turks, the savage music of Africa, the instruments of the African tribes, of North, South, Central America and Oceania, are described in an able manner. It is curious to note that among the least civilised tribes the musical faculty among the people finds its expression in the performance upon instruments, which are chiefly if not wholly rhythmical; or at all events, those machines whose construction admits of the performance of a tune, such as flutes or whistles, are so far limited in extent as to be more capable of marking a measure than of producing a melody. Drums, rattles, tappers, and notched sticks are more numerous than the stringed or wind instruments. The most curious among the many is the love flute of the Maories, which, according to tradition, utters a distinct and irresistible speech.

There are numbers of curious facts in the pages of this excellent work which are of inestimable value to the musical historian. The pleasant yet simple and straightforward way in which they are laid before the reader may be counted as not the least valuable feature of the book. It may be added that there is a copious list of authorities, books of travel, histories of music, and dissertations on various musical subjects which are referred to, or have been made use of in the course of the work, and there is also a most exhaustive index which renders reference to the contents an easy task.

It is not difficult to see that the duty of compilation has been a labour of love, and it is out of respect for this character that the style in which the drawings have been made demands and obtains justification. What is now wanted is a collection of the melodies popular among the peoples with whom the instruments herein described originated, or are in constant use. It would complete the idea which prompted the production of this most estimable account of "Musical Instruments and their Homes." This, it is rumoured, will be supplied before very long, as an important work on the subject, from the pen of the late Carl Engel, is in the press.

Twelve Studies on Style and Technique. For the Piano-forte. In Two Books. By Walter Macfarren.

[Edwin Ashdown.]

THE composer of these Studies has fairly earned his right to be heard as an authority upon the true intent of Exercises, both for the mind and fingers; and it is because we are disposed to regard the work before us as the result of a ripened judgment upon this essential subject that we have no doubt of its securing a large amount of attention. From so practised a pen it is scarcely necessary to say that we have good music as well as useful work; but a point most important to be dwelt upon is that every piece has a definite object, and that, consequently, no mere brilliant passages obstruct the general design. The Scale and Arpeggio Studies are especially good, and one on Octaves must be particularly commended. There are also several which will demand the utmost care in phrasing; and indeed, as we have already hinted, not one can be hastily scampered through with any benefit to the pupil. We recollect that Sterndale Bennett made it a rule not to finger any of his music, because he said that he had no right to force his system upon other pianists. With this rule we are by no means disposed to agree, even in ordinary piano-forte music; but in Exercises we contend that the author's fingering is most essential, for the passages and the method of executing them spring up simultaneously in the mind of the composer, and his design is therefore only incompletely carried out when the performer adopts a system of his own. No doubt Mr. Macfarren is of this opinion, for the fingering is most carefully marked throughout; and as in no place is a choice of methods given, there can be no question that those who use the Studies should also use the system of playing them so decisively indicated by the author.

Musical Notes. An Annual Critical Record of Important Musical Events for 1888. By Hermann Klein.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE change of publisher of this interesting Annual (the third year of publication) has brought with it a series of modifications in the plan and arrangement which are distinctly to its advantage. Many of these alterations doubtless were suggested by the author, as each succeeding year has shown his desire to make the book as perfect as possible. As it now appears, it is not only a trustworthy record of the musical occurrences of the year, but it is written in so genial and appreciative a style, that it may be read for its literary as well as for its chronological value. Not the least interesting feature of the book is the comprehensive index, which guides the reader at once to all the events of importance which have taken place during the year 1888. The improvement in the general appearance of the Annual, both as regards printing and binding, is specially noticeable.

Original Compositions for the Organ. No. 110. Three Offertories. By Hamilton Clarke.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

IN these pieces Mr. Hamilton Clarke has been careful to keep within the capacity of moderate players. They are for the soft stops of the organ, but are very bright and melodious, and indeed No. 1 might be regarded by some as too light for use as a church voluntary. We give our preference to No. 2, but all three are attractive, especially to those who prefer tunefulness to the display of contrapuntal ingenuity.

FOREIGN NOTES.

THE Bayreuth Festspiele are to take place between July 21 and August 18. It is said that there will be nine performances of "Parsifal," four of "Tristan und Isolde," and five of "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg." "Parsifal" will be given on Sundays and Thursdays, "Tristan und Isolde" on the four Mondays, and "Die Meistersinger" on the four Wednesdays and on Saturday, August 17.

The Tenth Silesian Music Festival is to take place from June 2 to 4 next at Görlitz, under the direction of Capellmeister Ludwig Deppe. The following works will be included in the performances—viz., Bach's Magnificat, a portion of the music to Wagner's "Parsifal," an Oratorio, "Christophorus," by Rheinberger; Mozart's seldom heard Concerto for violin and viola, with string orchestra, and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

The annual music festival of the Allgemeine Deutsche Musik-Verein will be held this year at Wiesbaden between June 27 and 30.

A new "patriotic" opera, entitled "Der alte Dessauer," the libretto by Paul Kurth, the music by Otto Neitzel, has just been first produced at Wiesbaden, with good success.

After a special performance of Wagner's "Götterdämmerung" at Berlin, in the presence of the German Emperor, the latter bestowed the title of "Kammer-Sängerin" upon Frau Rosa Sucher, the gifted interpreter of Wagnerian parts and wife of the Conductor at the Berlin Opera.

Max Bruch has completed his new dramatic Cantata "The Fiery Cross," which was to be produced on the 26th of last month by the "Orchester-Verein" of Breslau.

Madame Materna is to appear next month in Paris at one of M. Lamoureux's Concerts, when she will sing portions from "Tannhäuser" and "Götterdämmerung," as well as the famous "Liebestod" from "Tristan und Isolde." The appearance of the lady will doubtless mark an event in the annals of these Concerts.

Theodor Wachtel, who up to his twenty-fourth year plied a cabriolet in the streets of Hamburg, will during the present month celebrate the fortieth anniversary of his début in the operatic world. The once famous tenor is now living at Wiesbaden, and is said to retain much of that wonderful "natural" voice which only lacked the artistic training of its possessor to render it unequalled.

A new Te Deum by Dr. Franz Wüllner has just been first performed at a Gürzenich Concert at Cologne, and created a deep impression.

Signor Sylva, the new tenor at the Royal Opera of Berlin, has signed a contract with the Intendant-General engaging himself to sing at that establishment during four months every year, at a salary of 25,000 marks.

Mr. Franz Rummel, the well-known and esteemed pianist, has been playing with great success in Bonn, Dresden, Wiesbaden, and other smaller towns, and quite lately in Vienna and Brunn. His chamber music Concerts were much appreciated in Berlin, for at each one he brought out a novelty. He has commenced an extensive tour, playing at Frankfurt-am-Main (the Museum Concert), Cassel, Magdeburg, Wiesbaden, Neuwied, &c., and during this month is engaged for a tournée in Scandinavia.

Rubinstein's opera "The Merchant of Kalischnikoff" has again been prohibited at St. Petersburg after two highly successful performances. The opera, which was first produced here ten years ago, was forbidden on account of the scenes representing the service and singing of the Orthodox Greek Church.

Herr Stradal, a Viennese pianist and pupil of Franz Liszt, has, it is stated, received from the Countess Louisa Erdödy the MS. of a hitherto unknown Hungarian Rhapsody by the late pianist-composer, which he is preparing shortly to play in public.

A new ballet, "The Sleeping Beauty," the music by Tchaikowsky, will shortly be brought out at the Imperial Opera of St. Petersburg.

The official Musical Society of Russia, of which Anton Rubinstein is the director, has just been presented by the Czar with the Old Grand Theatre at St. Petersburg, together with a money grant for the purpose of utilising the handsome building as a Conservatoire and Concert-hall.

First performances of Wagner's "Das Rheingold" and "Die Walküre" were given last month, at the Hungarian Theatre at Budapest, and enthusiastically received, the leading artists being nearly all natives of Hungary. Herr Mahler was the Conductor.

An "adapted" version of Messrs. Gilbert and Sullivan's new opera is being played at the Carl Theater of Vienna, under the title of "Capitän Wilson," and is making good houses.

The English pianist, Miss Florence May, has been staying in Vienna, and has been unusually fortunate in forming a large circle of influential friends during the six weeks of her visit to that city. The English artist has been received with uniform kindness by many of the leading musicians, including Brahms, under whom she formerly studied, and it is understood that she will return to Vienna next year to give the Recital which was to have taken place on the 2nd ult., and which had to be abandoned on account of the death of the Crown Prince Rudolf.

A new opera by Antonin Dvořák, entitled "The Jacobin," the libretto by Madame Cervinka Rieger, was produced for the first time, on the 12th ult., at the National Theatre of Prague, and met with an enthusiastic reception.

Twenty-one performances of Gluck's "Orfeo" have lately been given at the Costanzi Theatre of Rome. In consequence of this success, another of the great reformer's works is to be revived here, the choice lying between "Armida" and "Iphigénie en Tauride."

Ponchielli's opera "Gioconda" will shortly be produced, for the first time, at the Royal Opera of Berlin.

An opera, entitled "Simeta," the joint work of the brothers Antonio and Gaetano Cipollini, is to be one of the principal novelties this season at La Scala of Milan.

A dramatic Oratorio, entitled "Franciscus," by the young Flemish composer, Eugène Tinel, recently produced for the first time at Brussels, met with extraordinary success, and the performance has already been four times repeated. M. Tinel has been a pupil of the Brussels Conservatoire.

On the 11th ult. an excellent Concert was given at Valenciennes, in which two juvenile players, Mdles. Céline and Adeline Blès, natives of the town, and at one time pupils of Messrs. Pollitzer and White, in London, were among the performers. They were most successful in their efforts, and awakened much enthusiasm. Céline played De Beriot's seventh "Air varié" for violin, and two pieces by M. Colyns, Professor at the Conservatoire of Brussels, with much brilliancy. Adeline, who is spoken of as a pianist of whom high hopes are entertained, performed several pieces in a most skilful manner.

We hear that in San Francisco great service is being rendered to music by the establishment of a permanent orchestra for the interpretation of classical works, mainly through the energy and enterprise of Mr. J. H. Rosewald, a leading professor and soloist in that city, who is also a most able Conductor.

The Bayreuther Blätter publishes in a recent issue the complete sketch of the scenes of a five-act opera, entitled "Die Sarazenin," upon which Wagner was for some time engaged soon after the completion of "Rienzi."

The Deutsche Rundschau has just published, for the first time, a number of letters written by Mendelssohn to Aloys Fuchs. The publication is accompanied by an interesting commentary from the pen of Dr. Hanslick, the eminent Viennese critic.

The bronze statue of Jean Jacques Rousseau, near the façade of the Paris Panthéon, was unveiled on the 3rd ult., amidst appropriate ceremonies, including the performance, by the Galin-Paris Choral Society, of fragments from the great philosopher's opera "Le Devin du village," and of De Gosséc's "Ode to Liberty." The statue is said to be highly characteristic and animated.

Franz Büchner, the much esteemed Conductor of the well-known Büchner orchestra, of Leipzig, died on the 4th ult., aged fifty-eight.

Aloise Klein, for some years organist at Rouen Cathedral, and composer of some meritorious pianoforte pieces, died at Strasburg at the early age of thirty-nine.

F. A. Roitzsch, the well-known musical savant and critical editor of some of J. S. Bach's works, died on the 4th ult., at Leipzig, aged eighty-three.

The death is also announced at Budapest, at the age of seventy-five, of Franz Bunko, the Nestor of gipsy musicians, and, in the opinion of Dr. Joachim, the most remarkable violin player of his nationality.

E. G. W. R. (PETERBORO').—We shall always be glad to insert notices of interesting musical events, provided that they are sent in good time.

FLORENCE E. J.—The Waltz is neither by Schubert nor Beethoven, but by Reissiger.

J. J. LEES.—There are nominally twenty-six, but according to many theorists these are only indicative of so many variations of pitch of two scales only, major and minor.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

ABERDEEN.—Sir Charles Hallé and his famous orchestra visited here on the 11th ult. for the first time. The Concert was almost entirely orchestral, there being but one vocalist. The band gave splendid renderings of the C minor Symphony of Beethoven, Wagner's Tannhäuser Overture, and some smaller works by Delibes, Schubert, and Weber. Sir Charles Hallé played Mendelssohn's G minor Concerto, for pianoforte and orchestra, and two characteristic pieces by Grieg. Miss Florence Christie sang Gluck's "Che farò" and Pissuti's "Heaven and earth."

BANCHORY, N.B.—An Organ Recital was given in the Parish Church, on the 2nd ult., by Mr. H. C. Tonking. His programme, consisting of compositions by Best, Haydn, Meyerbeer, and Rossini was peculiar in its interest, including four Marches in different styles—viz., Festive, Solemn, and Wedding marches, and a Fantasia, all by Mr. W. T. Best; also the Schiller March, by Meyerbeer.

BEDFORD.—At the Moravian Church an Organ Recital was given by Master Herbert England, pupil of Dr. Spark, on Thursday, the 21st ult., when he performed a Grand Concertstück for the organ, composed for the Leeds Musical Festival by Dr. Spark, with pieces by W. H. Richmond, W. Blakeley, R.A.M., Bach, Salomé, Batiste, Bache, Guilman, and Mendelssohn.

BELPER.—On Thursday, the 21st ult., the annual Band Concert was given in the Public Hall. Miss Jacques, Miss Donnelly, Mr. R. L. Green, and Master Swift were the principal vocalists. Mr. Knight and Mr. W. W. Windle performed a duet for bassoon and pianoforte, Mr. W. W. Windle was Conductor.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Miss Ethel and Mr. Harold Bauer gave a Concert of Chamber Music at the Mont Doré Hotel Winter Garden, on Wednesday, the 6th ult. The programme included Beethoven's String Quartet (Op. 18) in G; Gavotte for string quartet, by Bazzini (first time); Bach's Trio for pianoforte and two violins; violin solos by Wieniawski and Sarasate, exquisitely played by Mr. Harold Bauer, who also performed on the pianoforte Chopin's Scherzo in B minor (Op. 20). Miss Ethel Bauer played Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue (Op. 35) in E minor in an artistic style. The vocalist was Mr. Frangeone Davies. The accompaniments were admirably played by Miss Bauer.

BRIGHTON.—A very successful entertainment was given at the Princes' Hall, on the 12th ult., for the benefit of the poor of St. Bartholomew's parish. An Operetta by Miss Harriet Young was performed, the characters being taken by Mlle. Alphonsine Douilly and Mr. D. Price. In the second part A Morning Call was given. Miss Florence Henderson gave a Pianoforte Recital, comprising works as widely differing in style as Bach's "Italian" Concerto, the so-called "Moonlight" Sonata of Beethoven, Chopin's A major Polonaise, and Liszt's Fantasias. The young lady, who has appeared with success at the Crystal Palace, has a sympathetic and elastic touch, and showed her acquaintance with the conventional readings of the works above mentioned, wisely declining any strain after novelty of interpretation, which in young hands is apt to degenerate into crudeness. Her most successful number was Liszt's transcription of the Skating music in Le Prophète. A numerous audience remained to the end, and listened with profound attention, but only favoured with an encore one number, a pleasing little Impromptu in G major, by Edward Cutler, which occurred near the end of the programme.

BURNLEY.—Mr. Spencer having brought together a band of about thirty local performers, gave a Concert in the Mechanics' Institution, on the 16th ult. They played some well-known Overtures, and accompanied Mr. Lonsdale in Mendelssohn's Rondo Brillante. Misses Wilkinson and Horner, and Messrs. Coppock and Ingham contributed vocal solos. A chorus of fifty girls sang Crowe's vocal Waltz "Fairie Voices." The band was a little deficient in refinement, but as there is some good material in it, it will no doubt in time improve. On the 19th ult. an Organ Recital and Sacred Concert was given in Brunswick Chapel. Mr. Pollard played some selections from the works of Guilman, Grison, Salomé, &c., in his usual good style, and vocal solos were contributed by Misses Nutter and Robins, and Messrs. Baldwin and F. Pollard. The Chapel Choir, augmented for the occasion, sang some well-known Anthems in a praiseworthy manner under the direction of Mr. F. Pollard.

CARLETON.—A Concert was given at the Drill Hall, on January 31. The chief piece was Macfarren's May Day, which was well performed. There was a band and chorus, and the Conductor was Mr. E. Dean. The chief performers were Miss Libbie Williams, Miss Mitchell, Messrs. Newman, Jakeway, Willey, Morgan, and the Rev. A. W. Evans.

CHELMSFORD.—The new Oratorio The Captives of Babylon, by Mr. Geo. Shinn, Mus. Bac., Cantab., was performed by the Borough of Chelmsford Choral and Instrumental Society in the Corn Exchange, on Wednesday evening, January 30. The solos were given by the Misses Leah Marchant and Annie Wilson, and Messrs. Edward Smith and Robert Poole. Mr. E. Gosling was the Conductor. The chorus and band numbered upwards of 100.

CHICHESTER.—On Tuesday, the 19th ult., the Chichester Glee Union, which consists of Messrs. J. Crouch, W. Evan Cox, G. Fielder, and Seymour Kelly, gave a Concert in the Assembly Rooms. They were assisted by Miss M. Chamberlain, Mr. F. J. Read, Mus. Bac., Organist of the Cathedral, and Mr. H. P. Allen, F.C.O., Assistant Organist. The programme contained seven Part-songs, which were all admirably rendered without accompaniment.

COLCHESTER.—On Thursday evening, January 31, the Musical Society gave their sessional Concert at the Drill Hall, Stanwell Street. Coleridge's Rime of the Ancient Mariner, as set to music by I. F. Barnett, was the Cantata given. The chorus singing throughout was most creditable. The soloists were Miss May Hallam, Miss Helen Saunders, Mr. Harry Stubbs, and Mr. Musgrove Tufnail. The second part of the programme was of a miscellaneous character. Mr. James Dace was the Conductor. Mr. W. C. Everett accompanied on the pianoforte, and Mr. T. Bentley Turner on the American organ.

COGGESHALL.—The Philharmonic Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's Oratorio Elijah, with full orchestral accompaniments, on Tuesday evening, the 19th ult., at the large room, Stoneham Street. The vocal soloists were Miss Annie R. Mann, Miss Mary Barnard, Mr. Fred. Sanger, and Mr. F. J. Motum. The band and chorus numbered nearly eighty performers. The Conductor was Mr. Edwin Potter. The Concert was in every way a success, and will be remembered as one of the best ever heard in Coggeshall.

DARLASTON.—Mr. J. Shakespeare Robinson gave a very successful Concert of miscellaneous music in the Town Hall, on the 4th ult. The vocalists were Miss Lillian Mills, Miss Florence Bourne, Mr. Robinson and Mr. Robert Grice. Mr. Thomas Cotterell was the pianist.

DARLINGTON.—Messrs. Dittmar gave their annual Concert in the Mechanics' Hall, on the 13th ult. The performance opened with a new Sonata in C minor, for pianoforte and violin, by Grieg. In the hands of two such performers as Messrs. Dittmar it received full justice. An interesting feature of the evening was the famous Concerto in G minor, by Max Bruch, played by Herr Heinrich Dittmar. Herr Jean Dittmar ably sustained his part at the pianoforte, but he was heard at his best in the Ballade in A flat, by Chopin, and the Spinning Song, by Raff. Miss Nelson was the vocalist, and Mr. T. Henderson was the accompanist.

DUNDEE.—The anniversary of Burns' birth was duly celebrated on the 4th ult. by a Concert of national music given by the Glasgow Select Choir. The following evening the Concert party headed by Madame Marie Roze gave a Ballad Concert. The amateur Opera Company performed Wallace's Maritana in Her Majesty's Theatre, from the 6th to the 9th ult. inclusive. This is the third appearance of the Company since its formation and each occasion has been marked by decided improvement in every respect. The chorus acquitted themselves most admirably, and, with the exception of Miss Louise Lyle and Mr. Durward Lely, the rôles of the principal characters were assigned to members of the Company, Miss Steel, in particular, excelling as Maritana. The orchestra was largely augmented for the performances, and the whole was under the direction of Mr. Hirst. The third of Messrs. Paterson's Chamber Concerts took place on Tuesday evening, the 12th ult. The audience was unusually large. The vocalists were Miss Resch Petersen and Mr. Durward Lely. The programme included Mendelssohn's Sonata in B flat, for violoncello and pianoforte, and two compositions of Oliver King, for pianoforte alone. A Chamber Concert was given by Mr. W. P. Fleming on Friday, the 15th ult. The Concert-giver was assisted by Mr. A. M. Stooles and Mr. Carl D. Hamilton. Mendelssohn's D minor and Beethoven's E flat Trios were performed. Mrs. A. C. Haden was the vocalist.

EALING.—The last of the Ealing Popular Concerts took place on Saturday, the 9th ult., in the Lyric Hall. The principal piece in the programme was Mendelssohn's Hear my Prayer, by a band and chorus of eighty performers, the solo being most artistically rendered by Mrs. Dyke, who also sang the air "Ombra mai fu," by Handel. Mr. Herbert Thorndike and Mr. William Nicholl also assisted. Mr. Alfred Izard was the pianist. Selections were also given by the band, the most noteworthy being the Saraband from Almira (Handel) and the March from Tannhäuser. Herr Karl Henkel was the leader and Mr. Harold Savery the Conductor.

ELLAND.—A Concert was given here on Tuesday, the 19th ult., by Mr. A. M. Shaw, an amateur of no ordinary power, but totally blind. He was assisted by his friend, Mr. Wolstenholme, Mus. Bac., Oxon., who is also blind. Mr. Wolstenholme gave with great skill Mendelssohn's Fantasia in F sharp minor, Raff's Valse Brillante in E flat, and Weber's Galop di Bravura. Mr. Shaw played an Impromptu in F sharp minor, composed by Wolstenholme; Chopin's Impromptu in C sharp minor, and Thalberg's "Home, sweet home." A note on the programme stated that Mr. Wolstenholme was highly commended by Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley on taking his degree at Oxford, and received the warm congratulations of the Examiners on his excellent contrapuntal ability. Both these gentlemen were for many years students at the "Blind College for the Sons of Gentlemen" at Powley, near Worcester. Mr. Wolstenholme is now Organist of St. Paul's, Blackburn. They both took the Warrington Scholarship for Music at the Blind College.

GLOUCESTER.—The Choral Society's second Concert took place on the 19th ult., in the Shire Hall. The programme included Mendelssohn's Lobgesang. The band was complete and, supplemented by the large organ, admirably sustained the important instrumental portions of the work. The solos were sung by Madame Clare Wright and Mr. W. Nicholl, Miss L. Franklin Higgs assisting in the one duet where a second soprano is required. Mr. C. Lee Williams was the Conductor. The chorus sang throughout the evening with vigour and accuracy. Mr. James Capener filled the post of Organist, and also made an efficient and careful accompanist for the songs in the second part of the Concert. Dr. C. Hubert Parry's Ode, Blest pair of Sirens, opened the second part. A miscellaneous selection concluded the Concert.

HOLLINWOOD.—The Vocal Society gave the third Concert of the season in the Institute, on Monday evening, the 19th ult. The programme consisted of a miscellaneous selection and Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise. The chief vocalists were Miss Jackson, Miss Gee, Miss Hurst, Miss Bamford, Mrs. Whittaker, Mr. C. Blacow, Mr. Beswick, Mr. C. Mercer, and Mr. Waite. Pianoforte, Miss A. Dumville; harmonium, Mr. S. Whittaker; director, Mr. W. Dumville.

HUDDERSFIELD.—After the usual Christmas interval the announcement that Madame Minnie Hauk and her Concert party would appear on January 29 filled the large Town Hall with a "popular" audience, who were evidently well satisfied with the musical fare provided for the occasion. The gifted prima donna was in good voice, and displayed her flexible organ to advantage in morceaux eminently suited to her piquant and vivacious style. The Echo Song from Mignon and Bizet's "Habanera" proved extremely acceptable; both were of course encored, and in the latter instance the fair vocalist (whose talents are nothing if not versatile) sat down to the pianoforte and accompanied herself in "Way down upon the Suwanee River." Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Charles Banks, and Mr. Arthur Oswald were all successful in their respective selections, which were mostly of the popular order. Welcome variety was afforded to the programme by the instrumental performances of M. Tivadar Nachéz and Herr Schönberger. Mr. H. Lane Wilson was an admirable accompanist.—On the 13th ult. a novelty was offered to the patrons of the Subscription Concerts in the shape of a "Grand Welsh Night." A prominent feature of the evening's entertainment consisted in the performance, by five talented players, of various solos and concerted pieces for the harp. Mr. French Davis contributed two of the former, and the great skill and taste which he displayed were testified to by hearty applause. The concerted numbers were also well rendered and duly appreciated.—The Arvonian Male Voice Choir, of fifty selected voices, gave, under the intelligent Conductorship of Dr. Roland Rogers (Organist of Bangor Cathedral), a selection of glees and part-songs in a style which left little to be desired. Sullivan's "The long day closes" and Hatton's popular "When evening's twilight" were noticeable for delicacy and refined phrasing, and Dr. J. C. Bridge's clever "Greek war song" took the audience by storm, by reason of the spirit and dash infused into the performance. Mr. Theodore Lawson, a pupil of Dr. Joachim, gave three violin solos—viz., a Romance and Russian dance by Wieniawski, and Mackenzie's charming "Benedictus," and proved himself to be possessed of considerable executive ability and a sweet tone. Dr. Rogers contributed two solos on the organ, Mendelssohn's "Military Band" Overture and the March from Tannhäuser, and also joined Mr. Lawson in a performance of Schumann's "Fantasiestücke."—The Huddersfield Choral Society proposes giving three Concerts during the season 1886-90. The works to be performed are Handel's Acis and Galatea, Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise, The Messiah, and Sullivan's Martyr of Antioch.

ILFORD.—The Vocal Union gave the second Concert of its fourth season in the Reading Room, on the 14th ult. The programme included Sir Arthur Sullivan's Festival Te Deum, J. Barnby's Rehearsal, and Beethoven's "Prometheus" Overture. The band practising in connection with the Vocal Union, augmented for the occasion, played the accompaniments, and also gave a very satisfactory performance of the Overture. The soloists were Miss Kate Nicholls, Mr. W. H. Pocklington, and Mr. Stanley Smith. The chorus singing was remarkably good. Mr. A. Storr conducted as usual.

KETERING.—A Choral Concert was given by the Kettering Choral Society, on the 18th ult., in the Victoria Hall. Stanford's Ballad of The Revenge was the chief piece of the evening. The chorus, which numbered about 100 strong, sang with great effect. Miss Clara Field sang the solos in "Hear my prayer," and Mr. H. Bailey, a native of Kettering, was very much applauded for his efforts. Miss M. F. Howard, an excellent pianist, played Beethoven's No. 5 Concerto, entirely from memory, in capital style, and was well accompanied by the band, which was conducted by Mr. H. G. Gotch. Mr. Addison Adcock played some violoncello solos and secured a hearty reception. Mr. C. Bourne's selections for the euphonium were encored. Miss Hulse accompanied several of the songs with her usual ability. The Conductor, Mr. H. G. Gotch, performed his duties well.

KINGTON, HEREFORDSHIRE.—The Musical Society gave their first Concert in the Town Hall, on Monday, the 4th ult. The first part of the programme consisted of Sterndale Bennett's Woman of Samaria, Mr. Charlesworth, Conductor. The principal vocalists were Madame Minnie Gwynne and Mrs. Charlesworth, Messrs. G. Banks and Alfred Lord, of Hereford Cathedral. The orchestra consisted of the leading members of the Hereford Orchestral Society, under the leadership of Mr. Watkis. The second part consisted of a miscellaneous selection of vocal and instrumental solos, with two Overtures by the band, which were much appreciated.

LEEDS.—The Town Hall Organ Recitals were resumed on Saturday evening, the 9th ult. A selection from the Oratorio Judith, by Dr. C. Hubert Parry, was given. Dr. Spark took every possible pains in performing the extracts, which consisted of (1) Instrumental Introduction and part of Chorus "Hail, Moloch, hail"; (2) the dialogue Duet, by the children, "O mother, tell us once again the story of our people"; and (3) Recitative (Judith) "Command the gates of the city to be opened," and Chorus "The God of our fathers give thee favour." Handel's Overture to Samson, Beethoven's "Adelaide," a fine new organ piece by Sir Frederick Ouseley, and the Duet from Le Prophète were also played.

LINCOLN.—Mr. Barraclough's forty-eighth Concert took place in the Corn Exchange, on the 1st ult. Mesdames Minnie Hauk, Belle Cole, Messrs. C. Banks, Oswald, Tivadar Nachéz (violin), and Schönberger (pianoforte), with Mr. Lane Wilson as accompanist, were the performers. A melancholy interest is attached to this Concert, as it was the last given under the enterprising management of Mr. Barraclough, who was found dead eight days after on his way home from Owmby to Lincoln.

LLANELLY.—On Tuesday evening, January 29, a successful performance of Samson was given at Tabernacle Chapel, by a choir under the leadership of Mr. Charles Davies. The soloists were Miss Julia Jones, Miss H. M. Jones, Mr. Lloyd James (of Birmingham), and Mr. Egbert Roberts (London). Mr. Luther Owen presided at the harmonium, and the orchestra was led by Mr. W. Evans (Swansea).

LLANGENNECH.—The Salem Chapel Choir, led by Mr. J. Glynn Thomas, gave an excellent performance of St. Paul on the 2nd ult. The chief singers were Misses L. Aubrey and M. J. Protheroe, Madame Martha Harries, Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys, and Mr. Lucas Williams. Accompanists, Mrs. Glyn Thomas and Miss Lizzie Thomas. Leader of the band, Mr. W. F. Hulley, Swansea.

MARKET RASEN.—The eighth annual Concert of the Choral Society took place on the 13th ult., when Acis and Galatea was performed. The solos were taken by Miss Vinnie Beaumont, Mr. G. H. Gregory, and Mr. Walby, all of whom were well received. In the second part "Cera una volta" was brilliantly sung by Miss Beaumont. Mr. Helmsley conducted, and Mr. Ridgway led the band. The several choruses were capably sung by the members of the Society.

MERTHYR.—The question, Where will the National Eisteddfod be held in 1891? is exercising the minds of many persons in Wales—especially in the south. This year the national gathering takes place at Brecon. Two years afterwards it should again be fixed in the south. At the present moment, Swansea and Pontypridd, as well as Merthyr and Dowlais, are in competition, so to say. The honour is desired by each place. It is rumoured that Merthyr is going to try for the Eisteddfod, and as an initial step in the matter the Merthyr Chamber of Trade resolved the other day to send a deputation to the Dowlais Chamber with a view of obtaining their co-operation, so that an amalgamation of local interests should be formed.

MONTROSE.—On Tuesday evening, the 5th ult., the Annual Concert of the Harmonic Union was given in the Assembly Hall. The principal pieces performed by the chorus (which numbered about fifty voices) were Hatton's "Song to Pan," Pinsuti's "Moonlight and Music," Berger's "Oh night, lovely night," Mackenzie's "Hark, 'tis the horn of the hunter," Kreutzer's "Now the curfew," Miss Zimmermann's "Good morning," &c. Miss Brown sang Dempster's "A doubting heart"; the Messrs. Low the duet, "All's well," and Wallace's "Yes, let me like a soldier fall," and Marks' "Sailing." Mr. C. B. Taylor, the Conductor, sang "The Bugler," by Pinsuti, and Mr. Nicol gave "Oh, Alister Macalister." Miss Taylor accompanied throughout.

NORTH BERWICK, N.B.—The North Berwick Musical Society, under the Conductorship of Mr. W. Prendergast, the Episcopal Church Organist, gave its first Concert of the season on Thursday, January 31. The choral numbers included a Glee by the Conductor.

PARKSTONE.—The Memorial Organ, presented to the church by the Rev. S. E. Pontifex in memory of his mother, the late Mrs. Edmund Pontifex, was opened after a Dedication Service on the afternoon of the 7th ult. A Recital was subsequently given by Mr. Whitehead Smith, Organist of Wimborne Minster, and Mr. F. W. Bussey, Organist of the Church. The programme included pieces by Mendelssohn, Handel, L. Wely, Haydn, and Bach. The organ was that which Messrs. Bryceson Brothers (Limited) put up and exhibited in the music department of the Inventions Exhibition at South Kensington in 1885, where it won the gold medal for the development of electricity in the construction of organs, modified to suit the requirements of the church.

PENARTH.—The opening of the organ at the Windsor Road Congregational Church, on the 12th ult., by Mr. S. G. Fifoot, was the occasion of an excellent musical performance. The choir of Charles Street Congregational Church, Cardiff, rendered excellent assistance, and the soloists were Miss Astle, Miss Emily Lewis, Miss Katie Smith, and others.

PENZANCE.—A Concert was given at St. John's Hall on January 30, under the superintendence of Colonel Mapleson. Though the programme consisted mainly of Italian selections, the encores—and there were many—were all English popular songs. On the following evening the same party repeated the Concert at Truro. The soloists were Signor Sindona, Signor Ciampi, Madame Decca, Madame Louise Dotti, and M. Auguste van Biene. Mr. Hillier, acted as Conductor. The same performers gave Concerts at Falmouth and Plymouth, which were musically, if not financially, very successful.—On the 13th ult., at the Bible Christian School Room, Bradbury's Cantata Esther was performed. The principal soloists were the Misses Maddern, Read, Mathews, Grey, Wills, Messrs. J. Trebilcock, F. Smith, J. Truscott, and G. Corin. Mr. H. N. White performed the duty of Conductor in an efficient manner, and Mr. Bank presided at the pianoforte.

PLYMOUTH.—A new organ has been placed in the Church of St. Matthias, North Hill. It has been erected by Messrs. Hele and Co., of Plymouth, and was dedicated and used for the first time at a special service on the 7th ult. The cost of the organ has been about £800, and it was opened by Mr. D. J. Wood, Mus. Bac., Organist of Exeter Cathedral. In the afternoon there was a short service, with hymns, when Mr. Wood gave a Recital of selections from the works of Mendelssohn, J. L. Hopkins, Liszt, Beethoven, Handel, and Guilman.

PORTSMOUTH.—The Borough of Portsmouth Philharmonic Society gave their fifteenth Invitation Concert in the Victoria Hall, on the 5th ult., on which occasion Handel's Messiah was performed, with Madame Eleanor Farnol, Miss Meredyth Elliott, Mr. Bernard Lane, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint as principal vocalists. There was a full orchestra, led by Mr. Rawlingston. The Organist was Mr. Frank H. Simms, and the Conductor was Mr. J. W. D. Pillow. The performance was in every respect most successful.

PRESCOT.—On Monday evening, the 4th ult., Mr. Kempton, the Organist of the Parish Church, gave his first Concert in the Assembly Room. He was assisted by Mr. Edward Grime, whose vocalisation was excellently shown in the song "The mighty deep" (Jude), in which he was accompanied by the composer. Mr. W. H. Jude played Rubinstein's Fantasia on the pianoforte, gave good help in the accompaniments, and delighted the audience with his songs.

PRESTON.—Mr. J. Stubbs, the newly appointed Organist and Choir-master of St. James's Church, gave an Organ Recital on Sunday, the 3rd ult., after evening service. The programme consisted of Marche Romane (Gounod), Toccata et Fuga, in D minor (Bach), Nocturne in B flat (Field), Concertstück (Spark), and "Hallelujah" Chorus (Handel).

RUSHDEN.—On Thursday evening, the 7th ult., Mr. J. E. Smith gave his fourteenth annual Concert in the New Hall. The principals were Miss Clara Dowle, Miss Florence Tirrell, Miss Eliza Thomas, Mr. George Banks, Miss Adela Duckham (solo violinist), Mr. Julian Egerton (solo clarinet), Mr. Smith (accompanist). Miss Adela Duckham exhibited good qualities in her violin solos, and Mr. Julian Egerton's clarinet playing was one of the most enjoyable features of the Concert.

ST. GERMANS.—The Church Choir performed Mr. R. Forsey Brion's Cantata Marathon, at the Town Hall, on the 14th ult. The soloists were Miss E. S. Geake, Messrs. S. W. Williams and J. O. Garland. Mr. F. S. Hawke was the Conductor. The second part of the programme was of a miscellaneous nature, the solo parts being sustained by Misses Porter, Mitchell, Scantlebury, Blanche Lampard, E. S. and K. Geake, G. Pick, Messrs. G. Dawe, J. Pearce, J. Gourd, and J. Garland. Mr. John Hele accompanied several of the songs and rendered valuable assistance at the organ during the Cantata.

ST. JUST.—On January 31 the members of the Choral Society gave Stainer's Cantata The Daughter of Jairs, Mr. H. J. B. Walters, Organist of the Parish Church, acting as Conductor. The soloists were Miss A. H. Thomas, Mr. R. S. Symons, and Mr. J. Trebilcock. The instrumental parts were played by a small band who, with the chorus, numbered about fifty performers. Mr. Walters presided at the harmonium and Miss Boyens at the pianoforte. The second part of the programme consisted of selections by the band, and part-songs, &c., by members of the Society.

SANDOWN, I.W.—Mr. S. J. C. Cecil, with his choir and orchestral band, gave a Concert in the Town Hall, on the 12th ult. Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise, with a miscellaneous selection of a varied character, formed the programme. Some professional talent was secured, and Miss Marie Ridgway, Mrs. Wooldridge, Mrs. Munns, and Mr. Hayden were the chief soloists.

SHERBORNE.—The Philharmonic Society gave its first Concert on Thursday, the 14th ult., in the Assembly Room, Digby Hotel. Dr. Bridge's Callirhoe, and a miscellaneous selection was performed by Mrs. Glover-Eaton, Mrs. Baxter, Mrs. Gwyther, Miss Holme, Mr. and Mrs. Regan, Mr. Morgan, and the Choir. Mr. Louis N. Parker was the Conductor.

SOUTHAMPTON.—An Evening Concert, in aid of the Widows and Orphans' Fund of the London and South-Western Railway, was given in the Hartley Hall on the 14th ult. The programme was miscellaneous, and was supported by the following performers: Miss May Hallam, Miss Meredith Elliott, Mr. T. W. Page, Mr. D. Price, Mr. Charles Fletcher (solo violin), Madame Fletcher and Mr. G. E. Ivimey (accompanists). The band of the Royal Marine Light Infantry, under the conductorship of Band-Sergeant D. Batson, performed a selection of pieces during the evening.

STOKE-UPON-TRENT.—At the final meeting of the guarantors and others connected with the recent Musical Festival in North Staffordshire, held at Stoke-upon-Trent on the 11th ult., it was announced that after paying all expenses a balance of £200 was left in hand. It was agreed that £134 10s. of this sum should be divided among the medical charities of the district, and that the balance should be banked as a reserve fund. The meeting was unanimous in agreement that festivals should be held in the district triennially, but that in order to avoid clashing with the Birmingham and Wolverhampton meetings, it was decided that the next festival should take place in the autumn of 1890. If the guarantee fund then to be raised warrants the step, a two days' festival will be arranged for. It is reported that a new work from the pen of Dr. Swinnerton Heap will be produced.

STONEHAVEN.—The Choral Union gave an interesting Concert in the Town Hall on Thursday, the 14th ult., including Macfarren's May Day, with Part-songs by Bishop, Smart, and Sullivan, and a miscellaneous selection. The vocalists were Misses Sangster and Bowie of Glasgow, and Mr. H. T. Jewson of Aberdeen. Mr. H. C. Tonking was the violinist, and gave a Romance by Mr. W. H. Lanyon, Organist of the East Parish Church, Aberdeen, the latter playing Gottschalk's "Tremolo" for his pianoforte solo. The chorus was assisted by an efficient band from the Aberdeen Choral Union orchestra, ably conducted by Mr. James Wood.

SUNDERLAND.—A capital performance of Sir Arthur Sullivan's Golden Legend was given in the Victoria Hall, on January 29, by the Philharmonic Society, under the direction of Mr. N. Kilburn, Mus. Bac. The soloists were Mrs. Hutchinson, Miss Hope Glenn, Mr. Henry Piercy, and Mr. Watkin Mills, whilst the band and chorus numbered 250, with Mr. W. Lax as leader and Miss Pearson as Organist. Mr. Kilburn was fortunate in having a capital band, and as the choruses were exceedingly well rendered no point of any importance was overlooked. It is creditable, therefore, to all concerned that the work was so admirably rendered. The soloists discharged their duties in a most satisfactory manner.

TAVISTOCK.—On the 14th ult. the Choral Society gave Handel's Alexander's Feast, at the Town Hall. The principal vocalists were Miss Lavinia Lampen, the Rev. N. M. Morgan-Brown, and the Rev. R. S. K. Blucke. The instrumentalists included Mr. John Pardey (Plymouth), Miss E. Sims, and Mr. A. W. Russe. The second part of the programme consisted of vocal and instrumental selections.

THURSO, N.B.—On Thursday evening, the 14th ult., the Musical Association, under the leadership of Mr. Sydney Townshend, gave a very successful rendering of Mr. Frederic Cowen's beautiful Cantata, The Rose Maiden, in the Town Hall. The solos were sung by Mrs. Torrance, Misses Paterson and Sutherland, Messrs. Kinnear, Bruce, and Duthie, all of whom sustained their respective parts most ably. The choir, thirty in number, sang well, especially in the Chorus "Tis thy wedding morning." Miss Lippe accompanied on the pianoforte with good taste.

TRURO.—On Tuesday, the 12th ult., the Philharmonic Society gave a Concert, consisting chiefly of selections from Gounod's Faust, in the Concert Hall. The principal soloists were Miss Julia Jones (London), Mr. T. Kempton (London), and Mr. George Heard (Truro). Mr. Sinclair was the Conductor, and Mr. Nicholson and Mrs. Williams presided at the organ and pianoforte respectively.

YEovil.—A Concert of Sacred Music was given in the Congregational Church, on Tuesday evening, the 12th ult., on the occasion of the re-opening of the organ, which has been re-built and enlarged by Messrs. Norman Brothers and Beard, of Norwich. Mr. Frank Clements conducted the choir, which consisted of sixty voices, the solos being entrusted to Mr. F. Dawkes, of Wells Cathedral. Mr. T. J. Dudeney, Organist of St. John's, Taunton, presided at the organ.

YORK.—On the 4th ult. Herr Heinrich Dittmar, with the co-operation of Miss Nelson and Mr. E. W. Naylor, gave a Concert in the Grand Saloon of the Exhibition. Herr Dittmar himself was the most prominent performer, his manipulation of the violin attesting a mastery of that instrument and an uncommon command of its resources.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. J. Edmund Jaques, Organist and Choirmaster to Knox Church, St. Thomas, Ontario, Canada.—Mr. F. L. Barton, Organist and Choirmaster to St. John's Church, Windermere.—Mr. Wilfrid Davies, A.C.O., to West Hackney Parish Church.—Mr. F. THE PSALMS

BIBLE VERSION

BY THE

REV. DR. TROUTBECK.

CLOTH, ONE SHILLING.

The principles on which the pointing has been done are mainly those of the Cathedral Psalter, of which Dr. Troutbeck was Co-Editor, a Psalter which has now successfully endured the test of long experience. The book is not, of course, divided into daily portions like the Prayer Book Psalter, as it is intended for the use of those Christian bodies in which the Psalms are not sung throughout a monthly course, but it can easily be so divided by those who use it.

"It is not often that we have derived so much genuine pleasure from the perusal of a new work as was the case with that at present before us."—Newcastle Journal."It is not often that an audience is roused to the pitch of enthusiasm that greeted the production of Mr. Hamish MacCunn's "Bonnie Kilmeny," given last night with the full orchestral setting which was requisite for the full development of its full beauty. If Mr. MacCunn had written nothing else this work would stamp its author as a master whose name will be classed with those musicians whose creations have formed epochs in the past."—Edinburgh Evening News, January 22.

Words by EDWARD OXENFORD

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL

(Composer of the "Holy City," "Ruth," &c.)

"There are in this series of duets the sweetest things of the kind we have ever met with. No. 4, 'April,' and No. 5, 'May,' are our special favourites, the one being delightfully playful, the other tenderly melodious. Things to be treasured in households where sisters or friends delight in joining voices. The pianoforte accompaniments are well written, and such as an ordinary pianist may successfully undertake."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

AN HISTORICAL AND DRAMATIC CANTATA

FREDERICK ENOCH

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"The music throughout is of a very high order, and full of beauty and interest, so much so that it is hardly possible to single out any numbers for special praise. The various movements are widely contrasted in style, in some considerable dramatic power being manifest, but all overflow with melody, and there is a happy absence of the restlessness of tonality which disfigures so many modern works. The vocal parts, whether for soli or chorus, are written within the range of average vocalists, and are therefore grateful alike to the singers and hearers. The Cantata is a credit to English art, . . . one of the most interesting works yet given by the Anerley Society."—Crystal Palace Reporter.

"In 'Joan of Arc,' particularly in the latter part, there are some exquisite passages—some charming descriptive pieces. The lovely 'Hark! thy spirit voices call,' carried one away in the spirit into veritable realms of dreamland, and the chorus 'Fret not thyself to-day' is picturesquely beautiful, graceful, and effective."—Stratford-upon-Avon Herald.

"Few cantatas are as rich in chaste melodies, charming choruses, and exquisite orchestration as Alfred R. Gaul's 'Joan of Arc,' performed for the first time in Plymouth by the Vocal Association in the Guildhall last evening."—The Western News, December 6, 1888.

"Proved an unqualified success, . . . the bulk of the Cantata is allotted to the chorus. In fact, the choir of this Association has seldom had such a good opportunity for giving their sterling worth a good display."—The Western Daily Mercury, December 6, 1888.

"Drew forth enthusiastic plaudits. . . . Of the Cantata, as interpreted last evening (in the Town Hall, Leeds, with a band and chorus of 250 performers), it is impossible to speak in terms of anything but praise. Solos and choruses alike are full of melody, while the orchestration is descriptive to a degree. For each of the principal vocalists there is one song that singles itself out, and each received an encore."—Leeds Mercury, November 7, 1888.

"The theme is one of the most romantic in the pages of history. In the earlier and poetic passages there is something of the charm of Sir Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen.' The last chorus is set to music which would be not unworthy of the great masters."—Herts and Cambridge Reporter.

"An advance on the earlier work, 'The Holy City.' . . . The choruses are written with much knowledge of effect, and an 'Ave Maria' and the final chorus of the 'Spirit Voices' may be named as really charming."—Athenæum.

"Bound to be widely taken up, doubtless to attain which end the composer has employed but three soloists, and has given a more than usually large degree of importance to the choral work. . . . The 'Ave Maria' is singularly beautiful."—London Figaro.

"Obviously written with a special view to the requirements of choral societies, and likely to become highly popular."—Daily News.

"Calculated to delight performers and listeners, being full of melody and taking effects."—Referee.

"Must enhance the high reputation of its composer."—Liverpool Courier.

"The inspiration of a highly-refined musician. . . . The Cantata is even a more masterly and beautiful work than 'The Holy City.'"—Huddersfield Examiner.

"No more charming Cantata than 'Joan of Arc' could have been chosen. It abounds in delicious music. There is not a tedious note in it."—Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Chronicle.

"Gives the listener a vivid and realistic impression, its attractiveness being continuous instead of spasmodic."—Bradford Observer.

"It would not be surprising if it attained to even the almost phenomenal popularity of 'The Holy City'; contains a similar wealth of melody and effective part-writing."—Birmingham Daily Times.

"Reading the score convinces us that it is our townsman's greatest production. . . . Could have been originated by none but a born melodist."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"A distinct advance upon Mr. Gaul's previous work in cantata form. . . . A constant flow of exquisite melodies and effective choral writing."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"A thoroughly melodious work, and should find favour with choral societies. It is not difficult to sing, and contains sufficient variety to keep up the interest to the end."—Manchester Guardian.

AN ORATORIO, COMPOSED BY

GEO. SHINN, MUS. BAC., CANTAB.

(SUITABLE FOR CONCERT ROOM OR CHURCH.)

Price 2s. Cloth, 3s. 6d.; Sol-fa, 1s.

During the few months the Work has been published it has been taken up at the following places: St. Margaret's, Westminster (Canon Farrar's); Christ Church, Lambeth (Rev. Newman Hall's); St. Luke's, Bermondsey; East Dulwich; Peckham; Camberwell (two performances); Islington; Walworth (three performances); Erixton; Streatham (two performances); Southwark; Liverpool; Brighton; Leeds; Edinburgh; Glasgow; Bristol; Sheffield; Chelmsford; Chesterfield; Hastings; Luton; Whitby; Bilston; Gainsborough; Workop; Bromley; Hinckley; Coleford; Bradley; Hatton; Maldon; Portsmouth.

"Mr. Shinn is well known as the author of several Cantatas and other compositions, all of which are written in a style at once musicianly and popular. 'The Captives of Babylon' may be highly commended as an interesting and valuable addition to our shorter Oratorios and Cantatas. The work contains several solos of much beauty; also duets, quartets, and choruses in great variety."—Sunday School Chronicle.

"Mr. Shinn is well known as the writer of many popular pieces for choral societies; but this is certainly the best thing he has produced."—Nonconformist Musical Journal.

"In our judgment no better work of the kind has yet been published. It is brimful of pretty melodies, and the harmonic effects show the skill of a painstaking and talented musician."—Free Methodist.

"It is cleverly written, and in an attractive style. The music is of a varied and pleasing character, so that it is likely to become very popular."—The Portsmouth Evening Mail.

"Mr. Shinn is well known, and deservedly so, for his musical talent. Continuity of design and freshness of conception are apparent throughout the work. It contains many effective solos and choruses, and the music is not difficult. There is no doubt that the Oratorio will become very popular."—South London Press.

"Mr. Shinn has produced a work which is one of the most acceptable of the minor Oratorios."—Bristol Mercury.

EXTRACT FROM THE PREFACE.

THE following collection of "Words of Anthems" is mainly founded on that issued some years ago under the joint Editorship of the Rev. W. Rayson, M.A., Sir John Stainer, M.A., Mus. Doc., and the Rev. J. Troutbeck, D.D.

Not only, however, has it been made more comprehensive, but it has been almost entirely re-arranged on a plan commending itself to many distinguished and experienced church musicians, from whom also many valuable hints and much kind help have been received.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The Volume commends itself for use in Cathedrals and Churches where Anthems are commonly sung; but it is also a book for the Musical Library, whose studious owner may depend upon getting a good deal of information from it, assisted by a remarkably complete set of Indexes.

MORNING POST.

It is the most comprehensive book of the kind ever issued, it is also the best arranged. It is easy of reference, and is set forth on an intelligent and intelligible plan. It has a copious series of Indices, so that it presents the means within itself of a right and ready use.

JOHN BULL.

ECCLESIASTICAL GAZETTE.

This volume will be found a great assistance to precentors and organists whose task of making out lists of Anthems usually demands much thought and time. The Index of "Anthems suitable for certain days or seasons" is very exhaustive and of great value. There is a list of composers' names, with short biographical notices. A table of Anthems with Latin words is given, as also one for men's voices only. The volume includes about 1,600 Anthems, together with some 180 more taken from 47 Oratorios and Cantatas, beside the complete words of 42 Oratorios and Cantatas, which makes the total considerably over 2,000. Much credit is due for the many improvements made on former editions to the compiler, Mr. Henry King, of St. Paul's Cathedral.

For orders of 100 copies and upwards of this Book, Messrs. Novello will, if desired, print a special Title Page.

MUSICAL TERMS

EDITED BY

JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus. Doc.,

Magd. Coll., Oxford,

AND

W. A. BARRETT, MUS. BAC.,

St. Mary's Hall, Oxford.

PREFACE.

THE call for a third edition of the DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS has given the Editors an opportunity of correcting several little inaccuracies which had crept into the earlier issues. They cannot but feel gratified at the manner in which it has been received by musicians and the public generally, and they venture to hope that students will always find it a useful storehouse of facts associated with the art, science, and archæology of music.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Even as the work stood before, it met with favour as by a long way the most valuable of its kind available to the English reader. The definitions are clear, and the articles confine themselves to statements of facts, waste no words, and go straight to the mark. Musical amateurs as well as students should have this book by them; it is capable of telling them what they want to know.

MORNING POST.

The Editors may be heartily congratulated upon the success of their labours, and upon the popularity of their work. Notwithstanding the appearance of other books of like character, the Dictionary holds its own for usefulness and value. There is no attempt to conceal the want of knowledge under the mass of verbiage. The subjects are treated in a terse, straightforward, plain, and accurate manner, with a manliness of style which at once convinces the reader of the capacities of the writers. There is, however, a grace and elegance in the English, relieved where possible by touches of humour, which makes the Dictionary fascinating reading, apart from its authoritative statements.

THE WORLD.

The same great qualities must be acknowledged in a work that ranks very high indeed, a work called "A Dictionary of Musical Terms," edited by Dr. Stainer and Barrett, M.B., with a knowledge, a patience, a completeness which render it a valuable book of reference. . . . This book contains so many interesting paragraphs, that I was arrested against my will and prevented from flying through the pages as usual. One quality beside the extreme clearness of the type is the nearly total absence of printing faults.

PASSION SERVICE

FOR THE SEASON OF

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL,

Composer of the "HOLY CITY," "RUTH," &c.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed, the work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul have to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively: 'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

OF THE TEMPLE CHOIR, LONDON.

Sung in Westminster Abbey; the Temple Church; St. Stephen's, Westbourne Park; Christ Church, Down Street, Piccadilly, W.; also in several Provincial Cathedrals and Collegiate Choirs.

The Musical Review, May 30, 1885, says: "Mr. Haydn Grover has written a good Service, and has succeeded in his evident intention to give due effect to the varying expression of the words. The Gloria to the Magnificat is in unison with free organ accompaniment, the melody being bold and coming in with fine effect after the 'verse' preceding. Mr. Grover has evidently profited by the traditions of the Temple Church, and has given us an Evening Service of sterling merit."

"The work, like the 'Holy City,' is full of beautiful orchestral passages, while the vocal score abounds with charming numbers."—Bucks Herald.

"Bright, tuneful, fresh, and musicianly—this work will be a great favourite, and will add to Mr. Gaul's reputation."—Birmingham Weekly Dart.

"'Ruth' has been set to music by several composers; none, however, has become so worthily popular as the Cantata under notice. . . . It contains some charming music, and is highly characteristic of the story it so vividly illustrates."—South Wales Express.

MUSICAL NOTES

OF

IMPORTANT MUSICAL EVENTS

BY

HERMANN KLEIN.

CLOTH GILT, TWO SHILLINGS.

DAILY NEWS.

Various apparently slight, though really important, alterations have this year been made, in order to increase the utility of a work which, so far as England is concerned, is of its sort unique. The index, which, in a work of reference, is by no means the least prominent feature, has, for example, been considerably enlarged and amplified, so that even by itself it affords a bird's-eye view of all the important events that have happened in the London world of music during the past year. An ingenious system of cross-reference is likewise now adopted, novelties and special revivals are placed under separate heads, operatic and other débuts are duly noted, an obituary is added, and the various orchestral, chamber, choral, and other concerts, operatic performances, and festivals, are grouped under their various titles, the works produced being also referred to under the names of the several composers.

THE GLOBE.

Mr. Hermann Klein's invaluable Manual is published this year by Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co., who send it forth in a neat and substantial binding. The "Notes" themselves are as accurate in statement, sound in judgment, and excellent in arrangement as they have always been, while the addition of a full index to the events narrated is a very considerable gain. This, the third issue of the Annual, will be welcomed by all who desire to preserve a readable as well as a useful record of the music of 1888.

SUNDAY TIMES.

Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co. are now the publishers, and they have issued this elegant little volume in a manner worthy of its now recognised importance as a valuable contribution to the literature of music. In a fluent, bright, and eminently readable style, Mr. Klein reviews month by month all the noteworthy musical events of the past year. No student of musical history should fail to add it to his library. Mr. Klein may be commended for his simple but copious index, on turning to which the reader may at once see the year's work of any one composer, what noteworthy concerts have taken place, which towns have enjoyed the distinction of musical festivals, and what notable musicians died during 1888. Nothing, indeed, of musical importance is missed in this usefully compiled and brightly-written book.

OBSERVER.

A full and faithful account of all the musical events of the past year, and it will not only be serviceable to professional musicians as an historical record, but is full of interest for amateurs.

BENEDICTUS

With Pianoforte Accompaniment

COMPOSED BY

A. C. MACKENZIE.

(OP. 37.)

Full Score, 5s.; Orchestral Parts, 3s. 6d.;
Also, as originally written for Violin Solo with Pianoforte
Accompaniment, 1s. 6d.

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.

As an exceptional case, this movement absolutely gains by the change to which it has been subjected, the impassioned religious melody acquiring force by being played in chorus, and added beauty by a rich accompaniment of strings, horns, and wood-wind. The audience at once pronounced the piece a success, and the composer bowed his thanks for sustained applause from his place in the gallery.

STANDARD.

Dr. Mackenzie's "Benedictus" was originally written for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment. Since then the author has appreciated the capabilities of the music in an orchestral sense, and after several attempts—this composer, like Mendelssohn, never being satisfied at the offset—has written his score for a small orchestra. . . . So charming did this piece prove that the applause was unanimous, and was maintained until the composer had appeared at the end gallery and bowed his acknowledgment.

DAILY NEWS.

The remaining novelty was a brief but charming "Benedictus," originally written by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, as one of a set of violin pieces which Lady Hallé last summer introduced to London. The pianoforte accompaniment has, however, now been scored for wind orchestra by the composer, and the solo is given to all the violins of the orchestra.

MORNING POST.

There are beautiful harmonies accompanying the phases of melody, and the whole piece, which is replete with dignity and distinguished by originality, forms a most grateful addition to orchestral répertoires.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The clever musician has since scored it for a small orchestra, assigning the violin solo to the whole of the violins, and providing work for the other strings, flutes, clarinets, bassoons, and horns, in which form it is likely to obtain as much popularity on the platform as the first setting in the salon. It is a beautiful, quietly flowing melody, with such an elegant accompaniment as only a composer of genuine taste and sympathetic nature, having a perfect knowledge of the means of the instruments he introduces, could place upon paper.

THE OBSERVER.

The two leading themes are in themselves beautiful, and their scenic beauty is enhanced by exquisite orchestration, in which the wind instruments above-named, in conjunction with the violas, violoncellos, and double-basses, are happily employed. . . . This "Benedictus" is likely to become popular throughout the musical world.

THE GLOBE.

Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's new "Benedictus" for violins and orchestra (first public performance) is short and comparatively simple, but will add to his fame. . . . The "Benedictus" is a polished gem.

SUNDAY TIMES.

Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's new "Benedictus for Orchestra," a transcription of one of his "Six Pieces for Violin and Piano," Op. 37, is a gem of melody encased in a beautiful instrumental setting.

THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL

A DRAMATIC CANTATA

ARRANGED AND ADAPTED IN SCENES FROM SIR WALTER SCOTT'S POEM BY

JAMES MACCUNN

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

HAMISH MACCUNN.

PRICE, IN PAPER COVER, 2s. 6d.; PAPER BOARDS, 3s.; SCARLET CLOTH, 4s.

THE TIMES.

"The Lay of the Last Minstrel" fully confirms the impression conveyed in the young composer's previous works of vigour, originality, and power of vivid, picturesque instrumentation. . . . At the conclusion of the cantata the young composer was heartily applauded, and appeared upon the platform to receive well-merited congratulations.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

In the respects just pointed out Mr. MacCunn's new cantata is youthful music, fresh, free, independent, and what it is because it would be so, not because certain exterior principles and theories would so have it. . . . It is in the dramatic situations, moreover, that Mr. MacCunn exhibits his instinctive perception of the treatment best befitting his theme. A careful examination of the cantata demonstrates that in this respect he is very rarely at fault. . . . We cannot ignore the fact that the composer goes straight to the root of the matter, and places his music in accord with the spirit of the text it illustrates. His pictorial power and truth are, in this respect, remarkable.

STANDARD.

It seems to have come from the composer's heart, even more than from his brain, and a more spontaneous, unlaboured work has not appeared for a lengthy period. Thus, it appeals at once to all listeners, and we do not have to stay and consider what it is the composer is endeavouring to express. . . . The choruses descriptive of the Knights and the Borderers are full of surging energy, rapid six-eight and twelve-eight measures being principally employed; and the orchestration in these numbers is rich and sonorous without being unduly noisy. . . . If he continues as he has begun, Mr. MacCunn cannot fail to attain world-wide fame and honour.

DAILY NEWS.

"The Lay of the Last Minstrel" is not only by far the most important work which Mr. MacCunn has down to date given us, but that as the seventh published effort of so youthful a composer it is one of the most remarkable examples that contemporary British music can afford of the early development of natural genius in a branch of the arts in which precocity is by no means rare.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Throughout he displays his mastery of instrumental effect, both as an adjunct to the voices and as forming a distinctive background to the musical picture. The orchestration is, in fact, remarkably graphic and bold, without violating canons that until recent years have been universally respected. The choruses, too, are in capital keeping with the theme, being sturdy in tone and impetuous in style. . . . Taken as a whole, "The Lay of the last Minstrel," whilst the most important of Mr. MacCunn's works hitherto submitted, may certainly be considered his best in the artistic sense. It is attractive both to hearers and to executants, and its future popularity is scarcely to be doubted.

SUNDAY TIMES.

Mr. Hamish MacCunn once more makes manifest the marked peculiarities of style and powerful grasp of his subject that have characterised his previous works. . . . The orchestra, as a matter of course, plays a highly important part, and the masterly skill with which it is written for throughout again excites mingled admiration and wonder at the command of orchestral resource possessed by this young musician of one-and-twenty. In his vocal writing, despite some occasional awkward passages in the declamatory solos, he is equally happy, and the varieties of rhythm which he employs become the more remarkable when it is remembered that the metre of Scott's verse is the same almost throughout.

WEEKLY DISPATCH.

The reputation of Mr. Hamish MacCunn will be materially enhanced by his Glasgow cantata, "The Lay of the Last Minstrel." . . . Mr. Hamish MacCunn is intensely national in his style, but he has not availed himself at all of the rich stores of Scottish melody. His music is full of Scottish progressions and accents, but it is his own, and it appeals with irresistible force to all listeners by reason of its freshness and surging vigour. . . . Did space permit, I might justly enlarge upon this remarkable work, but it must suffice for the present to say that "The Lay of the Last Minstrel" made a profound impression upon yesterday's audience.

THE GLOBE.

The opening male voice chorus, "Nine-and-twenty knights of fame," is characteristically spirited; the choral recitative which follows is also highly dramatic, and even more so the choruses "The clattering hoofs," "The monk returned to his cell," "Our slogan," and "'Tis done! 'tis done! that fatal blow!" It is a special feature in most of the choruses that the voices are frequently silenced, to permit the introduction of brief orchestral interludes, appropriate to the sentiment of the moment, and many of these passages are remarkably expressive and beautiful. . . . The cantata, as a whole, is a very gratifying exhibition of British talent, and leads us to hope for still greater successes from the same source.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

Mr. Hamish MacCunn's cantata on the subject of "The Lay of the Last Minstrel" produced a most favourable impression when on Saturday afternoon it was performed at the Crystal Palace. . . . The work as a whole was thoroughly successful.

THE CRUCIFIXION

A MEDITATION

ON THE

Sacred Passion of the Holy Redeemer

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY THE

REV. W. J. SPARROW SIMPSON, M.A.

J. STAINER.

This Work is an attempt to supply the want long felt of an easy and short form of Passion Music suitable for use in ordinary parish churches. It is composed for two solo voices, a Tenor and a Bass, and for the church choir. At intervals hymns occur, in which the whole congregation can join. The performance will probably not extend over forty minutes in duration, thus giving an opportunity for a suitable "address" if thought advisable. No orchestra is required, the accompaniments being specially adapted for the organ only; much of the expense usually attending Passion Services will therefore be avoided. The book of the words, for distribution among the congregation, will contain the music of the Hymns; by this means it is hoped that the congregation will be induced to take part heartily in the service.

DECLAMATION AND MUSIC.

As was to be expected, the production of "The Dream of Jubal" gave rise to various opinions upon the union of recitation and music which it so signally illustrates. This was also to be desired, for whatsoever turns men's thoughts towards new or undeveloped forms of art is a cause of good, even if the process stop short at reflection. In the present case, at any rate, the idea of mêlo-drame (we use the French word to avoid confusion with the more general meaning of the English term melo-drama) has been presented to the public mind in a striking form, and the consequent discussion can hardly be unproductive of benefit. So far as some written opinions upon the matter go, we are sorry to say that the word "discussion" cannot be applied to them. The public have been told, in a lofty, off-hand fashion, which, to those with knowledge of circumstances, is infinitely amusing, that mêlo-drame has never succeeded yet, and certainly has not succeeded now. In the mind of the writers this pronouncement is no doubt looked upon as settling the question, further consideration of which would be a waste of time. We venture to think differently, and our present purpose is to set before the reader some facts upon the subject, which it is desirable he should know.

The invention of mêlo-drame—that is to say, a union of music and the speaking voice—has been claimed for Germany, but if dates may be trusted, it was a Frenchman who first carried the idea through an experimental stage. This Frenchman was no other than Jean Jacques Rousseau, in whom mêlo-drame may boast a distinguished source. At Lyons, in 1772, Rousseau produced a dramatic piece, entitled "Pygmalion," having, as an altogether novel feature, spoken dialogue, interspersed with music, which, we should add, was composed by Coignet, and not by the author of the words. "Pygmalion" proved a great success with the public, but the critics assailed it, and when the work appealed to the judgment of Paris in 1775, La Harpe and others protested that there were grave objections to this new-fangled union of music and speech. We may, perhaps, be allowed to congratulate the assailants of the "Dream of Jubal" on their character as legitimate descendants and representatives of the obstructives who flourished across the channel more than a century ago. This, however, by the way. There are no means of ascertaining whether Rousseau's experiment in the South of France was known in Germany soon enough to have influenced Brandes, who, in the following year, adapted Gerstenberg's Cantata "Ariadne" as a mêlo-drame, for the use of his wife who could act well, but was unable to sing. Nothing in the circumstances of the case makes it impossible for Brandes to have taken the hint from Rousseau, but the point is not of importance, and we pass it by. Brandes, having completed his adaptation, engaged Schweitzer to write the music; owing, however, to other duties, that composer was unable to finish the work before Brandes left Weimar, where he then resided, for Gotha. This was in 1775, the very year in which Rousseau's "Pygmalion" exercised the quidnuncs of the French capital. At Gotha, Brandes placed "Ariadne" in the hands of Georg Benda, who achieved his task to general satisfaction, and with Benda's music the mêlo-drame was produced. We may pause here to correct a mistake frequently made by writers upon this subject, who credit Benda with the invention of mêlo-drame. It is clear that he has no right to the honour. Putting Rousseau aside altogether, there remains Brandes, under whose direction Benda worked, and to whom, as far as Germany is concerned, belongs the credit of originating the new musico-dramatic form.

"Ariadne" turned out to be an immense success. Otto Jahn speaks of the sensation it made as "extraordinary," and, according to Felix Clément, the work was speedily brought out at Leipzig, and, in 1781, played in Paris to a French version of the text by Dubois. Of course so great a "hit" brought up other dramatists eager to give it successors. Among them was Gotter, who wrote a mêlo-drame entitled "Medea" for Mrs. Brandes' rival, Mrs. Seyler, Benda again supplying music. In this also the public delighted. On the other hand, the critics held aloof, suspicious and grumbling. They objected to the principle, and their utterances may still be read by those who care to soil clean hands with the dust of a century. Like Herder, who showed that "music and declamation met at every point, but could not unite," they proved to their own satisfaction that a successful mêlo-drame could not possibly exist in the face of prohibitive theories. So it has been said by French military writers that, according to all the rules of war, the English were defeated at Waterloo, and ought to have accepted the situation. But the English, notoriously an unperceptive people, did not appreciate the situation. They fought on with results which, however irregular, were certainly decisive. In like manner the German public failed to see that "Ariadne" and "Medea" had no right to be in existence. "They were not," says one historian, "to be reasoned out of their enthusiasm, which was shared even by many connoisseurs." Wherefore, mêlo-drame took root in Germany, and flourished amain.

Critics who, à propos of the "Dream of Jubal," said that the union of music and speech never had succeeded, will find it necessary to explain away the foregoing facts, if they desire to establish their position.

Among the converts to mêlo-drame, shortly after its first appearance, was Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart. The circumstances are interesting enough to be set out in some detail. On his way to Salzburg from Paris, in 1778, Mozart halted at Mannheim, and found that city anxiously engaged in considering how its prosperity could be maintained despite the removal of the Electoral Court to Munich. One scheme was to establish there a theatre devoted to national drama. This was carried out, under the management of Heribert von Dalberg, the enterprise being in full operation when Mozart arrived. Curiously enough, the company then in possession of the theatre was presided over by Seyler, husband of the actress for whom Gotter and Benda wrote "Medea." "Medea" was played at Mannheim by the Seylers, and thus came under Mozart's notice. It is certain, because we have the master's word for it, that he had thought of writing mêlo-drame music before being invited to do so by the manager, Von Dalberg. On November 12, 1778, he wrote as follows to Leopold Mozart, in Salzburg:—

"I have a chance of earning forty louis d'or here. I should be obliged to stay six weeks, or, at the longest, two months. The Seyler troupe are here; no doubt you know them by reputation. Herr Dalberg is manager, and refuses to let me go until I have written a duo-drama for him. I have made no objection, for I have always wished to write a drama of this kind. I do not remember if I told you something about these duo-dramas when I was here before. I have been present at the performance of one of them twice with the greatest pleasure. In fact, I never was more surprised, for I had always imagined such a piece would have no effect. You know that the performers do not sing, but declaim, and the music is like an obbligato recitative. Sometimes speaking is interposed with first-rate effect. What I saw was 'Medea,' by Benda. He wrote another, 'Ariadne on Naxos'; both excellent. . . . I like these two works so much that I carry them about with me. Now you may imagine my joy at having to do just what I wished. Do you know what I should like? To have recitatives of this kind in opera, and only sometimes when the words are readily expressible in music, to have them sung."

After reading the foregoing it is impossible to question Mozart's view as to the feasibility of accompanying spoken words with orchestral music. But, soon afterwards, he gave a more practical proof of the opinion he had formed. Mozart lent a willing ear to the suggestion of his friend Von Gemmingen that he should remain in Mannheim and set music to a duo-drama on the subject of Semiramis. There was also a suggested opera, "Cora," which the manager, Von Dalberg, had written and wished the young master to compose, but with this we need not further concern ourselves. In proposing to extend his stay in the Electoral ex-capital, however, Mozart reckoned without that well-meaning but extremely meddling and peremptory person, his father. "Come home at once," wrote Leopold Mozart, in effect, "I care nothing for your possible earning of forty louis d'or. You are wanted here to help me pay my debts. That done, do as you please."* Mozart, who loved his father, at once prepared to obey and to take a reluctant leave of the town in which he had been so happy. But he did not forget the mélo-drame. Writing to Von Dalberg before starting, he said:—

"To please Herr Gemmingen and myself I am writing the first act of the melo-dramatic opera (that I was commissioned to write), but now do so gratis; I shall take it with me and finish it at home. You see how strong my inclination must be for this kind of composition."

On his way, via Munich, Mozart wrote again, mentioning "Semiramis," of which his head seems to have been quite full:—

"With regard to the mono-drame, or duo-drame, a voice part is by no means necessary, as not a single note is sung, but entirely spoken; in short, it is a recitative with instruments, only the actor speaks the words instead of singing them. If you were to hear it, even with the piano, it could not fail to please you; but, properly performed, you would be quite transported. I can answer for this, but it requires a good actor or actress."

The following note from Otto Jahn's biography of the master conveys all that is further known of the interesting work upon which Mozart entered with such zest:—

"Gemmingen's 'Semiramis' was not, as far as I am aware, printed, and I know nothing further of Mozart's composition. We find on page 137 of the Theatre Kalender for 1779: 'Mozart . . . Kapellmeister zu Salzburg, setzt an "Semiramis," einem musikalischen Drama des Frh. von Gemmingen,' which must be a private communication. In following years it is regularly included among Mozart's finished compositions, but I have found no notice of its performance, nor any other mention of it except that Gerber includes it among Leopold Mozart's posthumous works, with 'Bastein and Bastienne' and the 'Verstellte Gärtnerin.' I mention this only to illustrate the fact that many of Mozart's earlier works were ascribed to L. Mozart after his death. But 'Semiramis' was undoubtedly Mozart's own composition. How it happened that it did not remain in his hands, and pass into André's possession with his papers, I cannot explain."

Without stopping to bewail the loss of "Semiramis," we hasten to anticipate a possible assumption. It may be said that Mozart found the idea of mélo-drame unworkable after the glamour of its novelty had passed away. It is as well to crush this notion in the bud by stating that the master employed mélo-drame in his Opera "Zaide," composed at Salzburg in 1780. True, we have it here as episodic matter in a work otherwise of ordinary construction, but the fact of its existence at all proves that Mozart still adhered to the principle of the thing. In "Zaide," two important soliloquies are treated on the "Semiramis" plan. "Benda's composition," writes Otto Jahn, "has evidently been taken as a model, the music in short periods, often only in detached chords, follows each turn of the monologue, and seeks to give expression to the highest shades of sentiment." Jahn goes on to criticise the method unfavourably, and especially to make a remark which has, within the last few weeks, found a faithful echo: "The main point, however, cannot be denied, which is that the words and the music are not here (in mélo-drame) so blended that each part is richly repaid for what it sacrifices by its union with the other, but that each is continually asserting itself in opposition to the other, so that both are, in fact, the losers." This, however, is exactly what we do deny. The matter is one of feeling, not of fact, and anybody who is conscious of harmony between music and words in good mélo-drame is entitled to declare himself as confidently as Jahn gives his impression, and with as much authority. But what do we find Jahn himself saying in another place: "It (mélo-drame) was nevertheless often introduced into operas—and partially, also, into plays—with very good effect." Obligated to admit this, he proceeds to minimise its significance: "But the effect relies chiefly either on the material impressions of sound or upon the delicate and intellectual treatment of the musical interludes, suggesting familiar ideas, sentiments, or fancies which exist in the minds of the speakers, though they are incapable of expression in speech. These are certainly admirable points in their place, but they can scarcely serve as organising principles in a work of art; the melo-drama must be content to take its place as a subordinate and connecting member, if it is to have its true effect." We are satisfied, in reply, to allow the qualification expressed in the closing sentence, for the sake of the admission that in mélo-drame there are such "admirable points" as those indicated in the remarks preceding.

So far we have shown, from indisputable record, that the union of music and speech had a distinguished origin, illustrious advocates, and great popular success. Now let us look at its further history.

We find Beethoven employing it under circumstances which are themselves evidence that he held the method in high esteem. In the very crisis of "Fidelio," when Leonora and the Jailer descend to Florestan's dungeon for the purpose of digging his grave, the impressive opening of that intensely dramatic scene is mélo-drame, and who shall say that there the spoken dialogue and the accompanying music do not blend into a consistent whole? Beethoven knew very well what he was about and perceived that the effect would benefit by throwing the influence of music around the realism of speech.

* Here are the elder Mozart's exact (translated) words: "I am not in a position to pay my debts, which now amount in all to one thousand florins, unless you lighten the payment by the receipt of your salary. . . . I should like, if it is the will of God, to live a few years more, and to pay my debts, and then you may, if you choose, run your head against the wall at once."

In "Egmont" the master followed the same course, with results known to every student of his works. Weber, on his part, employed mêlo-drame in the Wolf's Glen scene of "Der Freyschütz," while Mendelssohn's use of it in the music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," in "Antigone," "Œdipus," and "Athalie" proves, on that composer's part, a thorough acceptance of the device. Similar instances might be cited at great length, not only in the case of German composers, but also those of France, who now make mêlo-drame a prominent feature of opéra comique—a course conspicuously followed by Mr. Massenet in "Manon." On the dramatic stage, mêlo-drame is so common as to be hardly taken for a special feature, and no manager would think of putting a serious or classical play upon the stage without calling in the aid of music at every crisis of the story.

We have now set forth the facts connected with the subject, and contend that they give the conjunctions of speech and music a distinct, acknowledged, and successful place among the composite forms of art. Passing from the region of facts into that of opinion, where every man has a right to think and speak as he pleases, the only appeal is to reason. It may at once be granted that the working of mêlo-drame presents difficulties not easily vanquished. The application of music to speech requires extraordinary skill and judgment; while upon the declaimer of the words devolves a task onerous in the very nature of the case, and made more so by varying acoustical conditions necessarily affecting what must needs be delicate management of the voice. All this we freely concede, admitting further that the circumstances under which, and the extent to which, mêlo-drame may be employed are matters for grave consideration. But recognition of difficulties and off-hand condemnation alike of principle and practice are distinct things, the second, we venture to say, being unworthy of a critical mind, especially when both principle and practice have the sanction of illustrious names and a record of popular success.

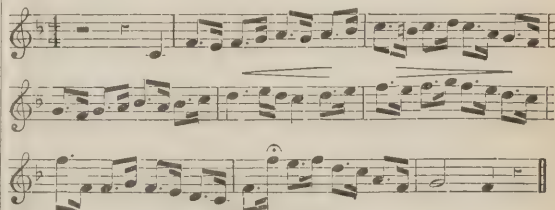

As far as the "Dream of Jubal" is concerned, we are not called upon to speak at length. That work, in which mêlo-drame is carried beyond the farthest point heretofore reached, must stand or fall upon its own merits as an individual example. Our main purpose has been to vindicate the leading principle of its construction, and to guard it from being prejudiced by an indiscriminate condemnation based upon ignorance or perversion of facts.

IRISH HUMOROUS SONGS.

ONE of the undoubted grievances of which Irishmen may legitimately complain is the public illustration through the medium of actors and singers of what purports to be representative of their character and their art. There is no more painful ordeal to me than to have to sit through a performance in which the stage Irishman takes part—a monstrosity who bears about as much relation to the real article as brother Jonathan of Punch's cartoons to a modern Bostonian. English people on or off the stage are not much given, so far as I am aware, to imitations of their Scotch brethren. Would that they would grant us a similar immunity! I am not prepared to argue that the Irish brogue is beautiful, but this I assert, without fear of contradiction, that it is exceedingly difficult to mimic, and that if English actors knew how distressing their efforts were to Irish ears they would mercifully abstain from such performances. The worst offences of all, however, are perpetrated by those who ought to know better. The most misleading pictures of Irish life are to be found in the pages of Irish writers, and the most vulgar and distorted travesties of Irish humorous songs emanate from the pens of those who, Irish by birth, have entirely lost all touch—whether by absence from their native country or association with essentially un-Irish elements—with the true popular sentiment of the soil. A few years ago Irish novels and Irish songs were a drug in the market. Now the market is deluged with them. Englishmen, in their heroic efforts to learn everything about Ireland—without going there—are to be found greedily swallowing a great deal of what may be said to be doctored to suit the English palate. Now, if we are to take the authority of a well-known evening paper, the true way to the heart of the great public is through the music-halls. And thus we find, as we might expect, in the burlesques and variety entertainments at the present day, a large pseudo-Irish element as represented by the songs of Mr. Robert Martin—"Ballyhooly," "Killaloe," and so forth, ditties not devoid of a certain rough, knockabout Donnybrook humour, but which in their essence both as regards sentiment and tunes are of the 'Arry 'Arryish. Such a verdict will be regarded as little short of blasphemy by the readers of the Sporting Times, but it will be endorsed by every Irishman who cares about Irish music or Irish humour as represented by Lover, Lever, Gerald Griffin, or Sheridan Lefanu. The tendency which is here observable is just the same as that which is to be found operating in other and more important departments. Out of inability to coin new and good tunes, the modern humorous (?) song-writer de-composes the old material and produces a sort of pasticcio, in which the meagreness of his own invention is eked out by scraps and tags of earlier ballads. Take, for example, the following air, familiar in the mouths of Irish street ballad singers since the famine times, in connection with the words "My name is Bridget Leary, from a spot called Tipperary":—

I was strumming this air on the pianoforte the other day when a young undergraduate, learned in all the lore of pantomime and burlesque, said "That's 'Enniscorthy,' isn't it?" and, when I demurred, adduced proof positive, in the shape of the song itself. The phrase contained in the last bar but one is not particularly refined, but it may be said to furnish the modern refinement known as "Enniscorthy" with body and bones.

To quit the subject of this conscious or unconscious assimilation of old material for a brief consideration of the old material itself, I would point out that in the airs and words of genuine Irish humorous songs, the note of vulgarity is generally conspicuous by its absence. Contrast, for example, the bastard modern product—tune and words—of "The Tipperary Christening," with that delightful classic "Lanigan's Ball." This is sung to several airs, but undoubtedly the most characteristic is the following—

No. 2.

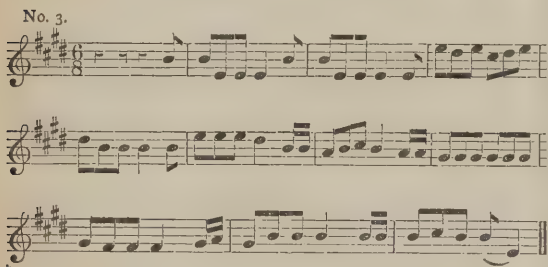

We may be pardoned for quoting the first verse—

In the town of Athy one Jeremy Lanigan
 Battered away till he hadn't a pound:
 His father he died and made him a man again,
 Left him a farm and three acres of ground.
 He gave a grand party to friends and relations
 Who didn't forsake him when sent to the wall:
 And if ye'll just listen, I'll make your eyes glisten,
 Wid the rows and the ructions of Lanigan's Ball.

It is obvious that for English audiences one should read in the fourth line "a cow and three acres of ground." "Lanigan's Ball" is full from end to end of the spirit of fun and frolic, and it contains a splendid specimen of the Taurus Hibernicus in the lines which tell how, on the fainting of Miss Kerrigan—

Her lover, Ned Morgan, so pow'rful and able,
 When he saw his dear colleen stretched out by the wall,
 He tore the left leg from under the table
 And smashed all the china at Lanigan's Ball.

Another typical example of genuine Irish humour is to be found in the "Kerry Recruit." To this again several tunes have been attached. The following has the advantage over rival versions in that it is the one familiar in the "Kingdom of Kerry," as that district is affectionately known to dwellers therein—

My belief is that this air is a modified form of something much more characteristically Irish. As it stands it is much on a par with the extremely naïve tunes which Lover invented or adapted to his songs, and which were a sort of compromise between the songs of the peasantry and the taste of the drawing-room. In the sixth and seventh bars of the foregoing illustration there is an exceedingly suspicious resemblance to a phrase in "Villikins and his Dinah." And here I may remark that the Irish peasantry are curiously uncritical in the matter of music, being apparently unable to discriminate between their often really beautiful native airs and the tawdry music-hall tunes, which gradually filter their way down into the remotest corners of the kingdom. They pick up the latter readily enough, and it is truly incongruous to hear some such ditty as the "Grecian Bend" sung at a festive gathering in the richest Munster dialect. But whatever may be the merits of the music of the "Kerry Recruit," the words are delightful. For it is in this song that there occurs that wonderful description of a man-of-war from the landsman's point of view—

Three sh_ticks in the middle, and on 'em a sheet,
 And she walks in the wather widout any feet.

In another passage the hero relates the queries put to him by his military superiors, together with his own answers, in the following characteristic style—

Then up comes the captain, a man of great fame,
 He axed me my country, I tould him my name;
 I ups with my story, and tould him again,
 That my father and mother were two Kerry men.

reminding one of the historic story of the answers given by the foreign recruit to Frederick the Great.

I have spoken above of Lover's songs in a tone of semi-disparagement as regards the airs to which they are adapted. But the words are the very incarnation of genial vagabondism—of the reckless happy-go-lucky spirit of Irish life. Was there ever such an irresistible scoundrel as that depicted in Paddy's Pastoral?—

As Molly t'other day, sir,
 Was makin' of the hay, sir,
 I axed her for to be my bride,
 But Molly she began to chide.
 Says she, "You are too young, dear Pat."
 Says I, "My jew'l, I'll mend of that!"
 Says she, "You are too poor, beside":
 So to convince her then I tried
 That wealth is an invition
 That the wise should never mintion:
 For flesh is grass and flowers will fade,
 And 'tis better be married than die an ould maid!

And accordingly Pat reads his sweetheart a most inimitable lesson from the example set by the birds and flowers—

The purty little sparrows
 Have neither spades nor harrows;
 No foolish pride their feelings hurts;
 They ate the flax and wear no shirts.

* * * * *
 They have no care nor flusterin'
 Wid diggin' or industerin'.

The bees too, "who sip the sweets, my sowl, Though 'tis not from a sugar-bowl," furnish him with another parallel which he turns to excellent account. And here finally he sums up his philosophy in a style worthy of Villon—

Here's a health to you, my darlin',
 Though I'm not worth a farthing;
 I'll pledge my coat to drink your health,
 And then I'll envy no man's wealth;
 For when I'm drunk I think I'm rich—
 I've a feather bed in every ditch!
 I dhrame of you, my heart's delight,
 And how could I pass a pleasant night?
 For wealth is an invition
 Which the wise should never mintion;
 For flesh is grass and flowers will fade,
 And 'tis better be married than die an ould maid!

Lever's "Widow Malone" is too well known to need quotation, and the same remark applies to "Kitty of Coleraine." But readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES may be unfamiliar with one of the most wildly humorous effusions of the Irish muse—"Purty Molly Brallaghan," from which I take the last verse—

O, the left side of my carcase is as wake as water-gruel, ma'am,
 The devil a bit upon my bones since Molly's proved so cruel, ma'am,
 I wish I had a carabine, I'd go and fight a duel, ma'am:
 Sure it's better far to kill myself than stay here to die.
 I'm hot and determined as a live salamander, ma'am—
 Won't you come to my wake, when I go my long meander,* ma'am?
 O, I'll feel myself as valiant as the famous Alexander, ma'am,
 When I hear yez cryin' round me, "Arrah, why did ye die?"

That English audiences are capable of appreciating genuine Irish lyrical humour is amply proved by the success of a song like "Father O'Flynn." The air is a Kerry jig-tune and the words are so popular in Ireland that they have been translated into a metrical Celtic version. This makes it all the more unsatisfactory that the spurious article should be palmed off as an authentic representation of Irish sentiment. What that sentiment really is, on its humorous side, I have roughly endeavoured to show in the foregoing illustrations.

THE GREAT COMPOSERS.

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

No. XXVII.—HANDEL (continued from page 141).

LAST month we followed the course of the "Royal Academy of Music" to its end in 1728, but before dealing with Handel's next step, it is desirable to cast a glance back and note two events, which happened while the nobility's great operatic enterprise was languishing to its fall. One was the death of the master's old friend and patron, George I., and the accession of the Prince whose daughters Handel had for some time taught. Nothing was lost to the composer by a change of masters. Indeed, with the new King came a solid gain in the form of an annuity of £200, bestowed upon him as musicmaster to the Princesses. Handel now enjoyed three such annuities, and with £600 a year for life was secure against poverty, if not actually provided with wealth. For the coronation of George II. Handel composed the Anthem best known by the opening words of its first section, "Zadok the Priest." Amateurs are aware that the work is in four divisions, the last three being respectively called "Let thy hand be strengthened," "The King shall rejoice," and "My heart is inditing." It is not worth while to ask whether in these works Handel rose to the height of a great occasion. We all know and admit that he did. The second event to which reference has been made was the production of the "Beggar's Opera" (January 29, 1727), with a success so enormous as to have a most unfavourable effect upon that tottering fabric the Royal Academy of Music, and to establish a long-abiding influence upon the lyric stage in this country. The vulgarity of the "Beggar's Opera" must be admitted, together with the charm of the old melodies pressed into its service; but its repellent characteristics only the more accentuate its significance as a protest against the artificialities of Italian opera, where the voice of nature was seldom heard and sympathy with humanity rarely excited.

The "Beggar's Opera" was in full possession of the town when Handel found himself surrounded by the ruins of the enterprise with which he had so long been connected. It was no easy matter to determine his next step, but the composer does not appear to have hesitated. He had a dauntless soul, as we shall see more and more in the course of this life-story. What though the world ran after Gay's vulgar play and its beautiful music? What though Italian opera had just suffered a crushing blow! He, George Frederic Handel, would "face the fight," and, almost unaided, submit to the ordeal of battle. For this purpose he entered into a partnership with Heidegger, the lessee of the Opera House, and started for Italy to engage singers. This was in the summer of 1728—a date which marks the beginning of one of the fiercest struggles that ever an indomitable spirit waged against personal enemies and unkind fortune.

Handel's movements in his search for artists can be followed, but enough if we say that, after visiting the principal cities of Italy, he engaged Bernacchi, a male soprano, the tenor, Fabri, and his wife, Signora Strada, Merighi, Bertoldi, and a German baritone, Reimschneider, whom he discovered in Hamburg. Having accomplished his business, the master had regard to the claims of family affection, and travelled to his old home at Halle, using all speed because of grave news concerning his venerable mother, now close upon her eightieth year. He found that beloved relative totally blind, and in so weak a state that the end could not be far off. Readers can picture to themselves the chastened joy of that meeting between the affectionate son and her who had loved him so wisely and so well. They can imagine, also, the pathos of a parting which both must have known was final as regards this world. But why dwell upon such incidents, since they largely make up the story of every life?

With Handel at Halle and Bach at Leipzig, the question arises once more—Why did they not meet? By way of answer, we give the following quotation from Spitta's biography of the great Cantor:—

"On the second occasion, in June, 1729, Bach, who was prevented by illness from travelling himself, sent his eldest son from Leipzig to Halle with an invitation to Handel, who was staying there on his way from Italy. Handel regretted his inability to accept it, and it seems most probable that the time he had left was, in fact, too short. It may, however, be confidently denied that it is in any way very regrettable, in the interests of art, that these two men should thus have failed to meet. It would have been interesting, no doubt, and a desire to hear them compete is said to have been very prevalent among the lovers of music in Leipzig. But the whole object of their meeting would have been merged in this, and would have ended, very certainly, without any decision being arrived at on the vexed question, from the dissimilarity of their outward circumstances. On the other hand, the judgment goes against Handel, without any bias being given by our appreciation of Bach's artistic greatness; for in 1719, when Handel spent eight months in Germany, he certainly might have found time for making a visit which might have originated with him more properly than with Bach, who was occupied with his official duties. Added to this, he resided in Dresden and Halle, places where Bach's importance as an artist was fresh in the minds of living witnesses, and he must there have heard the most splendid reports of the great composer who was working in his immediate neighbourhood. No facts have come to light that prove him to have taken any interest in Bach's works; Bach, on the contrary, not only proposed more than once to make Handel's personal acquaintance, but bore emphatic witness to the value he attributed to his works."

We are not going to follow Spitta in criticising Handel to Bach's advantage. The point to be observed is that these men were entirely different in nature and circumstances: the one living a dull round of restricted life in a small city, the other dwelling emphatically in the world, and taking no small part of it into the scope of his labours. Anxious, busy, and hurried, Handel may be pardoned if, during his visits to Germany, he put off the making of formal calls till a future time, which never came.

Handel was back in London by July 2, 1729, when the following appeared in the Daily Courant:—

"Mr. Handel, who is just returned from Italy, has contracted with the following persons to perform in the Italian operas: Signor Bernacchi, who is esteemed the best singer in Italy. Signora Merighi, a woman of a very fine presence, an excellent actress, and a very good singer, with a counter-tenor voice. Signora Strada, who hath a very fine treble voice, a person of singular merit. Signor Annibale Pio Fabri, a most excellent tenor, and a fine voice. His wife, who performs a man's part exceedingly well. Signora Bertoldi, who has a very fine treble voice; she is also a very genteel actress both in men and women's parts. A bass voice from Hamburgh, there being none worth engaging in Italy."

This paragraph has a strong flavour of the réclame about it, and was evidently "communicated" to the Courant by Handel or his partner, Heidegger. The company reached London at the end of September, and, on December 2, the Opera House once more opened its doors to let in success, if haply it would come. Amid the bustle of preparation, Handel had found time to write a new work, "Lothario," and with this the managers first wooed their public. Burney states: "The score was not finished till November 16, according to Handel's own record (on the MS.) so that it was transcribed, got by heart, rehearsed, and brought on the stage, in the fortnight." With all respect to Burney, this does not follow, and, probably, only the last act had to be prepared within the time he names. The Doctor gives a long analysis of "Lothario," and sums up thus: "Upon the whole, though this has many agreeable songs, it abounds with fewer airs on great and masterly subjects than many of his preceding operas, and whether oppressed by opposition and less supported by his singers than formerly, his invention seems to have been less fertile than usual, to which the success of the songs seems to have been proportioned, as no one of them appears to have ever been in general favour throughout the nation." Nevertheless, "Lothario" was performed ten times between the date of its production and January 13, 1730, when "Julius Cæsar" was revived, pending the readiness of a new opera, "Parthenope."

It was in connection with "Parthenope" that Handel accepted the famous John Walsh as his sole publisher. The master and Walsh first did opera business together with "Rinaldo" (1711), between which year and 1720 Walsh was superseded by Cluer and, after him, Meares. Handel went back to Walsh in 1722, left him again for Cluer in 1724, and then, in 1730, finally returned to his first love. We quite agree with Schœlcher that it is a pity he ever broke with Cluer, who was not only a publisher but an artist. His "Julius Cæsar," now before us, is a charming octavo, worthy to be prized as a volume of highest merit in engraving and general get up. Cluer, it may be added, did his own engraving; in what style let the frontispiece of "Julius Cæsar" tell.

"Parthenope," which Burney places "among the best of Handel's dramatic productions," was finished on February 12, 1730, and produced on the 24th of the same month. It attained but seven representations, and, after one performance of "Julius Cæsar," apparently by royal order, was succeeded by "Ormisda," regarding which we read in Burney: "Whether a pasticcio, or by whom composed, does not appear by the book of the words, public papers, or by any other record that I have been able to find." This piece and "Ptolemy" ran out the season, which closed on June 13, 1731.

Handel was not satisfied with the result of the first series of performances, and he determined to strengthen his company in view of a second campaign. To this end the master worked through the British Minister at the Court of the Duke of Tuscany. He, Francis Colman by name, is known to bibliographers as the author of the "Opera Register," and to students of dramatic history as the father of George Colman, the dramatist. The correspondence of the Colmans has been published, and in it appear two letters* addressed by Handel to Francis. The first letter, written in French, is given below according to Schœlcher's translation:—

"London, 18 of June, 1730.

"Sir,—Since I last had the honour of writing to you, means have been found to re-engage Signora Merighi, and, as she has a contralto voice, it would now suit us if the woman to be engaged in Italy were a soprano.

I am also writing by this post to Mr. Swiney* to the same effect, recommending him, at the same time, that the woman whom he may propose to you shall be able to play a man's part as well as a woman's. It is probable that you may not yet have engaged a contralto woman, but in case you have done so, we must be satisfied and not engage any other.

"I take the liberty of asking you again to make no mention in the contracts of the first, second, or third parts, because that hampers us in the choice of the drama, and, moreover, is otherwise a cause of great inconvenience. We hope, also, to obtain, through your assistance, a man and a woman for next season, which begins in the month of October in the current year, and finishes in the month of July, 1731, and we are impatiently expecting some news about it, in order to inform the Court.† It only remains for me," &c. Swiney seems to have been the active agent in making engagements. He wrote to Colman from Bologna:—

"I find that Senesino, or Carestini, are (sic) desired at 1,200 guineas each, if they are to be had. I am sure that Carestini is engaged at Milan, and has been so for many months past, and I hear that Senesino is engaged for the ensuing Carnival at Rome. If we can get neither Senesino nor Carestini, then Mr. Handel desires to have a man soprano and a woman contralto, and that the price for both must not exceed 1,000 or 1,100 guineas; and that the persons must set out for London at the latter end of August or beginning of September, and that no engagement must be made with one without a certainty of getting the other."

Handel's second letter, dated October 27, runs as follows:—

"Sir,—I had the honour of receiving your letter on the 22nd of last month, by which I perceive the reasons that have led you to engage Signor Senesino for 1,400 guineas, to which we agree; and I tender you my very humble thanks for the trouble which you have kindly taken in the matter. The aforesaid Signor Senesino arrived here twelve days ago, and I did not fail, on the presentation of your letter, to pay him, on account of his salary, the hundred guineas which you promised him. As for Signorina Pisani, we have not yet heard her, and as the season is much advanced, and the operas will soon begin, we will dispense for this year with another woman from Italy, having already cast the operas for the company we now have.

"I am, nevertheless, very much obliged to you for having thought of Signora Madalena Pieri, in case we should absolutely require another woman to act the part of a man; but we shall content ourselves with five personages, having actually found enough to supply the rest.

"It is to your generous assistance that the Court and the Nobility will partly owe the satisfaction of having now a company to their taste, and it only remains for me," &c.

The season began on November 3, when "Scipio" was revived, with Senesino in the cast. Other operas followed till Handel brought out a novelty, "Poro"—of which work Burney remarks: "though it contains but a few airs in a great and elaborate style, was so dramatic and pleasing that it ran fifteen nights successively in the spring season, and was again brought on the stage in the autumn, when it sustained four representations more." After "Poro" came

* The original of the second letter was bought for £12 by the Sacred Harmonic Society in 1856, and is, or was, in its library, now transferred to the Royal College of Music.

* Owen Swiney, a famous man in his day, had been manager of the Haymarket Theatre. He was, in 1730, travelling through Italy with Lord Boyne and Mr. Walpole. Swiney was just the man to assist Handel, having been himself an opera manager, in which character he lost everything (1711) and fled to the Continent, where he remained twenty years.—Vide Colley Cibber's "Apology."

† There can hardly be a doubt that the British Minister employed himself in this matter at the instance of the King.

revivals of "Rodelinda" and "Rinaldo," which ran out the first half of the season.

Handel sustained a heavy loss while all this work was being done at the opera. His mother died, December 27, 1730, a very little while before she would have completed her eightieth year. She was buried, we learn from Chrysander, January 2, 1731, being laid beside the remains of her fine old husband, Surgeon George; both resting from their labours, yet living in the memory of their illustrious son. Handel's duties kept him from the death-bed and the grave side, but his filial and pious emotions with reference to the event fully appear in two letters to his brother-in-law, which, fortunately, have been preserved. The first, written in German, is translated as below in Mr. Rockstro's biography:—

"Sir, and most honoured Brother,—I have duly received your honoured letter of January 6, and learned from it the care you have taken to commit the remains of my late mother to the earth, conformably to her will. I cannot yet restrain my tears. But it has pleased the Most High to enable me to submit, with Christian calmness, to His holy will. Your thoughtfulness will never pass from my remembrance until, after this life, we are once more united, which may the All-good God, in His mercy, grant us.

"The innumerable obligations under which my honoured brother has laid me by the continual solicitude and care with which he has always tended my late dear mother cannot be acknowledged with words alone, but with dutiful recognition.

"I hope my honoured brother received my last letter, written in answer to his own of December 28, with the enclosure for Herr Consistorial—Rath Frank, and my cousin, Deacon Taust. I also expect with impatience his honoured answer, including notice of expenses incurred, and also the printed funeral oration and verses. I am greatly obliged for the poem last sent me, and shall guard it as a treasured memorial. Let me also, in the last place, condole most heartily with my honoured brother and his wife on the loss they have sustained in the death of their brother-in-law. Their Christian calmness strengthens me much. May the Most High grant to all of us our faithful desires. To His Almighty keeping I recommend my honoured brother, and all his amiable family, and remain, with earnest devotion, my honoured brother's most humble and obedient servant,—GEORGE FRIDERIC HANDEL."

The second letter, written in French six months later, is translated thus:—

"Sir, and most honoured Brother,—I see, by the letter you did me the honour to write to me on the 12th of July (N.S.), in response to my former communication, and by the specification enclosed therein, how careful were your arrangements on the occasion of the interment of my dearest mother. I am also deeply obliged to you for the copies of the funeral oration which you have sent me, and to which you were pleased to join one made for my late father. (A part of the letter is here missing.) I shall understand later how to acquit myself of part of the obligation I owe you. Meanwhile, I entrust you to pay my respects and compliments to Madame, your dear wife, to my dear god-daughter, and the rest of your dear family, and to believe, with regard to yourself, that I am, with devoted affection, Sir, and most honoured brother, yours" (signature missing).

These letters are of extreme interest. They show what a tender and loving heart beat in the bosom of this strong and rugged man, and how closely he, the mighty genius of music, is allied to all of us in the bonds of a common humanity.

They live, they speak, they breathe what love inspires,
Warm from the soul, and faithful to its fires.

We need not dwell upon the opera season of 1732. It was made memorable by the production of "Ezio" and "Sosarme," the first of which had a "run" of five nights, the second of ten. These works and revivals kept the house open, with no great financial success, till an event happened which not only, in its ultimate results, changed the course of Handel's artistic career, but had a far-reaching and still potent influence upon music. There are few more conspicuous illustrations of man's servitude to circumstances than the turning of Handel from a composer of opera to a composer of oratorio. Whether the change would ever have come from within is a question about which we can only speculate. As a matter of fact, it came from without, and had its origin chiefly in unscrupulous actions which compelled the master to strike out a new course in sheer self-defence. We, looking back over a hundred and fifty years, can see the entire operation, and note an adaptation of means to an end which almost suggests a Providential design. But Handel was led on, step by step, and, when he took the first, could have had no idea of the goal towards which he tended. The original move was made by Mr. Bernard Gates, at that time master of the children of the Chapel Royal, and living in St. James's Street, Westminster, the boys, no doubt, boarding and lodging under his roof. Gates seems to have felt a strong admiration for Handel, and, in a happy moment, there came to him the idea of celebrating the master's forty-second birthday by giving a private performance, in dramatic form, of "Esther," which, all these years, had been lying neglected at Cannons. After due preparation, and the fitting up of a room in Mr. Gates's house, the performance took place, with John Randall, Samuel Howard, and John Beard—all more or less famous afterwards—in the cast. A certain Philharmonic Society supplied an orchestra of amateurs, the Gentlemen of the Chapel Royal assisting to make up a chorus. With these means the performance passed off well, giving much satisfaction to the invited guests, who noised their pleasure abroad, and excited in others a desire for the same gratification. Consequently, "Esther" was played a second and third time, under the same conditions, but with the locale changed from Mr. Gates's house to the Crown and Anchor Tavern in the Strand. On one of these occasions, it is said, Handel attended, moved by no other feeling, perhaps, than curiosity, and, we may be sure, without the slightest presentiment of what was to follow. The composer, delighted with the performance, spoke of it to his pupil, the Princess Royal, who suggested that the Oratorio should be given at the opera house. But the Bishop of London refused his consent to the appearance of the children in such a place, and the idea fell through. Indeed, it is probable that nothing more would have been heard of "Esther" but for the action of an unscrupulous speculator, whose mode of proceeding and its immediate consequences may well be reserved for future discussion.

In the last number of THE MUSICAL TIMES it was stated that Mr. W. A. Barrett is about to publish a series of the "Quaint Songs" which were once popular in the streets and fields. The effort to rescue these simple productions from oblivion is one which is worthy of support from all musicians who can find a warm corner in their hearts for these unaffected treasures of the people. There are few who have not been struck with the melodious beauty of the songs, even though they have often been associated with words whose imagery is wild and far-fetched, and whose forms of expression show that the border line, which separates the sublime from the ridiculous, is often so narrow as to be almost invisible. Still, in the peculiarities of diction may often be traced the evidences of some beauty of thought or of idea. In some cases where the ballads have been printed, a collation of copies often leads to a restoration of the original ideas and thoughts, which have become corrupted by oral transmission. In many cases the songs have been preserved by tradition, the son singing the song for the performance of which his father before him was famous. These ditties were at all times difficult to collect, as they were only heard at rustic gatherings, harvest homes, sheep-shearings, and Christmas revels. Now that the rustic mind delights in parading the flaunting shoddy of the music-hall in preference to its own substantial if less gaudy homespun, the difficulties are increased. It is impossible, therefore, unaided, for one collector to gather together materials that have yet some existence though they are widely scattered. Those of our readers who have knowledge of the existence of these old delights in their own neighbourhood, and have sympathy with the object, may read Mr. Barrett's request in another column, and by sending their contributions to him may help him to make his collection as valuable as it promises to be interesting.

THAT an outburst of loyalty, properly organised, and occurring at the right time and place, is generally duly acknowledged cannot be for a moment doubted, but that spontaneous loyalty is dangerous, and may prove expensive, has been shown by an incident which recently took place at Berlin. It appears that on the occasion of the Kaiser's birthday the first person of his Majesty's subjects to congratulate him was the driver of a postal cart, who, on passing the Kaiser's bedroom window, played on his horn the melody of the well-known song of the poet to his coat, "Schier dreissig Jahre bist du alt," "Just thirty years old art thou." Assuredly no more appropriate air could have been selected, and we might reasonably imagine that the enthusiastic serenader would have been applauded, if not rewarded; but, unfortunately, in the exuberance of his spirits, he forgot that he was "on duty," and as the "song of the poet to his coat" was not in the list of music "prescribed" when officially engaged, he was fined three marks (3s.). Luckily the Kaiser, hearing of the occurrence, sent for the culprit, and presented him with a hundred mark note (£5), thus not only reimbursing him for his loss, but tacitly admitting that justice could sometimes be tempered with mercy. We, of course, cannot say what the "prescribed music" for the driver of a mail cart who desires to give vent to his loyalty in memory of the Kaiser's birthday may include; but had the man been less impulsive, something perhaps might have been found sufficiently in consonance with his feelings to be performed without question. At all events, the lesson will not be lost upon him; and in the future he will doubtless content himself with silently blessing the Kaiser as he passes his bedroom window, and reserving the musical expression of his joy until he is "off duty."

THE REV. R. GREGORY, one of the Canons of St. Paul's, at a recent meeting of Convocation expressed himself anxious for Parliament to extend the powers of Deans and Chapters, so that they may prevent Vicars Choral from singing solos; and discharge them after they have spent the best years of their lives in the service of the Church, if in the opinion of these authorities they are unfitted for their duties. The Dean of Lincoln wisely pointed out an omission in

Mr. Gregory's proposal, observing that the reform to be effectual should be thorough, and that the whole of the members of the Cathedral body, clerical and lay, should be included in any scheme for alteration. "All should be tarred with the same brush," a homely but apposite simile.

THE list of services in the Church of St. Clement, Chicago, for the Festival of the Saint to whom the Church is dedicated, and for the season of Christmas, shows that the music of our English Church composers—Goss, Dykes, Stainer, Walmisley, Hopkins, Garrett, Tours, Sullivan, together with the Christmas carols now so popular—are highly appreciated there. The general character of the services and anthems selected for use tells of the maintenance of principles of the highest order in the conduct of reverent forms of worship.

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

MAX O'RELL has called attention to our unique national practice of giving foreigners who come to this country the titular appellation which belongs to them in their native land. He says: "In France we call every man Monsieur, no matter what his nationality may be. Not so the Englishman. He does not apply his word Mister to strangers; he believes he does honour to the French, the Germans, and the Italians by giving them the titles of Monsieur, Herr, Signor. In an account of a Concert you will read such paragraphs as the following: 'The trio was admirably played by Herr Joachim, Signor Piatti, and M. d'Almaine.'" This is true as a rule, but of late a change has begun. At least one daily paper puts an English handle to the names of musical artists, save those of a few ladies, and the practice is spreading on all sides. Let us hope that soon there will not be a single English performer wearing a foreign designation. Were Mrs. Patey and Mrs. Antoinette Sterling to set the example in this respect, others would soon follow, and we should no longer see every Academy girl dubbing herself Madame as soon as she marries.

THE authorities of St. Stephen's, Poplar, wishing to be served at the organ for nothing, issued an announcement to that effect, and laid down conditions which afford a curious insight into the state of the market as regards one branch of the musical profession. It might have been thought that the advertisers were prepared gratefully to accept any amateur who, otherwise eligible, could get through the service decently. But the St. Stephen's people knew better. They looked for a rush of candidates, and determined to proceed to selection just as though they were offering £150 per year. A correspondent informs us as to the test imposed upon aspirants to this honorary office. They were to engage, if elected, to serve for a year certain; to play (before Mr. E. H. Turpin as judge) a piece of their own choice, to play a chant, "to give out and play one-verse of a hymn" (sic), to extemporise on a suggested theme, and to pass a short test for sight-reading. We know not which to wonder at the more, the impudence of the church authorities or the abasement of those aspirants for a profitless post who accepted such terms.

MRS. FURSCH-MADI has been drawn into the American conflict over Wagner and German opera. Being on the side of the Philistines and opposed to the chosen people, she has singled out Mrs. Lilli Lehmann as her special antagonist, and by latest advices the two championesses are still foot to foot. "Meanwhile," remarks a transatlantic paper, "the friends of Mr. Siedl, who is considered the Wagner standard-bearer in this country, have come forward and wine and dined the eminent Conductor at the Hotel Brunswick, where enthusiastic and fiery speeches were made by the advanced thinkers on musical affairs, . . . condemning every person who does not swear by Wagner and his works." All this time, according to Mrs. Lehmann, Italian opera is dead—but "Il Trovatore" draws the largest audiences to the Metropolitan Opera House!!

THERE is, somewhere in the United States, a place called Muscatine, and Muscatine has a journal, the Daily News, which boasts a musical critic entitled to "come up higher" forthwith. Hear him on the subject of a performance of "St. Paul":—"For two hours we rise and fall to the grand cadences of chorus and orchestra, sometimes lying under beautiful twilight skies, listening to the soft chorals that sound as if coming from unseen shores; again we are at the mercy of the tempestuous chorus, with its weird fugues, when wind and wave could not commingle in wilder harmonies; and now, out of the tempest, arises a recitation as from the very soul of the storm, or perhaps the voice of prayer, and we are scarcely under its spell ere again caught up in the whirlwind of some mighty chorus." And all this about staid "St. Paul"!

THOSE interested in the origin of popular old songs will read with pleasure the following quotation from the Cleveland and Chicago Musical World:—"Sing a song of sixpence" is as old as the sixteenth century. 'Three blind mice' is found in a music-book dated 1609; 'The frog and the mouse' was known in 1580. 'Three children sliding on the ice' dates from 1659. 'London Bridge is broken down' is of unfathomed antiquity. 'Girls and boys, come out to play,' is certainly as old as the reign of Charles II., as is also 'Lucy Locket lost her pocket,' to the tune of which the American song of 'Yankee Doodle' was written. 'Pussy cat, pussy cat, where have you been?' is of the age of Queen Bess. 'Little Jack Horner' is older than the seventeenth century. 'The old woman tossed in a blanket' is of the reign of James II., to which monarch it is supposed to allude."

WE give the subjoined extract from the New York Musical Courier by way of showing the effect of hot partisanship upon language: "The stupidity of the anti-Wagnerites cannot better be illustrated than by pointing out to them the interesting but absolute fact that they are about thirty years behind the age. . . . They are calling Wagner immoral, so once did fools speak of Shakespeare. They say Wagner is all science, no heart. So brayed asses in days of yore at the great Ludwig van Beethoven." By the way, our contemporary's fondness for strong words has brought it into trouble, and, at the instance of a Mr. Schwab, one of the editors has been shown the inside of the Tombs, on a charge of criminal libel. The "asses" are probably rejoicing in their brutish way.

THE Leeds Festival Committee have issued their "programme of chief works" for the forthcoming celebration. Here it is. Wednesday: morning, Berlioz's "Faust"; evening, Corder's "Sword of Argantyr" and Act III. of "Tannhäuser." Thursday: morning, Parry's setting of Pope's "Ode to St. Cecilia," and Beethoven's Choral Symphony; evening,

Creser's "Sacrifice of Freia," Spohr's Symphony, "Consecration of Sound," and Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto. Friday: morning, Schubert's Mass in E flat and Handel's "Acis and Galatea"; evening, Mendelssohn's music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and a "short new work" by Arthur Sullivan. Saturday: morning, Brahms's "Requiem" and Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang"; evening, "The Golden Legend."

ANOTHER horror! There is a lady in Rochester, N.Y., who professes to be a musical medium, under the control of an old Italian master named Ingrello. He must be a very old master indeed, and, in point of fact, antecedent to the dawn of history. But that is a detail. Miss Billings (related perhaps to Josh of that ilk) takes her seat at the pianoforte, and, after a few nervous movements of her head, passes into a trance, during which she plays and sings with the greatest ease and skill the most beautiful and difficult songs. She sings in five different languages, none of which—and this is convenient—does she understand, and she performs well upon various instruments without having learned. The pre-historic Ingrello might easily extend his connection in this country.

THE old battle between critics and the criticised has been raging in New York with reference to an operetta called "Said Pacha." Some of the leading journalists were hard upon the work and its composer, and now they are accused of favouring a rival interest. One of them, moreover, is to be sued for libel, and, when in the witness box, will be requested to point out the cribs from Sullivan and Strauss with which he credited the composer. What vanity and vexation of spirit is all this! The fact is that people with thin skins and no patience should not exercise their artistic talents in public. Artists are always called upon to endure and wait. The process may be troublesome, but it is generally healthy. That is the best gold which has been purified in the fire.

WHEN at the dinner of the Royal Society of Musicians, on the 12th ult., the chairman (Mr. Lawson, M.P.) said that "the uncertainty of the profession was great, the improvidence even greater," and yet that the Society was "not sufficiently encouraged," there were few amongst the young musicians present who did not feel how powerful was this appeal to join so excellent an Institution, not only on their own account, but for the sake of their brother artists who might be compelled to come upon its funds. That the many other forcible points in Mr. Lawson's admirable speech were thoroughly appreciated was decisively proved by the unusually large amount of subscriptions collected.

It has been the custom at Lyons for operatic débütants to appear three times, and, after the third performance, to receive from the audience the cheers or hisses which retain or dismiss them. This somewhat crude process has sometimes led to disturbance, in several cases the police commissary having been called in to give an opinion as between the "Ayes" and "Noes." The Municipal Council have not ventured to abolish a privilege so essentially democratic. They have, however, made up their minds to regulate the procedure, and for the future the fate of débütants is to be decided by ballot, the audience being supplied with tickets, which they may put into an urn on passing out.

MR. SMALLEY has been writing to the New York Tribune that which reads very like nonsense. Referring to the London Symphony Concerts, he told his readers: "Mr. Henschel's series of Orchestral Concerts has again proved caviare to the general, and even to the select, scientific interests in music being here confined to a small minority." What in the world does this gentleman mean by scientific interests in music? Are there such interests in music? And, if so, what had Mr. Henschel's Concerts to do with them? But perhaps Mr. Smalley meant to say that only a minority of Londoners possess a taste for high-class orchestral works.

MR. CHEVALIER, writing in Le Ménestrel concerning the American débutante Miss Eames, credits her with a powerful pair of eyes. After noting her assurance and confidence, he says, "Her fine eyes persistently put to you this question, 'Shall I not be a great artist one day?' and the blue optics insist with so much force that it is impossible to answer 'No!'" Mr. Chevalier seems to be a susceptible man, and we hardly know how to take his further testimony: "Miss Eames has everything necessary for a great career. Nilsson did not begin better." Yet Nilsson had very remarkable eyes.

WHAT is this we hear from Bayreuth? They are going to perform in the Town Theatre (not Wagner's) Lortzing's "Hans Sachs, or the Mastersingers!" It is bad enough to play any opera not signed R. W. in Bayreuth, but to produce one on a subject which Wagner himself has treated seems malicious as well as impious. Lortzing's work, we may add, was first produced at Leipzig in 1840, several years before Wagner took up the same theme. It had an instant success and was played all over Germany; of late, however, it has not often been heard.

MADAME ALBANI is having a "real good time" in America, but her popularity brings drawbacks. She seems to have been pestered with requests to sing for charitable purposes in this and that church, and the only course was to take shelter behind her agent. Here is a part of a letter to a Quebec organist: "Je suis désolée de ne pouvoir chanter chez vous demain. J'aurais dû, avant de consentir, consulter M. Thomas, qui est chargé de nos Concerts." Madame Albani should have that form of reply stereotyped.

OUR American cousins will not allow it to be said that they are outdone in anything. The Boston Herald recently pointed out that Patti was singing for 3,500 dollars a night in London, and added, "her highest price yet." Upon this a New York journal remarks: "It may be the highest price yet in London, but she has received 5,000 dollars a night in New York and Boston." We do not dispute it, cheerfully allowing that in this form of the race of folly the Americans are an easy first.

ANECDOTES of Madame Albani have been going through Canada on the wings of the newspapers, and some of them are very "fetching." Here is one:—When the Canadian Premier, Sir John Macdonald, met the artist at a London social function, he requested her to sing something. Madame Albani responded that it was not her custom to "oblige" on such occasions, but she would make an exception in favour of son chef. She then sang "O Canada, mon pays, mes amours." A case of fine tact.

DR. GOWER, who lately left England to take the post of Organist at St. John's Cathedral, Denver, appears to be a great success in that beautiful city of the Far West. His seventeen Organ Recitals this winter have been attended by 20,000 people, who boast that he has no superior in the country. Dr. Gower is fortunate in his charming "location" under the shadow of the Rocky Mountains, in his admirable instrument and first-rate musical service; also, let us add, in his enlightened and liberal chief, Dean Hart.

THERE is complaint in New York about the monotony of newspaper notices when German opera is the theme, and a suspicion seems to be abroad that the printers keep constantly "set up" such expressions as "Herr This displayed a faulty intonation," and "Frau That was out of tune the entire evening." The sameness may be wearisome, but if the critics tell the truth there should be no objection to stereotyping.

As a Radical Club band was recently marching to headquarters, playing "God save Ireland," two men, exclaiming "We will teach you to play that tune," made an attack upon the drummer and a banner-bearer, for which they were each fined twenty shillings and costs. It afterwards appeared that they had actually mistaken the air for another which was obnoxious to them. A little acquaintance with music should, in certain cases, precede a resort to fisticuffs.

THE French have as much difficulty in finding—by public competition—a composer for the Exhibition inaugural Cantata as we have in discovering a Mendelssohn scholar. A large number of musicians tried their hand at the libretto, but on examination it was found that not one had done anything worthy. An award was therefore refused. The competitors on their part plead that the words are barren of inspiration.

ACCORDING to an American journal, Mr. Frederic Archer has removed from New York to Milwaukee, where he finds a more general musical intelligence than in the East. He is further made responsible for the assertion that "the ripe musical knowledge of the people in Manitoba is simply amazing." "The march of empire," it has been said, "is for ever westward."

COMPETITORS for musical prizes, take warning by the following: The Quartet Society of Milan lately offered a reward for the best Orchestral Symphony, and received seventeen MSS. Of these only one was considered worthy, and that was disqualified through the carelessness of the composer, who appended to it his name instead of a motto. He will know better next time.

THE Germans object to a good deal that is French, but not to the French lyric stage. During a fortnight just passed three Gallic operas were performed in Berlin, two in Cassel, one in Darmstadt, five in Frankfort, four in Hamburg, three in Leipzig, two in Mannheim, and one in Schwerin. Here is a cheap and bloodless "revanche" for our sensitive neighbours.

MODERN progress in the art of putting things was well exemplified the other day by a writer who, discussing possible changes in a certain choir, remarked: "It is doubtful whether any new garments will be engaged to dust the seats at present."

THE following appears in an American journal: Prima Donna (proudly): "If that is the Prince at the door, tell him that the Queen of the opera stage has no desire to associate with mere princes." Maid: "It is not the Prince, madame, it is a soap manufacturer." Prima Donna: "Oh! admit him." The bearing of this, as Jack Bunsby was wont to observe, lies "in the application on't."

MR. OTTO SINGER, writing on the Philosophy of Music, begins thus: "Hanslick considers as non-æsthetic (inartistic) all emotions expressing subjective feeling of the composer, preceding the musical formation and reflected in the listener as physical nervous irritation, subjective emotion and moral effect, following the musical impression." The reader will now put the paper down and think it out.

It is a transatlantic poet who thus begins a poem on the late Jenny Lind:—

Whence com'st thou, Jenny Lind?
Looking thus, unkind'd, unkinde,
With the crowd of common natures—

and goes on to ask—

By what mortal nomenclature
Shall we call thee, glorious creature?

WE heartily wish that those who devote themselves to literature would either learn some smattering of music or refrain from speaking of it technically. Even in so clever a novel as Mrs. Alexander's "Which shall it be?" we read that a pianist "played a long piece with no particular tune, but a great many flats and sharps in it."

It may be presumed that the proprietor of the "Country Hotel," who advertises for a "Young lady pianist and vocalist willing to assist in bar," intends to convey to his customers that if they particularly wish the music and refreshments to be supplied by the same "Young lady," all orders must be given before the Concert begins.

A LEADING American contemporary, noticing Raff's Symphony "Lenore," observes: "In the fifteen years which have elapsed since Raff composed this Symphony, he has done nothing so utterly banal and vulgar as this march movement." Raff having been dead nearly seven years, this is a rash statement. How can the writer know?

THE tenor Wachtel has been celebrating his "jubilee." He is now sixty-five years old, and, in his period of decline, may boast of two things—first, that he climbed from the box of a hackney carriage to the operatic stage; next, that he sang the principal part in "Le Postillon de Lonjumeau" one thousand times.

It is a good idea to purchase the house in which Beethoven was born, at Bonn, restore it, as far as possible, to its original condition, and use it as a Beethoven museum. Something has been said to the effect that Professor Herkomer will help on this consummation, in June next, by contributing a performance of his new pictorial music-play.

MR. CAVAILLÉ-COLL is placing in the church of St. Gervais, Rouen, an organ, constructed, it is said, on an absolutely new mechanical system, which has given the most satisfactory results. Technical details are not at present forthcoming.

ALBONI, whose name now belongs to ancient operatic history, must be wonderfully well preserved. She celebrated her sixty-fifth birthday on the 10th ult., and sang several airs to her friends with a full resonant voice, displaying what the Ménestrel calls "son organe si chaud et toujours si souple, et son style admirable."

MADAME ALBANI'S Concert in Boston (Mass.) was a great success. After singing "Ah! fors è lui," she was recalled again and again, and, says the Morning Journal, "received several handsome floral tributes, occasioning on her part so many entrances to remove them that she was quite out of breath as she responded with 'Home, sweet home.'"

ADMIRERS of Dr. Mackenzie will be glad to know that arrangements are being made for the performance of his latest work, "The Dream of Jubal," at the Cincinnati Musical Festival next year. Also that the important Oratorio begun by him for the last Birmingham Festival will, in all probability, be completed for the next.

"ANOTHER Daniel come to judgment!" Scene: A Court of justice. Defendant (charged with annoying the neighbourhood by pianoforte playing), "Can't I do within my four walls what I please?" The Bench: "Oh, yes, but if you leave the windows open the fourth wall is lacking." Verdict for complainants.

HERE is something bitter from the Boston Transcript: "One of the benevolent Society fads is to give concerts for the benefit of the starving dogs of London. Very likely concerts for the starving poor of London will come round in time." Neat; but the insinuation is quite untrue.

SOME American papers are getting great amusement out of the fact that one of the most "savage" of Wagnerian partisans in New York is engaged at a boiler factory. He does not at all agree with those of his fellow citizens who object to be deafened by excess of noise.

So Tamberlik has followed the great tenors of the past along the way of all flesh. He died suddenly on the 13th ult., in Paris, where his last public appearance was made twelve years ago. Musical history will not place him in the front rank, but will record against his name that he had a good C sharp in alt.

AN idea for Mr. Mapleson comes from Russia, where an enterprising impresario is fitting up a floating theatre for use on the Volga. Cannot our own resourceful manager do the same here? He might then play English opera off Limehouse, and Wagnerian music-drama at Chelsea.

HISTORY is sometimes written after the following manner: "Mendelssohn was very commonly called Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, his wife being of the Bartholdy banker's family, of Frankfurt"! Poor Uncle Bartholdy, this is fame!

MANAGERS out in the wild West have to be careful how they treat their artists. In Silver City lately, one Miss Ada Hume, alias the Territorial Nightingale, had a difficulty with her chief, a certain Jack Brown. The coroner held an inquest on Brown.

SOME of the foreign journals are sarcastic about Madame Patti's "farewells." The Gazzetta Musicale of Milan, after announcing the artist's intention again to bid adieu, makes the terse comment "Da capo al segno."

AN advertisement recently appeared calling for an organist willing to "play for the love of Jesus." It is creditable to the religious character of organists in general that there were over forty applicants for the place on those terms.

WHEN another edition of Mr. Naumann's "History of Music" is called for, it might be as well, in the interest of political geography, to correct the following: "The Americans came not only from the United States, but from California."

THE musical critic of the Hampstead Advertiser needs to be informed that the composition "You stole my love," which he terms a "quaint old madrigal," is a part-song composed by Mr. Walter Macfarren, and that it was published about twenty years ago.

THE Americans would never accept such a time-wasting name as the Wind Instrument Chamber Music Society. They have a similar institution in New York, and call it the Reed Club.

NEWS for Mr. Arthur Chappell. We hear from Parma of a string quintet by Bottesini, "which is destined to evoke the applause of all who love good music." It should be heard here.

WE read of a certain organist that, as well as being a good musician, he has agreeable manners and "conversational perquisites." An explanation wanted.

THERE was an advertisement recently for a church tenor "of good moral character." The advertiser did not go so far as to stipulate for religion.

THE death of Felice Varesi is announced. Born in 1813, he rose to eminence as a baritone.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ON Ash Wednesday, the 6th ult., Gounod's "Redemption" was performed in the Albert Hall in place of "The Messiah," which for many years was given on the first day of Lent. No one will complain of the change, as Handel's masterpiece was performed on New Year's Day and will be again heard on Good Friday. A large audience assembled to hear the sacred trilogy, thus testifying to the abiding popularity of the work, as the cast of soloists was by no means so strong as those to which the public has been accustomed at the Albert Hall. The best was Mr. Watkin Mills, who sang the music allotted to the representative of The Redeemer with the deep expression and earnestness it demands. Miss Robertson's voice is scarcely powerful enough to fill such a large building, and the lovely air with chorus "From Thy love as a Father" did not therefore create quite its usual effect, though she sang with taste. Mr. Charles Banks and Mr. R. Hilton were the Narrators. Mr. Barnby's splendid body of singers were in their finest form, and pure intonation was maintained even in the trying passages in diminished sevenths in the "Lamentations." Mr. Barnby took the "March to Calvary" at a somewhat slower pace than usual, greatly to the enhancement of its dignity and impressiveness.

NOVELLO'S ORATORIO CONCERTS.

THE "Dream of Jubal," the new work written by Mr. Joseph Bennett and Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, was performed with great success on February 26, at St. James's Hall. Though written for a special occasion—the Jubilee of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society, recently celebrated—it will, certainly, be brought into general use by our musical societies in town and country, as it presents features of novelty as well as merits of a sound and an enduring nature. In selecting the Scriptural character, Jubal, as the subject of his poem, Mr. Joseph Bennett displayed more than ordinary courage, since so little is known of our musical ancestor, all that is recorded being that "He was the father of all such as handle the harp and pipe" (Gen. iv. 21). But, relying upon the rich resources of imagination, the librettist accepted this bare statement of the Bible historian as a foundation upon which to rest a structure of fancy. In the story Jubal is discovered as he, on a morning in spring-time, is leaving his tent. Wandering on, he half-unconsciously touches the strings of his chorded-shell, at the sounds whereof Nature is hushed into silence. But as the music of man ceases Nature raises a song such as to lead Jubal to deplore the poverty of art as exemplified by his own feeble strains. Whilst in this desponding mood a deep sleep falls upon him, and he dreams a dream, wherein an Angel comes to reveal to the disconsolate father of music the after development of the art. Within the lines of this poetic framework are to be found in profusion thoughts tender, pure, and noble, expressed in language at once appropriate and elevated. That the author of the words has held his fancy under due restraint is apparent by the exclusion of all materials irrelevant, and therefore unacceptable to the composer of the music. Indeed, the collaborateurs, Mr. Bennett and Dr. Mackenzie, have in this instance evinced such unity of purpose as to realise the principle so strenuously advocated by the advanced school, that music should spring from none other than a poetic basis. Whether the ideas and sayings of the poet were so suggestive and fruitful as to call forth full response from the musician, or whether the latter has to an unusual degree the capacity of assimilating the notions presented him, is a question which needs no answer in the presence of a work in which perfect agreement is everywhere exemplified.

Though accompanied recitation is no novelty, inasmuch as Mendelssohn and others have largely made use of the device when illustrating spoken words, yet it has never been so fully developed as it is now by Dr. Mackenzie. The lyrical numbers, distinct from each other in every respect, are united by blank verse of a nature which demanded special treatment. To this fact we are indebted for music of a very interesting and singularly attractive order. An instrumental movement of a pastoral character commences the work. The voice of the declaimer is attended in every change of thought and circumstance by themes which seem to flow spontaneously from the spoken word. As the celestial visitant is about to reveal to the eyes of Jubal the interior of a vast cathedral, with its white robed choristers, a well-known passage from Handel's "Hallelujah" Chorus suggests the thought that "He shall reign for ever and ever." The Reciter pauses, and now breaks forth from the united orchestra in strains of ecstasy, "Gloria in excelsis Deo." Perhaps Dr. Mackenzie has never reached a higher level of art than that attained in this magnificent composition, wherein modern modes of expression are allied to that solemnity of utterance heard in the past. Now the hearer is told how that the Angel, waving his golden palm-branch, calls before the dreamer, in place of the lofty edifice, a lowly dwelling darkened by the overshadowing wings of the Angel of Death. In describing the sorrow of that home a fughetta is utilised; the subject is to the listener affecting, and the treatment throughout impressive. The air, in which words of consolation are embodied, is written for the soprano voice, and leads eventually to a passage of triumph as the singer proclaims victory over death and the grave. A very different view now meets the gaze of the dreamer, for, at the summons of the Angel, the street of a vast city is seen filled by an immense multitude awaiting the return home of a conquering army. With consummate skill the animation witnessed is musically illustrated. The bustle of citizens hurrying to take possession of places of advantage, the gradual approach of the victors headed by their leader clearing a way through the seething currents of humanity, the passage of the mighty host through the city, all this in forcible colours is set forth in this admirable tone-picture. The Triumphal March and Chorus will doubtless be classed amongst the most popular numbers of the work. Resuming the story the Reciter dwells lovingly upon a simple cheerful scene which the Angel is spreading before the enraptured eye of the dreamer. The orchestral accompaniments again, by happily-chosen devices, suggest to the mind of the auditor rural delights, nor is the pleasure lessened when the harvesters, after partaking of their noon-day meal, place a half-reluctant youth in their midst to sing a ditty in praise of the sickle. Dr. Mackenzie, dealing with the rustic subject in a natural and jovial manner, has here given us a thoroughly characteristic song. These sights depart to give place, so willed the Angel, to a scene of deep solemnity. The city street, lately thronged with a rejoicing crowd, is now occupied by a grief-stricken multitude, assembled to pay tributes of sorrow as the lifeless body of a beloved chief is borne through their midst to its last resting-place amongst the honoured dead. There is deep pathos in the themes of the Funeral March and Chorus, the tender melodies and solemn harmonies affect the listener to an unwonted degree. The Angel, vouchsafing no other scene, ends his mission by bidding ministrants to regale the ear of Jubal with a Song of Love. Awakening out of sleep, Jubal decks with flowers his chorded-shell, and, standing before the altar, dedicates the "wondrous gift" to the service of God.

Under the direction of the composer, Dr. Mackenzie, the "Dream of Jubal" was performed in a manner reflecting honour on all concerned. At the outset the choir asserted its strength in the "Gloria in excelsis Deo." Every section of this extended and complicated piece was given with unwavering accuracy and never-failing power, while the delivery of the chorus attached to the Funeral March was marked by true intonation and good phrasing; and in the Finale, "O music, voice inspired of all our joy," the choristers sang with amazing vigour. The instrumentalists, led by Mr. Carrodus, interpreted the orchestral score with great ability. Mr. Edward Lloyd's splendid tones lent charm to the rustic ditty, "The Song of the Sickle," which he rendered in a style that gave prominence to the quaint rhythm of the piece. The audience strongly wished to have it repeated, but the composer and the executant were content to bow again and again. The soprano solo, "The Lord is good," was sung in a very intelligent manner by Miss Macintyre, whom indisposition alone prevented from making as great a success as at Liverpool in the same part; while Miss Lizzie Neal and Mr. Andrew Black assisted in the concerted music. To Mr. Charles Fry was assigned most important duties, since he was held responsible for the whole of Mr. Joseph Bennett's blank verse, which he declaimed with a keen appreciation of the ever varying beauty of the superb lines, never mistaking their true significance nor failing in the expression demanded. At the termination of the "Dream of Jubal" Dr. Mackenzie received an ovation.

The new Cantata was preceded by Mr. Saint-Saëns's Psalm, "The heavens declare"—a work introduced to metropolitan notice some time ago, and then, as now, accepted as one of its versatile composer's best efforts in a school and in a style with regard to which his compatriots have made few successes. The French master's solid and musicianly piece was well received, the favourite numbers being, again, the male-voice quartet "Right are the statutes" and the quintet "More to be desired are they." The vocalists taking part in this work were Miss Liza Lehmann (who was heartily applauded after her solo), Miss Monteith, Mr. Lloyd, Messrs. Andrew Black, D. Hughes, Lucas Williams, and L. Huxtable.

Determined upon holding out the interest of novelty to the public, the directors of these Concerts followed up their production of Dr. Mackenzie's "Dream of Jubal" by presenting, on the 19th ult., Mr. Dudley Buck's Cantata the "Light of Asia." Thanks to his very successful song "When the heart is young," amateurs have long had a nodding acquaintance with Mr. Buck, but not till the occasion of this performance did the American composer appear in his true proportions as a writer of works large in dimensions and ambitious in character. We in this country ought to know more of American music, albeit, as yet, there is nothing distinctive about it, and perchance, knowledge of the "Light of Asia" will shortly be followed by acquaintance with other examples of the fact that all our cousins across the water are not given up to the pursuit of grossly material interests, such as making "corners" and syndicates.

The "Light of Asia," composed in 1886, is founded upon Sir Edwin Arnold's well-known poem of the same name, extracts from which form the libretto. We do not wonder that Mr. Buck was attracted by the beautiful story of the "great renunciation," or that the poetry, about which there is a touch of Eastern imagination and colouring, made him willing to run the risk of dealing with a narrative in blank verse. Libretti of this sort are always difficult. They handicap the composer by monotony of rhythm, while whatever dramatic qualities they possess are encumbered with the forms and manner of a story told in the third person. Happily, the "Light of Asia" is better suited for musical treatment than most of its kind. The situations are striking, and the dialogue quoted by the Narrator is abundant enough for a measure of dramatic impersonation and characterisation. By taking full advantage of these aids, and by interpolating lyrical passages from other of Sir Edwin Arnold's Indian works, Mr. Buck largely overcame the difficulties of the course he had marked out, and secured a book in which the interest of the story is rivalled only by the beauty of its language.

In the general plan of his music, Mr. Buck has followed orthodox models, his only concession to "advanced" practices being a liberal and, as many think, inordinate use of representative themes, more especially of two, standing, one for the idea of Buddha, the other for the sympathy and love out of which the whole story springs. These are rarely absent long together, and their almost continuous employment in primitive form becomes, we are bound to say, a little wearisome ere the end is reached. Otherwise we have in the "Light of Asia" a Cantata built upon the lines of kindred works by Schumann, Mendelssohn, and their contemporaries, under whose artistic influence Mr. Buck received his training at Leipzig. In further examining the Cantata it quickly appears that attention is claimed chiefly by the choruses and the orchestral music. The book afforded scarcely any opportunity for pure lyrics in the form of airs (though there is one developed duet), and the solos are chiefly continuations of the narrative treated in declamatory style. This difficulty Mr. Buck has to a large extent overcome by the special propriety of the declamatory phrases, the use, wherever possible, of pleasing cantabile, and interesting employment of the orchestra, which forms a distinct source of charm. Nevertheless, the principal attraction of the work lies in its concerted numbers, which are numerous, effective, and, at the same time, easy enough for a recommendation of the Cantata to choral societies all the country over. In the structure of the choruses there is very little contrapuntal elaboration. Here and there a point of imitation and a fughetto or two satisfy the composer in this respect, he preferring to get his effects through harmony and colour. To this end he often writes in simplest fashion for the voices, avoiding rather than seeking the conspicuous freedom of modern treatment, without, however, being archaic, and employing the orchestra, with judgment and conspicuous success, as the source of aught else necessary to complete the design. Some of the choruses are masterpieces of their unpretending kind. We refer especially to the Spring-song, "O come and see the pleasure of the Spring," the beautiful march and chorus "Now flock Kapilavastu's maidens," the bright Wedding hymn, "Enter, thrice happy," and the dreamy, voluptuous "Softly the Indian night," in which poetry and music are wedded on terms of perfect equality. These numbers, and others that might be named, carry on the interest of the Cantata, which we may accept as in all respects fitted for wide and general use amongst us with advantage to the public taste.

The performance, conducted ably and with painstaking care by Dr. Mackenzie, brought all the merits of the work to light. Both orchestra and chorus were equal to the demands upon them, while the soloists, Madame Nordica, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Andrew Black, did exceptionally good service, the last-named artist making clear his pretensions to rank among the most rising baritones of the day. Although the "Light of Asia" did not startle its audience, it held their attention to the end—a feat which, accomplished by legitimate means, is in these days equivalent almost to a triumph.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THIS venerable institution entered upon its seventy-seventh season on the 14th ult., and made a remarkably good beginning; the public attending in number sufficient to exhaust the capacity of St. James's Hall, while the performance, conducted by Dr. Mackenzie in the absence of Mr. Cowen, was altogether worthy of the Society's renown. The hero of the evening was unquestionably Mr. Grieg, the heroine being Mr. Grieg's wife, who sang, in her own unique and most artistic fashion, a selection from her husband's songs, he accompanying with such delicacy and poetic feeling as drew almost an unfair measure of attention to the pianoforte. The Norwegian master further conducted a performance of his Suite in four movements, made up from incidental music to Rosen's "Peer Gynt," and called by the name of that drama. Amateurs will have in mind that this Suite was introduced at the London Symphony Concerts last November, but then heard under the disadvantage of no key to the meaning of the music and apart from the composer's supervision. Under Mr. Grieg's direction, helped by general knowledge of the dramatic significance of the various numbers, the work appeared at its best, making a genuine "sensation." The performance was most masterly, the splendid Philharmonic orchestra seconding the Composer-conductor to a marvel. No more striking and picturesque effects have been produced in our concert-rooms for a long time. Miss Geisler-Schubert's execution of Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto proved a sad disappointment of the hopes excited at her previous Recital in Princes' Hall. Owing to the cause, possibly, of indisposition or over-anxiety the pianist did not give a satisfactory reading of the work. It is fair to say, however, that she did better with her great uncle's Impromptu in F minor. The purely orchestral selections at this Concert were Sterndale Bennett's charming Overture "Parisina"—a work memorable, in one sense, as causing the life-long estrangement of its composer and the late Sir Michael Costa; noteworthy, in another and a better sense, for its characteristic elegance and beauty. Beethoven's Fourth Symphony occupied the place of honour, and Dr. Mackenzie's masterly Scottish Rhapsody, entitled "Burns," closed the programme. These works had an adequate rendering, and were loudly applauded.

It may here be added that the Society entered upon its new season with a guarantee fund approaching £2,500. Since this time last year, three members—Mr. H. Baumer, Dr. W. H. Monk, Mr. Sydney Smith, and one female associate—Mrs. Phillips—have passed away.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

MR. HENSCHEL brought his enterprise to a brilliant conclusion on the afternoon of February 27. London amateurs have heard much concerning the merits of Yorkshire singers, especially those of Leeds, but the experiment of bringing a choral force to the metropolis to take part in a Concert at St. James's Hall had not been made until Mr. Henschel boldly undertook it at considerable cost to himself. It should be stated, however, in contradiction of a widely circulated error, that it was a portion of the Leeds Philharmonic Choir, and not the Festival Choir, which took part in the performance above-mentioned, the latter body having no corporate existence apart from its duties at the triennial gatherings, after each of which it is disbanded. This is simply a matter of explanation, not of apology, for none whatever is needed on behalf of the 164 choraleists who came to London under Mr. Alfred Broughton. The performance of Mendelssohn's "First Walpurgis Night" showed of what mettle they were made, and that of the choral portion of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony was unquestionably the finest ever heard in London. The bright tone of the sopranos was marvellously effective in the sustained high notes, and the volume of sound produced by the forty-two basses was equally remarkable. Another important feature was the splendid attack, the utmost possible effect being given to every entry by the unanimity of the singers. It should be added that Mr. Broughton conducted Mendelssohn's work, and Mr. Henschel the Symphony. The solo parts in the latter were worthily sustained by Miss Fillinger, Miss Lena Little, Mr. Orlando Harley, and Mr. Max Heinrich. We are pleased to learn that there is a prospect of these Concerts being continued, a committee having been formed to raise a guarantee fund to sustain Mr. Henschel against loss. Certain reforms in matters of detail are advisable, of which the committee will doubtless take cognisance.

THE BACH CHOIR.

THIS valuable Association is now in its fourteenth season and happily shows no sign of decay. It has been necessary at times to observe that the master whose name it bears was unduly thrust aside in favour of modern composers, and we can, therefore, unreservedly praise the selection offered at the first Concert this season, held at St. James's Hall, on the 5th ult. Bach occupied the entire evening, the vocal works of the Leipzig Cantor being associated with some of his instrumental pieces, in which the inestimable co-operation of Dr. Joachim was secured. Two of the innumerable Church Cantatas were included. The second in the order of the programme, though the earliest in the period of composition, was "Halt im Gedächtniss," written for the octave of Easter Day, known in the English Liturgy as Low Sunday, probably in the early years of Bach's sojourn in Leipzig. It is a very vigorous example of this period, and contains some of those striking proofs of the master's skill in the dramatic style of which we have so many in the "St. Matthew" and the "St. John" Passions. The most remarkable number is a so-called Arie, in which the basses sing the greeting of Christ, "Peace be unto you," in 3-4 measure, while the Church responds appealingly in entirely different music in common time. The tenor air, with accompaniment for oboe d'amore, "My Jesus hath arisen," is in the composer's brightest style, and the opening fugal chorus, with a quaint effect produced by the long sustained note on the word "Hold," is equally worthy of note. Far more remarkable for modern feeling and expression, however, is the other Cantata, "Wachet auf," of which Spitta speaks in eloquent terms. According to this greatest of all authorities on Bach, the work was written for the rarely occurring 27th Sunday after Trinity, in 1731. It is founded on an old German Chorale, of which Mendelssohn makes such effective use in "St. Paul," but Bach's treatment is far more varied and elaborate. There are six numbers in all, three of which consist of a special treatment of the verses in chorale form. The first is given out by the soprano as a Canto fermo, while the part-writing for the other voices is florid. The next is allotted to the tenors in unison, while the strings accompany in a theme of great beauty and expressiveness, and the third is harmonised simply for four voices. Between these verses are two duets for soprano and baritone, the first expressing the longing of the Church for the Advent of Christ, the heavenly Bridegroom, and the second, the joy of perfect union. The first of these resembles the air "Have mercy upon me" in the "Matthew" Passion Music, even to the extent of a violin obbligato. The second is charmingly melodious and graceful, justifying Spitta's description of it as a spiritualised love duet. The choir sang efficiently in both Cantatas, and was heard to even greater advantage in the magnificent unaccompanied Motet in eight parts, "Singet dem Herrn." The pure quality of the voices, the steady attack, and the maintenance of the pitch were worthy of much praise. Of Dr. Joachim's rendering of the Violin Concerto in A minor, and the Sonata in G minor, it is only necessary to say that the great artist has never played more finely. The entire Concert was an artistic success, and much credit is due to Professor Villiers Stanford, who conducted with the utmost tact and judgment.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

QUIETNESS has been the distinguishing feature of these Concerts during the past month, the proportion of novelty in the programmes being surprisingly small for Sydenham. On the 2nd ult. Beethoven's Choral Symphony overshadowed everything else in the scheme. It is worthy of note that the gigantic work was given three days earlier in St. James's Hall, for, although the Ninth Symphony is now heard far more frequently than in former years, two performances in one week is still a rare occurrence. Comparisons, of course, were inevitable, and with regard to the orchestral movements they were all in favour of the Crystal Palace. Mr. Manns's orchestra was evidently on its mettle and it is impossible to imagine a finer interpretation. The choir must be complimented for its good intentions. London amateur singers have not the same physique as their Yorkshire brethren, but, at any rate, they can display earnestness in their work, and this the Crystal Palace Choir did with success in all but a few exceptionally trying passages. Miss Fillunger, Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Charles Chillely, and Mr. Watkin Mills were quite equal to their duties in the solo parts. An interesting feature of the Concert was the performance for the first time of Berlioz's "Marche Funèbre pour la dernière scène d'Hamlet," one of three pieces entitled "Tristia," composed in 1848. The composer was at the time in a melancholy mood, being profoundly affected by the horrors of the French Revolution in that year, and the companion pieces are a "Méditation Religieuse" and "La Mort d'Ophélie." They are described as being for choir with orchestra, but in the Hamlet funeral march the singers have merely to sing "Ah!" six times in the course of the movement. The effect is peculiar and impressive and the music generally is in Berlioz's most original vein. On another occasion, perhaps, Mr. Manns will permit us to hear the other numbers of the set. It should be added that the vocalists above-named contributed well chosen songs, but there was nothing to require individual mention.

Of the next two Concerts there is very little to be said. The programme of the 9th ult. included two works, for the first time at Sydenham—namely, Dr. J. F. Bridge's Overture "La Mort d'Arthur" and Brahms's Symphony (No. 4) in E minor. The former was first performed in Birmingham, next in Bristol, and in London at the Symphony Concerts, and also by the Westminster Orchestral Society. We have dealt fully with the work on the two last-named occasions and have nothing to add to the opinions then recorded. It may be noted that "G" declares that Dr. Bridge has followed Tennyson's poem step by step, and he therefore identifies every phrase as having some poetic significance. If this be so, the composer should abandon once and for all such an artificial method of procedure. With the exception of the beautiful slow movement, the Symphony did not greatly please. For direct inspiration the work is of less value than any of the earlier Symphonies, though it is a monumental example of mere musicianship. Mozart and Beethoven knew how to combine the one with the other; Brahms, less gifted, sometimes succeeds, and sometimes, as in the present instance, fails. Of Madame Néruda's rendering of Beethoven's Violin Concerto it would be difficult to speak too highly. Often as the artist has played the work she has never realised its beauty and power more fully than on this occasion. Mr. Plunket Greene created an extremely favourable impression in an air from Handel's "Berenice" and two of Dr. Villiers Stanford's Collection of old Irish melodies.

With one exception the programme of the 16th consisted of works familiar to musicians as household words. It is certainly unnecessary to criticise Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony or the Overtures to "Oberon" and "Die Meistersinger." Raff's Concerto in D for violoncello (Op. 193) had been played but once before by Signor Piatti thirteen years ago. It is well written for the principal instrument, and, as usual with Raff, the themes are simple and tuneful, but the writing generally is second-rate. The present executant was Mr. Ernest Gillet, who played remarkably well; tone, phrasing, and intonation being alike satisfactory. Mr. Lloyd sang airs by Gluck and Dvorák in his customary matchless style.

By a curious coincidence—we do not suppose it was anything more—not one of the great masters was represented in the programme of the 23rd ult. Indeed, the whole of the orchestral works belong to the domain of programme music, two of them being novelties. Mr. Prout's new Overture in E, entitled "Rokeby," is, it is true, not to be regarded simply as a musical illustration of Scott's poem; very wisely the composer has thrown his ideas into classical form, and left his hearers to attach any meaning they please to them, or to regard them as "pure" music. We prefer the latter course, and can thus praise the Overture without qualification. Its general character is energetic and almost fierce, but the gentle and tender second subject affords the necessary relief. The scoring is very rich and full, the composer making free use of brass and percussion, as befits his subject. The other novelty was Mr. Saint-Saëns's symphonic poem "Phaëton," a wild, cleverly scored, but vulgar piece, more suited to Promenade Concerts than the Crystal Palace. A splendid performance was given of Raff's "Lenore" Symphony, the beautiful slow movement being especially well played. With regard to the rendering of Liszt's Piano-forte Concerto in A, by Mr. Stavenhagen, no praise could be too high. The enormous difficulties of the work did not seem to affect the young performer in the least, and it is certain that in this class of music, at any rate, Mr. Stavenhagen has no superior.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

At the Chamber Concert given by the Students of the Royal Academy of Music in St. James's Hall, on the afternoon of the 4th ult., the programme and the performance were alike excellent. The introduction of Wesley's beautiful and devotional Anthem "Blessed be the Lord God" is an indication of the desire of the Principal, Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, to promote as far as possible the study of the masterworks of the composers in a school which is especially English. The choir sang the Anthem well and expressively, as they did also two cleverly-written part-songs by Mr. G. J. Bennett, Mus. Bac., Cantab., a former student of the Academy. The programme also included a song composed by Miss Rose Meyer, written in a style of much originality, and an extremely interesting set of Variations on a theme in F, for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello, the work of Miss Amy Horrocks. The knowledge of the capabilities of the several instruments shown in the work, and the manner in which they are employed, are most creditable to the taste and musicianship of the composer. The vocal solos were very good, and their performance was highly appreciated; Miss Greta Williams, a pupil of Mr. E. Holland, gaining especial favour for her interpretation of Gluck's "Che farò"; and Miss Ethel Barns, a pupil of M. Sainton, by her performance of Ernst's "Elegie," exhibiting considerable ability as a violinist. Dr. A. C. Mackenzie conducted the Concert.

WESTMINSTER ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY.

We have already referred to the interesting scheme put forward by this Society for the present season, and have now to notice briefly the second of the three Concerts of English music, which was given in the Westminster Town Hall on the 13th ult. Apart from the new Symphony by Mr. C. Stewart Macpherson, which gave special importance to the occasion, the scheme was admirable. For example, Dr. A. C. Mackenzie conducted his Violin Concerto, the executant being Miss Winifred Robinson, who gave, on the whole, a highly creditable reading of the work. Mention should also be made of Mr. Walter Macfarren's Pastoral Overture, Miss Ethel Boyce's brilliant March in E, and two new songs by Mr. Ernest Birch. The Symphony of Mr. Macpherson is extremely well-written, though the first, second, and fourth movements are too reminiscent of Wagner to be generally acceptable. The Scherzo is superior to the rest of the work in freshness of thematic material, and the scoring for the wind is excellent. On the whole the Symphony is a work of considerable promise, and the composer may be encouraged to persevere. The playing of the orchestra was a considerable advance on the previous Concert.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE fact should be recorded that in the programmes of the nine Concerts of which we have to make mention this month, there was only one addition to the repertory and not a single work by an English composer. We make this statement in no carping spirit, but merely with the view of calling attention to the indifference of the public with respect to novelties and also to the claims of native art. At some future time it may be different, but at present those who make it their business to show that English music is worth hearing must be satisfied with reaping honour; they will gain no material reward. The latter comes rather to a public caterer who is fortunate enough to secure a musical "lion," as was shown on February 25, when the appearance of Mr. Grieg had the effect of crowding St. James's Hall in all parts. The trifling pieces played by the popular Norwegian composer were not very interesting, but the delightful Sonata in F, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 8), was a welcome item, and Madame Grieg's rendering of five of the Lieder was equally appreciated. Dvorák's beautiful and original Quartet in E flat (Op. 51) and Beethoven's Trio in G (Op. 9, No. 2) completed the programme.

The appearance of Madame de Pachmann as pianist was the most interesting feature of the Concert of Saturday, the 2nd ult. She played Raff's Prelude and Fugue (Op. 72)—the first and last movements of a Suite of which the remaining sections are equally worthy of a hearing—and other pieces by Rubinstein and Weber. The concerted works were Brahms's magnificent Sextet in G (Op. 36), Mozart's Duet in G, for violin and viola, and Chopin's Introduction and Polonaise for pianoforte and violoncello. Miss Liza Lehmann sang Dessauer's "Le Retour des Promis" with much charm of style. Attention may be called to an error which always occurs in the analytical programme when a work of Chopin's is performed. It is said that the Polish Songs are published as Op. 47, the number of the Ballade in A flat. That is not so; the Polish Songs are numbered Op. 74.

The re-appearance of Dr. Joachim is still an event of interest, and a large audience assembled on Monday, the 4th ult., to welcome the great Hungarian violinist. The programme on such an occasion would scarcely be complete without a Rasoumowsky Quartet, and the choice this time fell upon the work in E minor (Op. 59, No. 2). Of the rendering it is surely unnecessary to say anything; until Dr. Joachim's powers begin to wane, which happily is not yet, criticism in his case is out of place. For his solo he modestly selected the Adagio from Spohr's sixth Concerto and, for an encore, a Scherzo by the same composer. Three rather dry studies by Henselt were correctly played by Miss Zimmermann, and Haydn's Quartet in B flat (Op. 64, No. 5) concluded the Concert. Miss Liza Lehmann was again the vocalist, her selections being Gordigiani's lively air "O Santissima Vergine," and two well written songs by Miss Maude White.

On the following Saturday Mr. Grieg again appeared, and every seat in St. James's Hall could have been sold twice over. Every square foot of standing room had its occupant and the room presented a remarkable appearance. To musicians the most interesting item in the programme was the Sonata in G minor (Op. 13), for pianoforte and violin, which was given for the first time at these Concerts. The work, like its companions, is in three movements, all of nearly equal merit and full of Scandinavian character, though rather unsatisfactory as regards development. Each movement is a series of themes, rather than a homogeneous structure. The charm of the melodies themselves, however, affords compensation for this defect, and the Sonata, as played by the composer and Dr. Joachim, excited much enthusiasm. Mr. Grieg also played his clever Suite "Aus Holberg's Zeit," and Madame Grieg was heard in five of the songs, which, as usual, she rendered to perfection. Mozart's Quintet in D commenced the Concert and Mendelssohn's fragments of a Quartet brought it to a conclusion.

The attendance on the following Monday was almost equally large, the programme being one of the most attractive Mr. Chappell could arrange. The co-operation of Madame Néruda and Dr. Joachim in Bach's double Violin Concerto in D minor naturally interested the public, as it has done on former occasions, and the performance stimulated the audience to such a pitch of enthusiasm that the artists eventually gave way to the demands for an encore, and repeated the beautiful Largo, one of the most expressive movements Bach has ever penned. The performance of Schumann's "Faschingschwank aus Wien," by Miss Fanny Davies, was admirable, and deserved all the applause it received. Beethoven's concise but thoroughly characteristic Quartet in F minor (Op. 95) and Mozart's familiar Sonata in A, for pianoforte and violin, completed the instrumental items. Miss Marguerite Hall showed how rapidly she is improving as a vocalist in Gluck's fine air "Divinités du Styx" and songs by Henschel and Brahms.

Little need be said concerning the Concert of Saturday, the 16th ult. The concerted works were Beethoven's Quartet in C minor (Op. 18, No. 4), Schumann's Pianoforte Trio in F (Op. 80), and Spohr's Duo Concertante in A minor, for violin and viola (Op. 67, No. 1), the executants in the last-named work being Messrs. Joachim and Straus. Mlle. Janotha was the pianist, and she has never appeared to greater advantage than in Beethoven's so-called Pastoral Sonata. Why, however, she should have preluded on "Auld Lang Syne," or puzzled the audience by giving Beethoven's Variations on "God save the Queen" as an encore, it is difficult to say. The vocalist was Miss Fillunger, who gave great satisfaction in Lieder by Schubert and Brahms.

Almost equally familiar was the programme of Monday, the 18th ult. It is certainly quite unnecessary to inform the readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES of the merits of Mozart's Quintet in G minor, or of Tartini's Sonata, "Il Trillo Del Diavolo," which Dr. Joachim plays once, it not twice, every season. Schumann's Sonata in A minor, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 105), is less familiar, but it is rapidly coming into favour. Though penned at the time when symptoms of mental decay had already appeared, Schumann never wrote more melodious and spontaneous music. The Sonata was beautifully played by Madame de Pachmann and Dr. Joachim. The pianist contented herself with three of Chopin's Etudes, in which she displayed excellent touch and finger work generally. Mr. Santley was encored in Sullivan's song "Thou'rt passing hence," and he also introduced a clever and characteristic "Magyar Song," by Felix Semon.

On the following Saturday Mendelssohn's early Quintet in A (Op. 18) and Beethoven's Sonata in C minor, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 30, No. 2), were the most important works in the scheme. Dr. Joachim played his favourite Schumann transcriptions, "Gartenlied," and "Am Springbrunnen," from the four-hand pieces (Op. 85); and Miss Zimmermann, who is now almost the only leading pianist who plays Sterndale Bennett's music, afforded a lesson to students by her artistic rendering of his Sketches, "The Lake, Millstream, and Fountain." Mr. Santley was the vocalist, and among his selections was an elegant setting of verses, "The Lover's Appeal," from Sir Thomas Wyatt's poems, by Signor Piatti, who has added an obbligato for violoncello. He was afterwards encored in Schumann's "Ich grolle nicht."

A very attractive though brief programme filled St. James's Hall on Monday, the 25th ult. Brahms's Sextet in B flat (Op. 18), the earliest of the composer's works ever introduced at the Popular Concerts, is now one of the most generally appreciated pieces in the repertory. The vigorous Scherzo was as usual encored, and the performance generally was as near perfection as possible. Of Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata for pianoforte and violin, nothing need be said except to record a very fine rendering by Miss Fanny Davies and Dr. Joachim. The gifted young pianist had a very easy task in her solo, Mendelssohn's Andante and Variations in E flat (Op. 82). Miss Marguerite Hall rendered songs by Maude White and Kjerulf with success.

WIND INSTRUMENT CONCERTS.

WHILE the popularity of chamber music for pianoforte and strings has vastly increased of late years, the many works written by the great masters for wind instruments are for the most part neglected. With the laudable object of bringing them under notice, an Association has been formed with the title of the Wind Instrument Chamber Music Society. Its aims are not only to give Concerts, but to promote the publication of works and to offer prizes for compositions. Thus a prize is now offered of twenty guineas for a Quintet for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and horn, and the particulars of the competition will be found in our advertisement columns for March. Three Concerts are to be given this season at the Royal Academy of Music, and the first of these took place on Friday, the 22nd ult. Three works were given—namely, Beethoven's bright and tuneful Quintet in E flat (Op. 16), a charming Quintet, in the same key, by Mozart, and a very piquant and attractive Sonata, bearing the title of "Undine," for pianoforte and flute, by Reinecke. The executants were—flute, Mr. Vivian; oboe, Mr. Malsch; clarinet, Mr. G. A. Clinton; horn, Mr. Borsdorf; bassoon, Mr. T. Wotton; and pianoforte, Mr. Eugene Dubruc; the performances being all that could be desired. Equal praise is due to Mr. Max Heinrich for his expressive rendering of an interesting selection of songs by Mr. Charles H. Lloyd, Kalliwoda, and Brahms. We wish the Society every success in its excellent undertaking.

MR. GRIEG'S RECITAL.

THE favour in which Mr. Grieg and his music are held by the public was never more clearly displayed than on the afternoon of the 20th ult., when, at a few days' notice, an audience almost filling St. James's Hall assembled to listen to a programme consisting of solo pieces and duets from the pen of the Norwegian composer. The most important item was the Sonata in C minor, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 45), which had only been heard once or twice before in London, and not at all at the Popular Concerts. The first movement of the work is satisfactory as to construction, but the themes have scarcely as much spontaneity as is usual with Grieg. The next movement, a Romanza, with an alternative section of a livelier character, is, however, in his best vein, and there is some piquant writing in the Finale. The work was beautifully rendered by the composer and Mr. Johannes Wolff, the pure refined style of the violinist being exactly suited to the music. Madame Grieg, with whose skill as a vocalist we are well acquainted, proved herself equally capable as a pianist in the charming Norwegian Dances (Op. 35). These little four-hand pieces are among Grieg's happiest efforts. The composer played his "Suite in the Old Style" and some smaller pieces, and Madame Grieg was twice encored in a selection of the songs.

A NEW OPERA BY ANTONIN DVORÁK.

ON February 13 a new opera by Antonin Dvorák, entitled "The Jacobin," was produced for the first time at the National Bohemian Theatre of Prague, and was received with the greatest enthusiasm by the composer's countrymen. In a sympathetic article on the subject from the pen of the well-known Dresden critic, Herr Ludwig Hartmann, contained in a recent issue of the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik, the writer says, inter alia:—"A musician who, like Dvorák, has already gained so considerable a reputation, must needs possess much strength of character in concentrating his efforts upon a work, the appreciation of which, on account of the language whereto its music is wedded, has to be confined within narrow limits. In this sense, Dvorák, Smetana, Bendl, and Fibich are, indeed, great patriots. They have created a national Bohemian art, and it will not be long before this fact will be more generally comprehended outside their own country. . . . Dvorák's new work 'The Jacobin' may be described as a musical opera. It is true, every opera should be musical. But it may, perhaps, be permissible to distinguish between scenic operas, vocal operas, and musical operas. Every musician will understand what is meant. Thus the charm of Dvorák's new work consists in the exceedingly beautiful orchestration and in the masterly treatment of its forms. 'The Jacobin' is, indeed, a comic opera, with songs, choruses, duets, &c., of a more or less popular type, but they are not rigidly separated from each other, and the work, in its totality, betrays the influence not only of Wagner, but of the new German School generally. Not by any means, however, to the extent of imitation; the national Czech element is much too pronounced for that. But whereas Brahms makes a distinct stand against Wagnerian precepts, his friend Dvorák, in his capacity of dramatic composer, does not disdain to profit by the wealth of characteristic expression and variation of colour for which we are indebted to Wagner. Indeed, in proportion to the importance of its subject, too much has been done, perhaps, for 'The Jacobin' in the way of orchestral effects and polyphonic devices, however masterly. The libretto (from the pen of the daughter of the veteran leader of the Czech party, Rieger) deals with the conflict arising between a Bohemian Conservative nobleman and his son who, whilst residing in the French capital (1793), has been denounced to the father as having joined the 'Jacobins.' The young noble, however, far from having become a revolutionary, succeeds in refuting the false accusations of his enemies, and, returning to his ancestral home, a reconciliation takes place and all ends happily. In view of this peaceful catastrophe, the son's grief, the fury of his enemies, the parental wrath, are here depicted in colours somewhat too sombre, and appertaining more properly to opera seria. Altogether enchanting, inexhaustible in their melodiousness and quaintness of rhythm, however, are the brighter portions of the work, accompanied as they are by the running commentary of an orchestra à la 'Meistersinger.' . . . With an almost culpable prudishness the composer—ignoring his special gift in this direction—has abstained from the use of the national dance-music in his new opera. There can be no doubt, however, that by virtue of his easy command of the voices, the originality of his harmonies, and the masterly treatment of the orchestra, Dvorák must be placed in the front rank of contemporary composers."

MR. MAX PAUER'S RECITAL.

THE Princes' Hall was well filled on the afternoon of the 7th ult., when Mr. Max Pauer gave a Pianoforte Recital. A better programme could not have been framed, every class of pianoforte music being represented. It is therefore almost needless to state that the powers of the young executant were not displayed to equal advantage in every item, for very few pianists are at home in all styles of composition. At present Mr. Max Pauer is most satisfactory in the works of the older masters. He gave a highly commendable rendering of Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, and his performance of Beethoven's rarely heard Sonata in F (Op. 54) was an admirable display of technical ability. His playing of Schumann's "Carnaval" cannot be described in such high terms. Except for a certain hardness of touch the manipulation was excellent, but the performer did not seem to enter into the spirit of the music, and the composer's poetical ideas were therefore not fully realised. Mr. Pauer, however, has youth on his side, and there is every probability that with further experience he will improve as an artist. The rest of his programme need not be spoken of in detail. It included Chopin's Ballade (No. 4), a little piece called "The Spinning Wheel," by Mr. J. F. Barnett, and pieces by Schütt, Moszkowski, and Liszt.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

MISS DORA BRIGHT may, on the whole, be said to have shown her gifts as an executive artist in a more favourable light at her second Recital (Princes' Hall, February 27) than at her first. The event unluckily clashed with the last Symphony Concert and the début of the Leeds choristers, but there was, nevertheless, a fair and certainly appreciative attendance. Miss Bright's most serious essay was the performance of Beethoven's thirty-two Variations in C minor, and of this she acquitted herself in a highly intelligent manner, her rendering lacking neither contrast nor artistic feeling, while her excellent technique stood the player in good stead throughout. Miss Bright also gave a neat rendering of Bach's Fantasia Cromatica and Fugue, while among other works, in which her elastic touch and facile style won special admiration, may be enumerated Sterndale Bennett's Scherzo in E minor (Op. 27), and a graceful Mazurka and Impromptu by Mr. Edward German. Miss Bright continued her exposition of Mr. Walter Macfarren's new Studies, playing Nos. 5, 6, 7, and 8; and she also brought forward her own cleverly written Variations for two pianofortes, on an original theme in G minor by G. A. Macfarren, in the interpretation whereof she was assisted by another talented young Academy student, Miss Ethel Boyce. Mr. David Hughes was the vocalist.

Mr. Walter Macfarren repeated his Recital of ancient and modern pianoforte music at Westminster Town Hall, on Monday afternoon, the 18th ult., interspersing it as before with historical and analytical remarks of a highly interesting and instructive nature. Considering the limits of the space to which Mr. Macfarren was necessarily restricted—his undertaking occupying fewer hours than it fairly might days—his scheme was admirably comprehensive and concise. It ranged from Handel's familiar Air and Variations known as "The Harmonious Blacksmith," and examples from Bach's "Wohltemperirte Clavier" and Clementi's "Gradus ad Parnassum," through such representative writers for the pianoforte as Mozart, Beethoven, Cramer, Weber, Moscheles, Mendelssohn, Chopin, Schumann, and Thalberg, down to our own accomplished composer, Sterndale Bennett, whose ever-welcome sketches, "The Lake," "The Millstream," and "The Fountain," formed a graceful and worthy ending to a series of apt illustrations. To dilate on Mr. Macfarren's performance or the attentive, sympathetic attitude of his auditory would be wholly superfluous.

We had occasion to speak in high terms of Mr. Robert Goldbeck in connection with a Recital which he gave at Steinway Hall last June, and the grounds for that praise were amply renewed on the 19th ult., when Mr. Goldbeck gave a Soirée-Musicale—the old French term has quite fallen into disuse of late—in the same hall. As before, Mr. Goldbeck came forward in the double capacity of composer and executant, and among other things introduced the arrangement for two pianofortes of his second Concerto—the same work, if we are not mistaken, that he played last summer. His wife was his coadjutor in the present instance. Mr. Goldbeck gave a neat, refined performance of Beethoven's Sonata in D minor (Op. 31, No. 2), but his brilliant mécanisme had more fitting opportunity for display in Liszt's Rhapsody (No. 13), and the transcription of Mendelssohn's "On wings of music." His playing in these pieces elicited very warm applause. Madame Antoinette Sterling was the vocalist. She sang a couple of Lieder by Schubert, and a song of Mr. Goldbeck's, called "One rainy day."

MR. DE MANBY SERGISON'S CONCERTS.

FOR the continuation of his series of winter Concerts after February, Mr. W. de Manby Sergison was driven to a fresh locale. Accordingly, on the 5th ult., he gave a Matinée in the elegant music-room of the "Meistersingers" Club, generously placed at his disposal by the committee. The principal part of the programme on this occasion was Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Trio in C minor (Op. 66, No. 2), Mr. Sergison taking the leading instrument, and having for coadjutors M. Guillaume Frank and Mr. Charles Ould. The violinist was also heard in a number of shorter pieces—viz., an Elegie and Gavotte of his own, a Mazurka by Wieniawski, and a Berceuse by Gabriel Faure. Mdle. Jeanne Douste executed with her accustomed facility and charm a Study by Chopin, Weber's "Moto perpetuo," and some morceaux by Rubinstein and Brahms. The singers of the afternoon were Miss Robertson, Madame de Fonblanque, Miss Hilda Wilson, Madame Berger Henderson (who gave some Hungarian songs), and Mr. Gregory Hast. At the Concert of the 14th ult., given at 14, Eaton Place (by permission of Mr. T. Percival Beckwith), the Hann Quartet took part in an interesting scheme, embracing Schumann's Quartet in A minor (Op. 41, No. 1) and Spohr's Quartet in G minor (Op. 4, No. 1). Both works were executed with admirable intelligence and smoothness of ensemble. That popular virtuoso, Mr. Tivadar Nachéz, appeared twice in course of the afternoon, playing first a Prelude by Bach, Schumann's "Träumerei," and a Mazurka by Wieniawski, and later on a couple of characteristic fugitive pieces from his own pen. In each instance his clever playing evoked the heartiest applause. An equal measure of favour was vouchsafed to the pianist, Mr. Alfred Hollins, whose faultless technique and rare artistic sentiment were exhibited to advantage in his own "Rêverie d'Amour," in Sterndale Bennett's sketch "The Fountain," and in an effective Tarantelle by Moszkowski. Madame Belle Cole and Mr. Charles Ackerman were the vocalists. Mr. Sergison, as usual, did the work of accompaniment.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

At the March meeting of this Society Mr. E. J. Payne, M.A., the President of the Cremona Society, lectured on the "Viola da Gamba," and offered some interesting remarks on the history of this instrument, and on the reasons why it had fallen into disuse. He exhibited four very fine specimens by Henry Kay (1611), J. Stainer (1667), J. U. Fischer (1720), and J. F. Guidantus (1728), and, with the assistance of the Misses Beever and Mr. W. E. Currey, performed the following selections:—Sonata for Viola da Gamba senza basso, dedicated to the Countess of Pembroke—Adagio, Menuetto and Trio, Allegro—(Abel); Aria, "Mein gläubiges Herz," with Viola da Gamba obbligato (Bach); Movements from Suites for two Violas da Gamba—(a) "L'Angelique," (b) "La Follette," (c) "La Villageoise" (De Caix); Andante for Baritone or Viola da Gamba (Haydn); Aria, "V'adoro, pupille" ("Giulio Cesare"), with Viola da Gamba obbligato (Handel); Andante and Allegro from Sonata for Harpsichord and Viola da Gamba (Handel).

OBITUARY.

DR. W. H. MONK died at Stoke Newington on the 1st ult., in his 67th year. He was the musical editor of "Hymns Ancient and Modern," to which he contributed many of the most popular melodies. He was also the compiler of the Scotch Church Psalter, and had done good work as a teacher of, and lecturer on, music. Dr. Monk was born in London in 1822, and was a pupil of Hamilton, author of the "Instruction Book," and then of Griesbach. He began his long career as an organist at Eaton Chapel, Pimlico, but after a short time migrated to St. Matthias's, Stoke Newington, of which Church he was organist for thirty-seven years. He established here a daily choral service. Dr. Monk was at one time Professor of Music to the School for the Indigent Blind, and director of the choir at King's College. His degree of Mus. Doc. was conferred upon him honoris causâ by Durham University.

The death of SYDNEY SMITH, the pianist and composer of popular pieces for the pianoforte, is also announced. He was born at Dorchester on July 14, 1839, and studied at the Conservatoire at Leipzig. His compositions were peculiar, and fitted the requirements of that class of pupils and teachers who were anxious to obtain and to impart a large amount of brilliancy of effect with the least possible expenditure of labour to acquire technical skill. He, therefore, ministered to a distinct need, even if his compositions do not range among the highest of classical efforts.

MR. THOMAS JAMES SERLE, dramatist, novelist, and actor, died, on the 18th ult., at Novello Cottage, Worthing, in his 91st year. Mr. Serle was born in Gracechurch Street, October 28, 1798. He was intended for the Bar, but he preferred the life of an actor, and in Brussels he attracted the notice of the celebrated Talma, who procured him engagements in London. He appeared as Hamlet in November, 1825, at Covent Garden. He played important parts in association with Edmund Kean, Young, Charles Kemble, Warde, and Madame Vestris. He wrote many plays, and was at one time editor of a London weekly newspaper. For many years Mr. Serle had lived in retirement at his house at Worthing, to which, in honour of his wife, Cecilia Novello, daughter of the composer, and sister of Mrs. Cowden Clarke, he had given the name of "Novello Cottage."

The death of the once famous tenore robusto, ENRICO TAMBERLIK, at Paris, on the 13th ult., removes another of the great singers of the past. He was born at Rome on March 16, 1820, and had, therefore, nearly completed his sixty-ninth year at the time of his death. Some biographical dictionaries say that he was a Roumanian not an Italian, and that his correct name was Thomas Berlic. All agree that he was endowed with exceptional vocal powers, and that his natural gifts were phenomenal. He could sing up to C sharp from his chest, but his style of singing was more astonishing than pleasing for its suavity or refinement. He was never a great artist, but he was a favourite with the public wherever he appeared. His voice had that peculiar tremolo which with many is indicative of age or the premature failure of power. With him it was natural, however, and not assumed, and greatly assisted him in giving character to those passages in which emotion was required. He made his début in 1841 at Naples in Bellini's "I Capuletti ed I Montecchi," and appeared with success in Lisbon, Madrid (he was always a welcome visitor to the Peninsula), St. Petersburg, Paris, London, and many places in America. His last appearance in London was in 1877, when he sang in Meyerbeer's "Prophète," Mozart's "Don Giovanni," Verdi's "Trovatore," and other works in which his high chest notes added to the effect of the music. The story of his being a Roumanian is the more difficult to believe inasmuch as he possessed "la lingua Toscano in bocca Romano," the beauty of the Tuscan speech with the added charm of the Roman accent. His countenance was as full of dignity as that of a typical Roman Emperor, his manners were courteous and genial, and he performed many acts of kindness in a ready and unostentatious manner.

By the death of Mr. HENRY NAGEL, on February 27, Dundee has lost one who for many years was at the top of his profession in the town. Mr. Nagel instituted the Amateur Choral Union in 1858, and held the post of Conductor for twenty-five years. On his retirement, in 1883, a Musical Festival was held, and Mr. Nagel was presented with a handsome testimonial by the members of the Society. As was requested by the deceased gentleman, Arthur Sullivan's hymn from "The Martyr of Antioch," "Brother, thou art gone before us," was sung over his grave at the funeral.

The death also of another once famous singer is to be placed upon record. FELICE VARESI, a baritone vocalist, a notable representative of such parts as Rigoletto, Georgio Germont in "Traviata," and other Verdian characters, died on the 18th ult., at Milan, in his seventy-sixth year. His daughter, a singer with a light soprano voice, made her appearance in England at Drury Lane during the opera season of 1875, but although her voice and singing were admired, she achieved only a succès d'estime. Felice Varesi was said to have created the part of Rigoletto in Verdi's opera of that name, but according to Felix Clement ("Dictionnaire Lyrique") it was Corsi who was its first representative.

CHARLES FREDERICK THEODOR STEINWAY died at his residence in Brunswick, Germany, on the 25th ult., aged sixty-three years. He was the eldest son of Henry Englehardt Steinway, the founder of the well-known house of Steinway & Sons, New York, and was born in 1825 at Seesen, near the Hartz Mountains. He started in business on his own account in Brunswick about the year 1850, and in 1865 he joined his father and brothers in New York. He was a most gifted inventor, and many improvements in the construction of the pianoforte are due to him. He was elected a Member of the Royal Academies of Paris, Berlin, and Stockholm, and of the Paris Society of Fine Arts.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE note of preparation for the Birmingham Festival of 1891 is already sounded by the appointment of the Orchestral or Managing Committee for that event. The most conspicuous feature of the new list is the absence of the name of Mr. Jaffray, who has held the post of Chairman for the last three Festivals, but now wishes to retire on the ground of failing health and a pressure of other engagements. His successor is not yet formally appointed, but it is understood that Dr. Wade will be asked to accept the onerous office. Of the scheme for 1891 nothing definite can be stated yet, but the Committee make no secret of their desire to include in it a new work by some American composer of eminence.

At the fourth and final Concert of their subscription series, Messrs. Harrison made ample amends to music-lovers for any shortcomings in their previous programmes by the sterling excellence and interest of their instrumental selection, in the rendering of which Sir Charles and Lady Hallé co-operated with the admirable band of the former Beethoven's Festival Overture in C (Op. 124) opened the Concert, and interested the audience greatly by its masterly combination. The novelty of the evening, however, was Bizet's grand orchestral Suite in C, entitled "Roma," which was completed in 1869, a charming piece of programme music, attaining in parts to the dignity of true symphony, and instrumented throughout with the skill and fancy of an accomplished musician. A selection from Wagner's "Meistersinger" evoked great applause; but the most successful piece in stirring the enthusiasm of the audience was Liszt's Rhapsodie Hongroise (No. 4) in D minor and G major, which was played with wonderful power, brilliancy, and dash. Lady Hallé played the Adagio and Rondo Finale from Vieuxtemps's Concerto in E major, the Rondo in particular being rendered with inspiring verve and a command of all the subtleties of technique that fairly entranced the public. In the second part her cantabile playing of Beethoven's beautiful and familiar Romanza in F major was, in a different style, wonderfully charming and effective. Sir Charles Hallé's contributions included two short but interesting pianoforte sketches by Grieg, both affording excellent scope for dainty and expressive playing. On a redemand of this effort, Sir Charles treated the audience to a most brilliant and finished rendering of Chopin's D flat Valse. The vocalists were Miss Hope Glenn and Mr. Henry Piercy. The lady was especially effective in the old Handelian melody "Armida pity scorn" and the impassioned song of Romeo from Vaccaj's long-forgotten setting of "Romeo and Juliet"; and the sweet, even tenor voice of Mr. Piercy was heard to advantage in Sullivan's air from "The Martyr of Antioch" and the air from Handel's "Acis," "Would you gain the tender creature."

The old tradition, which affirms that no one is a prophet among his own people, is signally refuted by the popularity of Miss Fanny Davies in Birmingham, where she has appeared twice within the month, and in each case before large and enthusiastic audiences. On the 7th ult., when she played in the large Lecture Theatre of the Midland Institute, the proceeds of the entertainment were devoted to the funds of that Institution and of the Homœopathic Hospital. Her second Pianoforte Recital, which was given in the Masonic Hall on the 26th ult., was undertaken on her own behalf. Increased power and breadth, combined with maturity of style and expression, were observable in her playing, at the former Concert, of Beethoven's Variations on a theme from "Prometheus," with Fugue in E flat (Op. 35), which had not been heard here since it was played many years ago by Dr. von Bülow. Miss Davies played a Gigue by Graun in splendid style, and fairly enraptured the audience by her thoroughly sympathetic playing of Schumann's popular "Faschingschwank aus Wien" (Op. 25). The only novelty in the programme was a Valse Impromptu in A flat, by Nicolai von Willm, of Riga, which, though strongly reminiscent of Chopin in the earlier part, possesses some original and noteworthy characteristics. Full justice was done by Miss Davies to this dainty work, as well as to Chopin's Etude in F minor, and the brilliant and difficult Toccata in D minor of Rubinstein. Miss Hope Glenn, who was the vocalist on this occasion, introduced an acceptable novelty in Handel's aria from "Muzio Scevola," and won great applause by her dramatic rendering of Schubert's "Erl-King," to which Miss Davies contributed the beautiful pianoforte accompaniment with graphic effect. At her second Recital, on the 26th ult., when the programme included Mendelssohn's Sonata in D major and that of Rubinstein in the same key, both for violoncello and pianoforte, she was assisted by Mr. Piatti, but the Concert took place too late in the month for detailed notice here.

Mr. Stockley's third Orchestral Concert, on the 15th ult., was of more than average excellence and interest, though the programme was a comparatively short one. The only absolute novelty in the instrumental department was a Suite de Ballet in E flat, by A. Goring Thomas, which was composed for the Cambridge University Musical Society, and first produced at one of their Concerts on June 9, 1887. Although there is little in any of the three movements suggestive either of the forms or spirit of dance, the Suite impressed every one as a beautiful and imaginative work. Another interesting feature of the programme was a couple of Melodies (Op. 34) for string orchestra, by Grieg, almost too dainty and refined for effect in a large Concert-room; but the popular success of the orchestral selection was a really fine performance of Meyerbeer's grandiose "Schiller" March, composed for the Paris Centenary Commemoration of the poet in 1859. Reinecke's Entr'acte from "King Manfred" was given with sympathetic refinement and delicacy, and the playing of Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony in B minor left little to be desired. The vocalists, Miss Fanny Moody and Mr. Charles Manners, though familiar favourites of the operatic stage, were new here to Concert-goers. Miss Moody's voice has gained in power and volume, and her singing of Mignon's song "Know'st thou the land," and the familiar Cavatina "O luce di quest'anima," fairly stirred the enthusiasm of the audience. Mr. Manners created something of a sensation by his singing—firstly, of Schumann's "Two Grenadiers," in which the "Marseillaise" is introduced, and afterwards of the old German song "In cellar cool," in the refrain of which the singer found effective scope for his phenomenal lower notes.

The last Concert of the Festival Choral Society, on the 28th ult., was devoted to Mendelssohn's "Elijah," of the performance of which it is unnecessary to speak. The principal vocalists were Madame Nordica, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Watkin Mills; and Mr. Stockley, as usual, conducted. "Dorothy" has been played at the Theatre Royal, and Bucalossi's new operetta "Delia" was produced at the Grand Theatre on the 25th ult.

A pleasant surprise was in store for the audience at the Madrigal Concert, given in the Midland Institute Lecture Theatre, on the 25th ult., when the absence, through illness, of the local pianist announced afforded an opening for the public appearance of two of Madame Schumann's most distinguished pupils, Miss Alice Dessauer and Miss Adelina de Lara, who chanced to be staying in Birmingham. Both young ladies displayed technical qualities of a very high order, allied to keen musical sensibility, and they created great enthusiasm by their playing. Their selection comprised Schumann's Andante and Variations for two pianofortes (Op. 26), Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Concerto in G minor (Op. 25), for Miss Dessauer, with pianoforte accompaniment by Miss de Lara, and Chopin's Scherzo in B minor for the last-named lady.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

BALLAD and Benefit Concerts, few of which call for any particular notice, filled up the early part of the month of March. Mention, however, is due to the Benefit Concert of the enterprising promoter and Conductor of the Dublin Saturday Popular Concerts, Mr. W. H. Collisson, Mus. Bac., which took place on the 9th ult. The Leinster Hall was crowded from floor to ceiling by an appreciative audience, and the popular and deserving Conductor was received with enthusiasm. The list of vocalists and instrumentalists who gave their services is far too long to reprint, including as it did many of the principal artists who had appeared at the Popular Concerts during the season. The performance of Beethoven's Septet and of Romberg's Toy Symphony at this Concert is deserving of remark. Mrs. Freeman-Lumsden's Benefit Concert on the 19th, and Mrs. Scott-Fennell's on the 23rd ult., were also noticeable on account of the high standard of their programmes and performance.

Following up the success of their first series of Popular Concerts, Messrs. Gunn and Motherhill organised a second and third series, which met with no less acceptance. At the second series, which took place at the Leinster Hall on February 25 and 27 and the 2nd ult., Mesdames Sinico and Wright, with Mr. Charles Victor were the vocalists, and Mr. A. M. Creany the accompanist. At the third series, given on the 18th, 20th, and 22nd ult., Miss Jeannie Rosse and Miss Clara Leighton re-appeared, with Herr Louis Werner as Conductor. The further attractions were the bands of the 11th Hussars, the Seaforth Highlanders, and the Glo'ster Regiment, with the Bandurria Quartet of Guitarists.

Three performances of Wallace's "Maritana" were given in the Queen's Theatre, on the 14th, 16th, and 18th ult., by the Dublin Amateur Operatic Society, under the direction of Mr. J. O'Rorke, and attracted large audiences.

The programmes of the Recitals of Chamber Music at the Royal Dublin Society, given on February 25 and the 4th ult., were varied and interesting, and included a Quartet in F, for pianoforte and strings, by Dr. Villiers Stanford. This piece, as the work of a Dublin man, was particularly interesting to the frequenters of these Recitals, and while its first performance was somewhat of a disappointment, there was some degree of compensation in the second hearing, the performers doing their best to bring out the beauties which it contains. The executants were, as usual, Signor Papini (first violin), Mr. Newman (second violin), Herr Lauer (viola), M. Rudersdorff (violoncello), and Signor Esposito (pianoforte).

The St. Patrick's Oratorio Society gave a performance of the "Elijah" on the 15th ult., in St. Patrick's Cathedral.

The Dublin University Choral Society gave its 180th Concert in the Examination Hall of Trinity College, on the 23rd ult. Gade's "Psyche" was the work chosen for performance, its second presentation by this Society. A marked improvement was manifest in the chorus as compared with that of the December Concert, the augmentation of the soprano line being attended with the happiest results. The principal singers were Fräulein Cramer, who sang the part of Psyche, Mr. Melfort D'Alton, and Master Sherrard, who gave the incidental lines of Proserpine. The band and chorus numbered about 100 executants, and Sir Robert Stewart conducted.

THE DREAM OF JUBAL

A POEM WITH MUSIC

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, ORCHESTRA, AND ACCOMPANIED RECITATION

WRITTEN BY

JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

A. C. MACKENZIE.

VOCAL SCORE, PAPER COVER, 2s. 6d.; PAPER BOARDS, 3s.; CLOTH GILT, 4s.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

A hearing of Dr. Mackenzie's music confirms the impression conveyed by reading it, and establishes the fact that the composer has taken another step towards the perfect illustration of simplicity of form and directness of expression—qualities not less essential in the art of music than in any other. . . . There was no mere pretence of listening; from first to last the piece held the attention of its auditors, and compelled their hearty applause, which culminated at the close in an emphatic and apparently unanimous chorus of approval.

STANDARD.

It is only just to bestow very high commendation on Mr. Bennett, whose libretto is, in poetical fancy and skilful arrangement, quite equal to that of the "Rose of Sharon." . . . It may be said without hesitation, that if it does not enhance Dr. Mackenzie's fame, it deserves a place by the side of his best efforts. . . . The audience was evidently interested in the "Dream of Jubal," for the applause was enthusiastic at every opportunity.

DAILY NEWS.

The text may be accepted as a genuine invention of the librettist. . . . It is in his accompaniments to the dialogue that Dr. Mackenzie is at his greatest. Here all the resources of the orchestra are brought into play, and free use is made of "leading motives," including (in association with the idea of the Divine Power) an extremely happy quotation of the phrase given in the "Hallelujah Chorus" of "The Messiah," to the words "And He shall reign for ever and ever."

MORNING POST.

Few composers living could have written more beautiful music than that with which Dr. Mackenzie accompanies the spoken words. . . . The contrast to the simple gaiety of the scene in the fields is presented in the magnificent Funeral March and Chorus, which stands as the finest number in the work—deep in expression and strikingly original in treatment. . . . There can be no doubt that "The Dream of Jubal" is not only his best work, but it is also the best work of the kind produced by any modern composer.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Dr. Mackenzie, it must at once be said, has thoroughly caught the spirit of Mr. Joseph Bennett's lines. The impression created upon the attentive listener is, indeed, that of a single mind having imagined and executed both words and music. Of course, this is exactly as it should be. . . . The choral writing is worthy of the composer who penned the magnificent series forming the "Procession of the Ark," in the "Rose of Sharon," whilst the instrumentation is throughout picturesque and vivid, as well as highly interesting to those who wish to go below the surface and critically analyse Dr. Mackenzie's method of workmanship.

ATHENÆUM.

It may be said at once that "The Dream of Jubal" is not a mere pièce d'occasion, which, when once heard, is quickly forgotten and can never be revived. Though composed for a special celebration there is no reason why the work should not survive on its literary and musical merits. We speak advisedly of both, because the libretto, by Mr. Joseph Bennett, is very far above the average in felicity of idea and beauty of expression.

THE WORLD.

The work is not only clever but really poetical, and so far surpasses all the previous efforts of the same author with which I am acquainted. The music altogether is distinguished, musicianlike, impressive; especially so is the first quartet with chorus, "Gloria in Excelsis," and the last, the "Invocation," with two harps.

VANITY FAIR.

For once the poet has been allowed to take his place side by side with the musician, and not, as usual, occupy a merely subordinate position. . . . Mr. Joseph Bennett has produced a work which in every way does him infinite credit—a work full of graceful imagery, tender thoughts, and poetic language. Throughout the orchestration was most charming.

SUNDAY TIMES.

There is in the poem an elegance of diction, a dignity of style, and a force of expression betraying an ardent admirer and capable imitator of Milton. From first to last the reader's lines are in the highest sense poetic. As to the accompanying music, enough that it has all the appropriateness, refinement, and melodic charm Dr. Mackenzie knew how to concentrate upon it. All Dr. Mackenzie's strength and individuality and wealth of resource come to the surface in the three magnificent concerted pieces now alluded to. . . . they attain, indeed, to as lofty an eminence as any English composer has yet reached. . . . In summing up "The Dream of Jubal" we have had no difficulty whatever as regards the estimation of its manifold beauties, poetic and musical.

LIVERPOOL COURIER.

"The Dream of Jubal" is simply a beautiful symphonic poem, accompanied by voices in the best possible manner, and the keenest insight to a judicious use of poetic recitation, combined with solo voices and grand choral features seldom grasped, and almost as rarely attempted by any other composer. During the performance the audience was spell-bound.

LIVERPOOL MERCURY.

There can be no manner of doubt that Dr. Mackenzie has for ever closed the mouths of such people as object to works written to order, and produced one fit to stand shoulder to shoulder and side by side with the noblest in the realm of music. From first to last there is not an episode of note unrepented with interest.

LIVERPOOL DAILY POST.

It is an entirely worthy and noble conception, quite original, and of a fibre which arouses interest at the outset, and holds it enthralled until the last chord is heard.

LONDON & NEW YORK: NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW AND THE WEST OF SCOTLAND.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A PERFORMANCE of Romberg's Cantata "The Lay of the Bell" was given on February 26, by the choir of Camphill United Presbyterian Church. Several part-songs and glees followed, among the latter being the fine composition by Callcott, "O snatch me swift." The choir singing was very good. Mr. W. Schofield, Organist of the church, conducted, and Miss Cameron and Mr. Thomas Berry were the accompanists.

At the Concert of the Hillhead Chamber Music Association, on the 1st ult., Miss Fanny Davies and Miss Marie Soldat played several pieces, among them being the "Kreutzer" Sonata of Beethoven.

The Glasgow Select Choir made its last appearance for the season at the City Hall Saturday Evening Concert of the 6th ult., their programme—probably because of the proximity of St. Patrick's Day—consisting exclusively of Irish melodies chorally arranged or as vocal solos. Mr. J. Miller Craig conducted, and the choir sang with its usual skill and taste.

The Choir of St. Vincent Street United Presbyterian Church gave a Concert on the 9th ult., the Cantata "Jerusalem," by Mr. W. H. Dixon, of Kilmarnock, being included in the programme, and performed with considerable success. Mr. Hugh McNabb was the Conductor.

Among the many choirs in Glasgow and the district styling themselves "Select," that conducted by Mr. John Bell deservedly holds a good place. A Concert was given by this Association, in the Waterloo Rooms, on the 12th ult., when a selection of part-songs, intermingled with vocal and instrumental solos, was performed with decided success.

Mr. T. Mee Pattison's Cantata "The Wise Men" was performed by the Springbank Music Class, in Lansdowne United Presbyterian Church, on the 14th ult., Mr. W. R. Duff conducting and Mr. J. B. Ritchie, Organist of the church, accompanying and playing organ solos from Widor, Smart, and Guilmant in course of the Cantata.

The choir of the Children's Home, London, sang Stainer's "Crucifixion" in Glasgow Cathedral, on Sunday evening, the 17th ult., Dr. Peace officiating at the organ. The choir also gave a Concert of vocal and instrumental music, in St. Andrew's Hall, on the following Tuesday. Both the service and Concert were in aid of the funds of the Children's Home.

The Musical Association of Pollokshields Free Church gave a Concert on the 20th ult., in aid of the Poor Children's Southside Dinner Table, when a Cantata by Mr. T. Mee Pattison, "The Mother of Jesus," was performed. Mr. D. S. Salmond conducted.

A performance of Handel's Oratorio "Samson" was given on the 20th ult., by the Musical Association of Pollok Street United Presbyterian Church, Mr. Jonathan Howell conducting, and Mr. George Hopper accompanying.

On Sunday evening, the 24th ult., the choir of Woodside Established Church, in the west end of Glasgow, sang Gaul's "Passion Service," the church being crowded. Last year the choir sang Dr. Stainer's "Crucifixion." These musical Sunday evening services are becoming much liked in Glasgow.

Three performances of Gilbert and Sullivan's Operetta "The Sorcerer" were given in the Queen's Rooms by the Philomel Club, beginning on the 25th ult. The Operetta was well staged, and the acting and singing were alike very creditable to all concerned. Mr. Duncan Smyth conducted and Mr. Walter Baynham was stage manager. Last year the club produced the Operetta "Dorothy."

A Concert was given by the Wallneuk Mission Choir, Paisley, in the George A. Clark Town Hall, on the 15th ult., when Sterndale Bennett's Cantata "The May Queen" was performed. An orchestra of about thirty, under Mr. W. H. Cole, played the accompaniments, and Mr. James Pattinson, Mus. Bac., conducted.

The members of the Port Glasgow Parish Church Musical Association made their first public appearance on the 14th ult., in the Town Hall there, giving a performance of Lahee's Cantata "The Building of the Ship." Mr. C. E. Midgley acted as Conductor.

The Twelfth Annual Concert of the Girvan Musical Association took place in the Assembly Rooms, on the 15th ult., Macfarren's "May Day" being the principal piece of the evening. Mr. Hugh McNabb conducted. The performances were altogether highly successful.

The Vale of Leven Choral Society performed Handel's Oratorio "Samson" in the Public Hall, Alexandria, Dumbartonshire, on the 22nd ult. The chorus and orchestra were 100 in number. The principal vocalists were Misses Beaumont and Young and Messrs. Macdonald and Fleming. Mr. John Bell, Mus. Bac., conducted.

A Concert was given by the Greenock Choral Society, in the Town Hall there, on the 25th ult., Macfarren's "May Day" being included in the programme. Mr. Garth was Conductor.

MUSIC IN HUDDERSFIELD, &c.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE eleventh of the Subscription Concert series took place on February 26, too late for notice last month. Sir Charles Hallé's orchestra had been engaged, and gave a satisfactory rendering of four works, each of which may be considered a perfect representative of its particular class. First came Cherubini's "Anacreon" Overture, then the C minor Symphony of Beethoven, to which Svendsen's "Rhapsodie Norvegienne" (which followed, after the interval) was in strong contrast, and finally Wagner's "Tannhäuser" Overture, which effectively concluded the evening's entertainment. Besides this feast of good things, Miss Fanny Moody contributed the "Jewel Song" from "Faust," Handel's "Angels ever bright and fair," and Mozart's "Deh vieni" ("Nozze di Figaro")—three strongly-contrasted morceaux, which were admirably rendered and duly appreciated. Sir Charles Hallé played Chopin's Impromptu in F sharp (Op. 36) and Grand Polonaise in F sharp minor; Mendelssohn's popular Violin Concerto, and an Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso, by M. Saint-Saëns, were played by Herr Willy Hess with that vigour of attack and refined phrasing which have gained for him so many admirers during the season.

The next Concert of the series was given on the 12th ult., when the artists were as follows:—Pianoforte, Miss Fanny Davies and Miss Mathilde Wurm; violin, Miss Marie Soldat; violoncello, Mr. Hausmann; vocalist, Miss Fillunger; and accompanist, Mr. J. E. Ibeson. The programme included a couple of duets for two pianofortes—Schumann's Variations in B flat and Mendelssohn's Allegro Brillante—and Beethoven's Violin Sonata in E flat (Op. 12). Miss Fillunger's vocal selections were warmly appreciated; she received an encore for Brahms's "Meine Liebe ist grün," and responded by singing Schubert's "Roselein auf der Haide."

Messrs. Mellor and Carr gave a Concert on the 15th ult., in the saloon of the Corn Exchange, Wakefield. The artists engaged were Sir Charles and Lady Hallé and Mr. Dan Billington. Lady Hallé's masterly performance of the Andante and Finale from Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto was much admired.

On the 22nd ult. the Huddersfield Choral Society closed the season with a remarkably fine performance, under the able direction of Mr. John North, of Berlioz's "La Damnation de Faust," a work which seems to gain in popularity here, as elsewhere. The principals were Mrs. Mary Davies, Mr. Charles Banks, Mr. W. Martin, and Mr. Watkin Mills. The band was considerably augmented for the occasion, many prominent members of the Hallé orchestra having been engaged to assist in what proved to be a worthy rendering of Berlioz's intricate score. The French master's brilliant version of the "Rakoczy" March made the usual effect, and gained the only encore of the evening. For the choral singing we have nothing but praise to bestow; each number was given with the exact dramatic accent required; and when we remember that the character of this account varies with almost every number, ranging from a village dance to a "chœur de damnés et de démons" (Berlioz's own words in the partition), the difficulties which lie in the way of a successful interpretation may be easily conceived. Suffice it to say that these difficulties were triumphantly overcome on the present occasion—the 201st Concert in the history of the Society.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

MISS FREDA FEDDERN gave a Concert on the 28th February at the Philharmonic Hall. Her interpretation of Scarlatti's beautiful "Pastorale" and Handel's famous "Chaconne" roused her audience to a great pitch of enthusiasm. Miss Macintyre and Mr. Charles Chilley were the vocalists, the lady singing the "Jewel Song" from "Faust" and "Ye banks and braes" (which she gave as an encore for "Le retour de Promis"). Miss Marie Soldat made a favourable impression by her brilliant execution of the Adagio from the Ninth Concerto of Spohr, and pieces by Vieuxtemps and Zarzyaki.

The Concert of the 12th ult. indicated, by a return to oratorio, that the Philharmonic Society's season is nearing its conclusion. The Society's rigorous observance of Lent is marked by long historical precedent, and the choice for this occasion of Sir Arthur Sullivan's early work, "The Prodigal Son," was a judicious one. The principals engaged were Mesdames Hess and Hilda Wilson, Mr. Percy and Mr. Santley. Of these Madame Hess was a débutante, and merited considerable praise by her intelligent use of an undoubtedly fine soprano voice of great range and power. Whilst, strange to say, the band was not perfect in one or two of the numbers, the choruses were well and carefully rendered throughout. Sir Charles Hallé conducted both this and the remaining pieces of the Concert, which were of a miscellaneous character.

A most interesting performance took place in the Philharmonic Hall on the evening of the 5th ult., the object being to assist the funds of the Hahnemann Hospital. The importance of the occasion centred, however, round the presentation of a new Cantata by a young talented townsman, Mr. Charles Braun. "Sir Olaf," translated from Heine's "Ritter Olaf" by Mr. Edward Breck and Mr. Francis Prange, is rather a dolorous story, but, being full of dramatic episodes, lends itself readily to descriptive music. Briefly, Sir Olaf, the hero, incurs the wrath of his sovereign by aspiring to the hand of his daughter, and the King adopts a peculiar solution of the difficulty by having the two joined in the bonds of matrimony, and the bridegroom beheaded immediately afterwards. In his treatment of this plot, Mr. Braun has pursued the story continuously to the end, without break, and in doing so he has made palpable use of the Leitmotif, applying a special and distinctive motif to each of the characters. The orchestration is never wearisome, but undoubtedly clever and ingenious, and often, particularly towards the close, decidedly impressive. Unquestionably the finest effect, and deservedly so, is produced by Sir Olaf's (tenor) solo "I bless thee, O sunshine," leading into the final eight-part chorus, which forms a massive climax to the Cantata. The performance was undertaken jointly by the People's Orchestral Society and the Liverpool Musical Association, under the conductorship of Mr. A. E. Rodewald, who must be congratulated on the successful result. The solo vocalists were Mr. Henry Phillips and Mr. Bowman Ralston, the latter showing a considerable acquaintance with the intentions of the composer, especially in the important bass recitatives. Mr. Braun received a most flattering ovation at the termination of the performance. In the second half of the programme, Mrs. Arthur Braun sang some interesting little airs to the evident satisfaction of the audience.

During the month of March Mr. W. H. Jude has given a series of Descriptive Musical Evenings at Hope Hall. As a disciple and follower of Henry Russell and John Parry, Mr. Jude need not fear comparison with any of his prototypes. He enlisted the keen interest of his hearers by his graphic sketches of the composers, and his illustrations of their works were admirably given. "The Gambler's Wife" and "The Maniac" were selected from Russell's stirring songs, and in the rendering of the humorous conceptions of John Parry, Mr. Jude's powers of mimicry and his instrumental skill were displayed to great advantage.

As a pendant to the season's work, Sir Charles and Lady Hallé, in accordance with their usual custom, gave a Pianoforte and Violin Recital in the small Concert Room of St. George's Hall, on the 16th ult.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE concluding Concerts of Sir Charles Hallé's thirty-first series were rendered peculiarly attractive through the presence of, and the personal superintendence of their works by, composers new to Manchester. We cannot complain of lack of opportunity of listening to distinguished executants of all classes, but our intercourse with the higher order of originators is so extremely restricted that the announcement of the coming (February 28) of Herr and Madame Grieg and of Mr. Hamish MacCunn (7th ult.) served to draw together so many people that the financial success of the final Concerts must have equalled the artistic interest. Perhaps it is supposed that our estimate of new works is likely to be more calm and moderate when not stimulated by the presence of their composers or excited by any personal influence. Unquestionably we are not often called upon to resist that kind of festival-week exhilaration, which so frequently fosters altogether exaggerated laudations of works never afterwards heard of, and creates hopes utterly incapable of due realisation.

Herr Grieg was especially fortunate with his executants, for Sir Charles Hallé undertook his Pianoforte Concerto (Op. 16), and Lady Hallé so thoroughly co-operated with the composer in Op. 8 as to secure a perfect realisation of the pleasing Duet. Madame Grieg, with modest powers as a vocalist, gave probably the most sympathetic interpretation possible of the little Lieder, which so happily display her husband's fertility in bright, sketchy fancies, rather than gift of bold and sustained flight. By insisting upon an absolutely pianissimo rendering of portions of his brief poems for strings, and by the general shading of their delicate effects, Herr Grieg has taught our orchestra a welcome and important lesson.

Herr Joachim's annual visit to the Thursday evening Concerts has long been regarded as so important an event, that we are justified in somewhat jealously guarding its interest, and in deprecating any diminution of its educational effect. We look for a model performance of at least one great classic from him, as a pattern and incentive to our young violinists. That Herr Joachim should have selected this time an English Suite demands a warm recognition, which we regret that we cannot give. At the following Concert, Mr. MacCunn's "Ship o' the Fiend" had a very different reception. In a descriptive "Orchestral Ballad" we must look for dramatic effects, rather than for the compact working out of recognised forms; but the clever, and sometimes novel, instrumentation gave birth to hopes that when the author gets free from the somewhat dismal legends that seem yet to haunt his thoughts, he may achieve really great and more purely musical things.

The rapid flight of time is further accentuated by the fact that Mr. de Jong's Concerts have now lasted for eighteen seasons, during which his orchestra has steadily advanced, and his attempts have been unremitting to leaven his programmes with as much good music as his patrons would tolerate. At his benefit (on the 2nd ult.) among the many vocalists who appeared two have a specially local interest for us. Five years ago Miss Sarah Berry, by the beauty of a voice that all must admire, won a scholarship at the Royal College—as Miss Jennie Rankin has recently done. We hope soon to be able, now that Miss Berry has finished her course at the College, to congratulate her upon a greater freedom, individuality, and vigour of style. Mr. Edwin Houghton, also, was fortunate enough to secure substantial and friendly help in the development of his pleasing tenor voice; and, earlier in the season, won the commendations of his friends here upon his tasteful delivery of several ballads. Decidedly the most successful item in Mr. de Jong's final programme was the finished performance, by Mr. Risegari, of Bazzini's Elegie for the violin, which won and deserved a double recall.

At the Concert Hall, in addition to Sir Charles Hallé's Recitals, Mr. Max Mayer has given a charming little Concert, and a corps of local instrumentalists, under the lead of Mr. Willy Hess, essayed with entire success a programme of Chamber music, including Mendelssohn's Octet for strings.

The interest felt for choral music has been proved by the gradually increasing attendance at the Concerts of the Vocal Society (so much indebted to Dr. Watson), and by the overwhelming audience at the annual celebration of the Philharmonic Choir, under Mr. G. W. Lane. And that organ music is not much less appreciated, Mr. Pyne's admirers testify every Saturday evening at the Town Hall, and Mr. Guilman proved on the 20th, although his programme decidedly lacked variety.

The month's campaign here of the Carl Rosa Company has been most successful. The operas have been splendidly mounted; indeed, so much care and expense were lavished upon Meyerbeer's "Star of the North," that its attractiveness was fully as much spectacular as musical, and it crowded out many works that the public would have been delighted to hear. The thronged house on the last night, when Goring Thomas's "Esmeralda" was given, and the universal expression of delight with that admirable work, mingled with regret that it could not be more frequently done, and that the author's yet more fascinating "Nadeshda" was not vouchsafed, proved that there is now no necessity for so exclusive a reliance to be placed upon works by foreign composers to the neglect of the efforts of native writers. As a whole, the performances have been excellent. The more experienced artists have displayed their accustomed excellence and tact. Madame Burns still throws into her parts the utmost force and vigour, rousing her hearers to frequent enthusiasm. It is pleasant, also, to note the marked advance made by Miss Fanny Moody, and the promise she gives of a bright future. But it is of the greatest importance—not only for the welfare of the company, but for the advance of English Opera, which for the present, at least, is bound up with Mr. Rosa's undertaking—that every effort should be made to obtain promising recruits, and to strengthen the corps of young singers eager to obtain, and ready to profit by, that training for the stage, the lack of facilities for which has so long been the great obstacle to the development of our native dramatic instinct.

MUSIC IN MONMOUTHSHIRE AND SOUTH WALES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Cardiff Orchestral Society's Concert at the end of February was a very popular event. The Park Hall was crowded with an appreciative audience. Some effective selections were rendered by the Society from Auber, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Schubert, Wallace, &c.; Mr. C. Lee Williams's Gavotte and Minuet, which were composed for the last Festival of the Three Choirs, were played with point and spirit. Madame Patey and Mr. Henry Piercy were received enthusiastically. The pianoforte accompanist was Mr. J. E. Deacon, and Mr. G. H. Cole was at the organ.

There is some likelihood of the claims of Merthyr in respect of the National Eisteddfod of 1891 being subsidiary to those of Dowlais. The latter place is quite a choral centre, and in regard to Merthyr it may be noted that the National Eisteddfod has already been held there twice.

The National Eisteddfod Committee at Brecon is now fully employed in connection with the arrangements necessary in view of the National gathering. The Sub-musical Committee has declined to avail itself of the offer by the General Committee of the sum of £10 to increase prizes for solo singing. Sub-committees were appointed to select adjudicators.

Among recent events of an interesting character may be cited Mr. Lemare's Organ Recital at Cardiff, and a Concert of sacred music at Market Square Chapel, Merthyr. At the latter event the vocalists were Mrs. M. Price-Hughes, Mrs. Dixon, Miss Corri Lloyd, Mr. Sandford Jones, and others.

The success of Mr. Oscar Thomas, corporal of buglers in the Merthyr Rifle Volunteers, at the trumpet competition at the Royal College of Music has been announced. The scholarship which he has won entitles him to three years' free board, residence, and tuition. He was complimented by Mr. T. Harper, the Queen's trumpeter, on his performance. It appears that he has been partly trained by several local musicians from time to time, but that to some extent he is self-instructed.

The Chamber Music Concerts in connection with the University College of South Wales were brought to a conclusion on the 20th ult., by a performance at the Lesser Park Hall, Cardiff. The artists were Miss Agnes Zimmermann (pianoforte), Miss Gertrude Kay (vocalist), M. Josef Ludwig (violin), and Mr. Whitehouse (violoncello). The performances were chiefly classical, and it is satisfactory to note that a large and appreciative audience was present.

At the Lesser Park Hall, Cardiff, on the 4th ult., Mrs. Alfred Morris gave a Students' Concert. The first part of the programme was occupied by Roedel's Cantata "The Crystal Slipper," the principal characters being taken by Mrs. Ward Perkins, Miss K. Harrison, Miss Mabel Johnson, Miss Andrews, Miss M. Ramsdale, Miss Williams, and Miss M. Pennymore. The latter portion of the evening was devoted to a varied musical programme, admirably rendered. The entertainment, from a musical point of view, was most praiseworthy.

Mr. Godfrey, the well-known bandmaster of the Grenadier Guards, was the defendant in an action brought at the Glamorganshire Assizes at Cardiff, on the 22nd ult., by Mr. P. Shrapnell, to recover damages for the non-fulfilment of a contract for the Grenadier Guards' Band to play on the 12th, 13th, 14th, and 15th September at the Trades' Exhibition. The circumstances were briefly noted in the October issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES. It was contended that the absence of the band resulted disastrously to the Exhibition. Mr. Justice Grantham observed that the main question before the jury was, did plaintiff suffer damage from defendant's band not being able to come to the Exhibition? The jury found a verdict for the defendant.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

THOUGH much less activity prevails in musical matters in Oxford in the Lent Term than is usual in the October and Summer Terms, there has been no lack of entertainment during the last three months. Early in the term (February 1) we were favoured by a visit from Sir Charles and Lady Hallé, who gave a Pianoforte and Violin Recital in the Town Hall. About a week later (February 9) a strong Concert party, consisting of Mesdames Minnie Hauk and Belle Cole, Messrs. Charles Banks and Arthur Oswald, Tivadar Nachéz and Schönberger, gave a performance in the Corn Exchange, at which a very interesting and attractive programme was presented.

On February 16 the Oxford Orchestral Association, with some professional aid, gave a Concert in the Sheldonian Theatre. That this body has done some excellent work of late years was known to some, but very few could have been prepared to find them capable of rendering such works as Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony and Violin Concerto (first movement), and Cherubini's "Anacreon" Overture. As it turned out, the performance did them great credit and it is to be hoped that this success will prove an incentive to further progress.

In chamber music an interesting programme was very well rendered by Mr. Ludwig and his Quartet at the Invitation Concert of the University Musical Union in Keble College Hall (February 21). The quartets played were Beethoven's in F minor (Op. 95) and Mozart's in B flat major (No. 15), and Mr. Ludwig and Mr. Whitehouse both contributed solos.

At the Concert given on the 26th February, by the Oxford Musical Club, the programme was entirely executed by the members of the Hann family, and consisted of Beethoven's Posthumous Quartet in E flat (Op. 127), Brahms's Quartet in A minor (Op. 51), as well as violin and violoncello solos played by Messrs. Lewis and William C. Hann respectively. The whole performance was given with that degree of excellence which has already won this clever family a wide reputation, and their efforts were appreciated to the utmost by the numerous audience assembled to hear them.

On the 8th ult. Professor Joachim gave his annual Concert in aid of the Musical Club, when, besides leading Schumann's Quartet in A major and Haydn's "Kaiser" Quartet, he played the ever popular "Kreutzer" Sonata. With such a programme it is hardly necessary to add that the large audience was much delighted, though it was also a good deal amused when some too enthusiastic admirers insisted on presenting the Professor with a laurel wreath.

The most important Choral and Orchestral Concert given in Oxford for many years took place in the Sheldonian Theatre on the 12th ult., when the Choral Society put down Beethoven's "Sinfonia Eroica" and Dvorák's "Stabat Mater" for performance. The very fine band gave a capital rendering of the Symphony, though some of the movements seemed to be taken too fast. The Society, now in its seventieth season, probably never had a better chorus than at the present moment, and full justice was done to Dvorák's difficult music. The audience, though good, was hardly so large as the importance of the occasion demanded, but in every other respect the Concert was very successful. The solo parts were undertaken by Mrs. Hutchinson, Madame Florence Winn, Mr. Harper Kearnson, and Mr. A. F. Ferguson. The last-named gentleman, who is an undergraduate member of the famous Magdalen College Choir, sang also at the Musical Union Concert, and has made this term a very marked advance in public estimation. His singing of the bass part in the "Stabat Mater" was really capital, and encourages the warmest hopes for his future as a singer.

A selection from Bach's "Matthew" Passion was sung in the Cathedral on the 15th ult., but from some cause was not very successful, neither chorus nor soloists seeming quite able to cope with the difficulties of the music. Bach's music, moreover, as well as Beethoven's, suffers if taken at too great a speed.

MUSIC IN THE WEST OF ENGLAND.

THERE is not much to report this month as the musical season practically came to an end with the commencement of Lent. Owing, however, to the disastrous floods with which Bristol has once more been visited two performances of interest were given which, for obvious reasons, can only be hinted at in this issue. Thus, on the 25th ult., the Bristol Orpheus Society under its Conductor, Mr. George Riseley, gave, with the assistance of Madame Marian McKenzie, a Concert in aid of the Floods Relief Fund; and on the 30th of the same month, Mr. Liebich, a well-known pianist, pupil of Hans von Bülow, gave a Concert for the same charity. Speaking, however, in chronological order, first comes the Ladies' Night of the Bristol Glee Society, which was held in the Colston Hall on the 1st ult. The programme was an interesting one, the execution of which reflected the highest possible credit on the Society's Conductor, Mr. George Riseley. This gentleman contributed two pieces of his own to the programme—the first a five-part composition with bass solo, entitled "The old Church Bells," and the second a similar work with tenor solo, named "Where'er my foot-steps stray." Of both these compositions it may be said that they are artistic efforts and fully deserved the applause awarded them.

On the 11th ult. the orchestral and vocal Concerts presided over by Mr. Trimnell came to a conclusion after four out of the six promised had been given. Lack of support was the cause of their sudden demise. Their cessation is to be regretted for more reasons than one. On the occasion referred to a novelty was Rheinberger's Concerto (Op. 137) for organ, string orchestra, and horns, which, however, with the exception of the Finale, proved to be somewhat dull and lacking in interest. Mr. F. W. Rootham played the organ part remarkably well, especially when the wretched character of the instrument at his disposal is taken into consideration. Madame Marian McKenzie was the vocalist, and was much applauded in songs by Gounod, Randegger, and Arne.

On the 26th ult. Sir Charles and Lady Hallé (Madame Néruda) gave a highly interesting and well attended Pianoforte and Violin Recital.

New York, March 16, 1889.

THE Apollo Club of Boston, on Wednesday evening, February 20, gave a Concert, which provided for a variety of tastes. The programme consisted of Brahms's Cantata "Rinaldo," for tenor solo, male chorus, and orchestra;

"Italian Salad," by Genée; "The Haunted Mill," for baritone solo, male chorus, and orchestra, by E. Templeton Strong; Pearsall's "O, who will o'er the downs?" "Love, thine eyelids close," by Grossbauer; and "Salamis," for baritone solo, chorus, and orchestra, by Gernsheim. The effect of Brahms's Cantata was sadly marred by a miserable translation.

On Sunday evening, February 24, the Famous old Handel and Haydn Society of Boston gave Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer" and Verdi's "Requiem" at the Music Hall. The audience was uncommonly large and brilliant, and the chorus turned out in full force. The Mendelssohn composition had not been given by this organisation for several years, and the Verdi work was last performed by it in 1880. The chorus sang in such a manner as to elicit the highest praise. There might have been something more of delicacy in the piano passages, but in the vigorous parts of the work the chorus sang with boldness and impressive power. The body of tone produced by the Society has greatly improved, the male portion of the chorus showing renewed vigour. The soloists at this performance were Miss E. C. Hamlin, Miss Clara Poole, Messrs. A. L. King and G. Campanari, a quartet which proved to be excellent. Miss Poole and Mr. Campanari took the first honours. Mr. King has a pure lyric tenor voice of remarkable beauty. The orchestral portions of the work were admirably played. Mr. Carl Zerrahn conducted.

At the seventeenth Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, February 23, Dvorák's Symphonic Variations (Op. 78) were given for the first time in Boston, and repeated the great success of the work when first heard in New York. American critics, almost without dissent, have accorded to this noble composition a place in the front rank of recent orchestral works. At the Concert of March 2, Chadwick's Overture "Melpomene" was revived. Mr. Chadwick is an American composer, and the Boston critics speak very highly of his composition.

On Tuesday evening, March 5, the fourth Subscription Concert of the seventeenth season of the Apollo Musical Club of Chicago, was given at the Central Music Hall. Schumann's "Manfred" was given. Mr. George Riddle was the reader, and Dr. B. Merrill Hopkinson sang the baritone solos. This was followed by Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Golden Legend." The soloists were as follows: Elsie, Miss Genevra E. Johnston; Ursula, Miss Christine Nielson (happy name); Prince Henry, Mr. George J. Parker; and Lucifer, Dr. Merrill Hopkinson. Bells specially imported for the occasion were used at this performance. Sir Arthur Sullivan's lovely music was received with the warmest applause.

At the Concert of the Symphony Society of Chicago, on March 1, the following programme was performed:—Gouvy's Symphony in D major (first time in America), Mackenzie's "Benedictus" (first time), and Ignatz Bonnell's Ballet Suite, "A Fairy Tale from the Campaign." Moritz Rosenthal, the phenomenal pianist, played Chopin's E minor Concerto and his own arrangement of Liszt's Twelfth Hungarian Rhapsody.

On February 22 the choir of Grace Church, Chicago, gave a Concert in the Central Music Hall. This choir consists of forty boy sopranos, ten boy altos, and twenty-five adult tenors and basses. Among the numbers on the programme were Gounod's Anthem "Send out Thy light" and Handel's "Hallelujah" Chorus. This choir has a fine preparatory department, where choristers are trained from childhood. Some of the little fellows, under eight years of age, appeared at this Concert. The Organist of the church is Mr. Clarence Eddy, and the Choirmaster is Mr. H. B. Roney.

On February 20, in Cincinnati, the Opera Club gave a performance of Flotow's "Stradella." The chorus consisted of fifty singers. Miss Mabel Haas, of Chicago, appeared in the soprano rôle, and Mr. Jaster, of Cleveland, was the Stradella. At the Music Hall, on Sunday afternoon, February 17, the programme performed gave a good idea of what is called "popular" music in Cincinnati. It included pieces by Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Strauss, Wagner, Brissin, Liszt, Wallace, Halévy, Vieuxtemps, Boccherini, Suppé, and Resch.

Massenet's Cantata "Eve" was given by the Choral Society of St. Louis on February 28.

On Friday evening, February 15, the Mozart Club of Pittsburg gave a Concert in the old City Hall. The performance included Schubert's Overture "Rosamunde"; Haydn's Recitative and Air, "Rolling in foaming billows" (Mr. John B. Trapp); Mozart's "Al desio di chi t'adora" (Mrs. Mathilde Henkler); and Smart's "Bride of Dunkerron," solos by Mrs. J. Sharpe McDonald, Mr. Paul Zimmerman, and Mr. E. H. Dermitt.

In Philadelphia, on February 19, St. Andrew's Choral Society gave a Concert at St. Andrew's Church. A number of English glees and part-songs were sung, and Gounod's Anthem "Send out Thy light." The soloists were Madame de Bereghy, violinist; Mrs. V. P. Spear and Miss Adele Kelpley, sopranos; Miss Anna S. Compton, contralto; Mr. Thomas Haynes, tenor; and Mr. Louis C. Hickman, bass.

The third Symphony Concert of the Academy of Music orchestra took place on February 19, under Mr. Loufs A. Gaertner. The programme included works by Gade, Beethoven, Gaertner, Taubert, Vieuxtemps, Spohr, Ernst, Merkel, and Haydn.

The Oratorio Society of Stamford (Conn.), a new organization, performed "Judas Maccabæus" on Thursday evening, January 24, in the Presbyterian Church. The soloists were Miss Annie M. Weed, Mrs. N. L. Huntington, Mr. M. W. H. Lawton, and Mr. Alfred Hallam, who is also the Conductor of the Society. The choruses were the feature of the evening, and were well sustained with spirit and good attack, showing the careful training given to the choir by their young Conductor. Mr. F. W. Nicholls was at the organ and Miss Lena Toms at the pianoforte.

The sixth Concert of the Buffalo Orchestra was given at the Music Hall in that city, on February 18. The programme contained pieces by Schubert, Mendelssohn, Saint-Saëns, Wagner, Cherubini, Brenner, Pinsuti, Nessler, and H. Hofmann.

During the week ending March 2, the Opera Club of Rochester produced Gilbert and Clay's comic opera "Princess Toto," which was performed with great success.

The Handel and Haydn Society of San Francisco produced, on February 21, a new Oratorio by its Director, Mr. H. J. Stewart, entitled "The Nativity," and a vocal Fugue by Mr. John Parrott, jun. The San Francisco Examiner says of the new Oratorio:—"In its general character the composition seems to be light in comparison with the solid and rich old works that lie in a long line behind it." Madame Camilla Urso, violinist, appeared at this Concert and played Mendelssohn's Concerto in her usual noble style.

In New York there has been an abundance of good music. At the Thomas Concert, on March 6, Mr. E. A. McDowell, an American composer, played his own Pianoforte Concerto in D minor for the first time in this city. The Concerto is not a mere virtuoso piece, filled with difficult passages for the pianoforte; it is a romantic, vigorous composition for pianoforte and orchestra together. The composition as a whole is worthy of high praise, and should take an exalted position in modern pianoforte music.

At the fifth Concert of the Philharmonic Society, March 9, the programme contained Mackenzie's Overture "Twelfth Night" (Op. 40) in F, for the first time. The soloist of the Concert was Madame Schroeder-Hanfstångl, of the German opera.

Yesterday afternoon at its public rehearsal, and to-night at its Concert, the Symphony Society's programme was entirely composed of Beethoven music, as follows:—Symphony (No. 1), Aria ("Ah, perfido"), "Leonore" Overture (No. 3), Symphony (No. 9). The soloists were Madame Schroeder-Hanfstångl, Mrs. Carl Alves, Mr. Clarke, and Mr. J. C. Dempsey. The full chorus of the Oratorio Society assisted.

The first complete representation of Wagner's "Nibelung" tetralogy came to a conclusion at the Metropolitan Opera House on Monday evening, the 11th inst., when "Die Götterdämmerung" was given for the first time this season. Herr Alvary made his début as Siegfried and Frau Lehmann repeated her grand impersonation of Brünnhilde. The dramas generally have been well mounted and well performed throughout. The audiences were enormous, people coming to New York from all over the country, and the enthusiasm was extraordinary. "Il Trovatore" was given on Wednesday evening, and last night the second series of Nibelung representations began with "Das Rheingold." The other three works were to be heard on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday following, and the opera season closed with the Saturday matinée.

On February 27 the Philharmonic Society at Toronto performed Handel's Oratorio "Samson" at the Pavilion. Both the chorus and orchestra owe their existence, it may be said, to Mr. Torrington, whose successful efforts in behalf of the best music the world can produce are well known in Toronto. Miss Hortense Pierse, of New York, sang the soprano solos. Her greatest success was in "Let the bright Seraphim," the trumpet accompaniment being supplied by Mr. Clarke. Miss Adele Strauss gave an excellent interpretation of the contralto solos; Mr. Charles A. Rice, of New York, was the tenor; Mr. Babcock was the principal bass, with whom Mr. Warrington, as Manoah, deservedly shared the honours of the evening.

MR. CARL ROSA has had for some time in active rehearsal, and will produce in the provinces within a week or two, the late Sir George Macfarren's opera "She stoops to conquer." This is welcome news for the lovers of native art.

THE Annual Festival of the London Sunday School Choir took place at the Royal Albert Hall on the evening of the 23rd ult. A large assemblage was present, the area especially being well filled. The executive forces occupied the whole of the available space, and, in addition to a body of some 1,500 voices, selected from the various metropolitan districts, there was a band of eighty instrumentalists, whose co-operation furnished a new and valuable feature in the proceedings of the Society. To this, we think, may be partly attributed the marked advance now shown over the performances of previous years; the improvement in regard to precision, steadiness, and sustaining power was so perceptible that it took many by surprise. Yet it would be unfair not to accord a meed of praise for this result to the Conductor, Mr. Luther Hinton, who certainly made manifest a perfect control over his 1,600 executants. The first part of the programme consisted of a sacred selection, including the chorus from "Judas Maccabæus", "We never will bow down," the prayer from "Moses in Egypt" (encored), the unaccompanied Evening Hymn from "The Golden Legend," and Alfred Gaul's setting of "The Silent Land." Among the secular pieces in the second part the most successful were Mendelssohn's "First day of Spring" and Smart's Trio for female voices entitled "Evening." Vocal solos were effectively rendered by Miss Lizzie Neal and Mr. Robert Hilton, and Mr. John Saunders played a couple of violin pieces. Mr. David Davies rendered useful service at the organ. Between the parts a glee party (under the direction of Mr. James A. Birch) appeared in a variety of quaint old English costumes and sang a number of glees with singularly diverting effect, winning some of the loudest applause of the evening from an exceptionally demonstrative audience.

THE Annual Concert of the Violin Classes in connection with the Birkbeck Institution (formerly under the direction of the late Mr. Fitzhenry) was given on the 23rd ult. by Mr. T. E. Gatehouse, the present Instructor. Mr. Gatehouse played several violin solos with remarkable skill, making a special effect in Dr. Mackenzie's beautiful and expressive Benedictus. The vocalists who assisted were Miss Ethel Winn (in place of Mrs. Margaret Hoare, who was indisposed), Mrs. Alexander Siemens, Mr. Arthur Thompson, Mr. T. H. Harrison, and Mr. J. Kift (whose humorous songs were received with much favour). The admirable singing of Mrs. Siemens should be mentioned as being one of the chief successes of the evening. Miss Jessie Fenn, Mr. Siemens, and Mr. Alfred Izard were the accompanists. Mr. Charles Fry gave a sympathetic rendering of "The Story of the Faithful Soul," and received a hearty encore for his recitation of the French lesson scene in "Henry V." It would perhaps be judicious on future occasions to shorten the selections given by the students of the Violin Classes, although these are the prominent features of the Concert, as the length of these on the occasion under notice, together with the numerous encores, prolonged the Concert to an unusually late hour.

THE third of the Stoke Newington and Highbury Subscription Concerts, under the direction of Mr. James Matthews, was given on the 21st ult., when the chief feature in the programme was Mendelssohn's "Athalie." The chorus, numbering 100 voices, sang with remarkable precision and vigour under the very able guidance of Mr. Matthews. The solo vocalists were Miss Annie Marriott—whose rendering of the chief soprano music was, as usual, most effective and dramatic—Miss Hilda Wilson, and Miss Rose Dafforne. Mr. Charles Fry, who recited the verses, was awarded with hearty applause after his declamation of the accompanied recitation. Mr. Fountain Meen (pianoforte) and Mr. J. H. Maunder (harmonium) rendered skilful and judicious aid throughout in the accompaniments. The second part of the Concert, which consisted of a miscellaneous selection of sacred music, included the "Hailstone" and other Handel choruses, excellently given. The vocalists above named were joined by Mr. Harper Kearton and Mr. Watkin Mills, who received an enthusiastic encore for his singing of "Why do the nations." The hall was filled to its utmost capacity.

THERE was a large attendance at the Concert given by Madame Eugene Oswald and Madame Carrie Blackwell in Westminster Town Hall, on the evening of the 5th ult. The programme formed an attractive combination of good chamber music and high-class ballads. In the former section Madame Oswald took a leading part, making manifest sterling capabilities as a pianist in a group of pieces by Chopin, a Waltz by Moszkowski, and the "Novelletten" by Niels Gade, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, wherein she had the assistance of Messrs. Schilsky and Albert. These efforts all earned hearty applause. Madame Blackwell, who possesses an agreeable and well-trained voice, displayed much refinement and expression in her delivery of Bishop's "Tell me, my heart," and Hope Temple's charming song "In sweet September," besides taking part in a duet and a trio with Mr. Reginald Groome and Mr. Franklin Clive. Madame Marian McKenzie also sang, and was heard to especial advantage in Cowen's "Because" and "Snowflakes." Mr. Burnham Horner was at the pianoforte.

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE COLERIDGE, whose love for the Musical Art is so well known, has consented to become one of the Trustees of the Choir Benevolent Fund, in the place of the Dean of St. Paul's, who has resigned the office owing to ill-health. The other Trustees are Earl Beauchamp and the Dean of Westminster. The last named kindly presented to the Fund the offertory collected at the Abbey on the morning of the 17th ult. This is an example which many country Cathedral authorities might well follow, considering the good objects of the Fund, and the fact that over 100 lay clerks throughout the kingdom are subscribing members. The Society specially needs an increase of honorary annual subscribers, as owing to death and other causes they have been greatly reduced in number during the last few years.

At the well-known Church of St. Margaret Pattens, Rood Lane, special services have been given on every Wednesday evening during the Lenten season. The following works have been rendered during the past month: Rossini's "Stabat Mater" on the 13th, Gounod's "Redemption, Part I," on the 20th, and the "Stabat Mater" again on the 27th. The Communion Services have been Schubert in A flat, Palestrina, and Gounod's third "Messe Solennelle," while the Anthems were Rossini's "La Carita," Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer," "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me," "Saviour of sinners" ("Ave Maria"), Haydn's "Distracted with care and anguish," and others. An efficient choir, under the able guidance of the Organist and Choirmaster, Mr. Buttery, has presented careful versions of the several works selected. It is intended to perform Palestrina's "Stabat Mater" during the course of these services before Easter.

THE high character of the music at the "Meistersingers" Club was illustrated by an excellent Orchestral Concert, given on the 6th ult., under the direction of Mr. Wilhelm Ganz. The orchestra was small but complete, and an admirable performance of Beethoven's No. 4 Symphony and a selection of pieces from Wagner's "Meistersinger," together with other works of similar excellence in character, delighted the audience. A very pleasant Soirée-Musicale was given on Wednesday evening, the 20th ult., also under the able direction of Mr. Ganz. A varied and interesting programme was performed by Miss Georgina Ganz, Miss Marian McKenzie, Mdle. Tremelli, the Misses Eissler, Mr. Orlando Harley, and Mr. Avon D. Saxon. Miss Pauline Barrett gave two recitations, in which she gained the entire approbation of her audience.

MR. JAMES A. BIRCH gave his Annual Concert at the Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, on the 19th ult., when Dr. Bridge's "Callirhoë" was performed by his choir, the Temperance Choral Society. The composer conducted, and the accompaniments were played by Mr. F. Wilson-Parish (pianoforte) and Mr. W. G. Alcock (American organ). The gongs necessary to the scene in the grove were played by Herr Schroeder. The principal parts were sung by Miss Agnes Wilson, Madame Annie Williams, and Mr. Henry Guy. The performance was very good, the chorus having made themselves proficient in the several numbers in which they were concerned. The Concert concluded with a miscellaneous selection of solos, part-songs, &c., conducted by Mr. J. A. Birch, in which the above-named vocalists, with Miss Bessie Webber, took part.

A CONCERT was given on Thursday evening, February 28, in the Christ Church Lecture Hall, Beckenham, by Mr. F. W. Partridge's Select Choir. The programme included the setting by Hermann Goetz of the 137th Psalm. The soprano solo was sung by Miss Pamphilon. Anderton's "Wreck of the Hesperus" and Eaton Faning's "Daybreak" were also given, the latter with particularly good effect. Violin solos—the Benedictus and Saltarello of Mackenzie—were well played by Mr. W. E. Best. Mr. Sydney Leppard was the accompanist, and he also took the chief part in Gade's Sonata in D minor, for pianoforte and violin. In addition to conducting, Mr. F. W. Partridge played Chopin's Impromptu in F sharp, and sang Handel's air "His sceptre is the rod." Some recitations by Mr. Robert O'Meara were much enjoyed.

MISS NETTIE WOOD gave her first evening Concert at Steinway Hall, on the 7th ult. Her individual contributions to a diversified programme comprised "Una voce," Gounod's "Entreat me not to leave thee," and "Sullivan's "My dearest heart," in all of which the young vocalist earned warm approbation for her pure method and pleasing, intelligent style. Miss Wood should find in this result true encouragement to continue her studies with earnestness and zeal. In addition to the Concert-giver, the artists sharing in the evening's programme were Miss Hannah Jones, Miss Alice Suter, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Charles Chilly, Mr. Henry Ward, Mr. Herbert Lake (pianoforte), Mr. Pollitzer (violin), and Mr. H. A. Chapman (flute), the accompanists being Messrs. Lake and Kinke.

At the last of the Winter Readings, which took place in the All Saints' Rooms, Kensington Park Road, on the 4th ult., a selection from the Play of "Alcestis," by Euripides (adapted by Mr. Frank Murray from Dr. Potter's translation), was performed with the incidental music by Mr. Henry Gadsby. The text was recited by Miss Maud Webster, and the choruses were sung by the gentlemen of All Saints' Choir. The performance was in every way most successful, and the audience were enabled to enjoy the excellence of the music to the fullest extent. A miscellaneous selection was given as a second part of the Concert, in which many of the pupils of the Conductor, Mr. Ernest Lake, assisted.

MR. EDWARDS gave a Lecture on "Athalie" at the Young Men's Christian Association, Aldersgate Street, on the 16th ult. One of the principal attractions was the production by Mr. Edwards of a Fugue which, it was asserted, was originally written by Mendelssohn as a closing number for "Athalie," but which has never been published. The MS. of this Fugue was obtained from the Imperial Library in Berlin. During the evening meeting an interesting ceremony took place, in the form of the presentation of a purse of gold and an illuminated address to Mr. A. H. Bonner, who has been the Hon. Secretary of the Association of Tonic Sol-fa Choirs since its formation.

MR. SIDNEY BARRACLOUGH, a promising young vocalist, gave an evening Concert at Steinway Hall, on the 4th ult. Owing to a sudden attack of indisposition he was unable himself to take any part in the programme, but the majority of the other artists announced duly appeared, and made up between them a musical entertainment of sufficient merit and interest. Mdlle. Marie de Lido, Miss Lucille Saunders, Mr. Mhanes, and Mr. Franklin Clive supplied the best features of the vocal element; Mr. Horace Cadogan contributed some pianoforte and Mdlle. Hirsch some violin solos; and Miss Marie de Grey won deserved favour for some delightful recitations.

MR. CARRODUS gave the second of his series of Drawing-room Concerts at the Hampstead Conservatoire Hall, on the 18th ult. The programme included a String Quartet (Op. 18, No. 4) by Beethoven, in which Mr. Carrodus was joined by Messrs. Bernhard Carrodus, W. T. Wood, and J. Carrodus, jun.; a Pianoforte Quartet (Op. 71) by Molique, and a Pianoforte Quintet (Op. 209) by Reisiger. Mr. Herbert Sharpe, of the Royal College, played the pianoforte part, and made a most favourable impression. Mr. Ernest Carrodus contributed a solo for the double-bass, and Miss Emily Armfield sang songs by Kjerulf and Sullivan in a pleasing manner.

At the Highbury Athenæum, on Monday evening, the 25th ult., the fourth Concert of the Highbury Philharmonic Society took place. The chief feature in the programme was Clay's Cantata "Lalla Rookh," which had an acceptable rendering under Mr. G. H. Betjemann, the chorus singing well and the orchestra showing a very creditable degree of efficiency. The solos were taken by Miss Thornthwaite, Miss Norman, Mr. Houghton, and Mr. Edgar Roberts. Following the Cantata came three movements from "Cleopatra," an Orchestral Suite written by Mancinelli—a Funeral March, Barcarolle, and Triumphal March—performed on this occasion for the first time in London.

A CONCERT of Sacred Music was given by the Hammer-smith and Shepherd's Bush Choral Union, at Albion Road Church, on Wednesday evening, February 27, when Stainer's Cantata "The Daughter of Jairus" and a miscellaneous selection were admirably performed by a string orchestra and chorus of sixty. The soloists comprised Miss Selina Quick, Mr. C. T. Grimstick, and Mr. Thurley Beale. Miss Jessie Bridge presided at the pianoforte, Mr. Bernard Fisher at the organ, and Mr. Humphreys acted as leader of the orchestra. Mr. E. Fruin conducted.

THE Brixton Choral Society gave its second Concert, at Brixton Hall, on the 11th ult., when Handel's "Messiah" was performed. The choruses were sung with considerable precision by a choir of 180 voices, while the accompaniments were excellently played by a full orchestra of professional musicians. The solos were sung by Miss Kate Norman, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Dyved Lewys, and Mr. David Hughes. Mr. W. J. Kipps, F.C.O., presided at the organ, and Mr. Douglas Redman, Organist of Brixton Church, conducted.

A DINNER to celebrate the jubilee of Dr. Joachim's appearance as a public performer was given on the 14th ult., in the hall of Caius College, Cambridge. The Provost of King's presided, and the company numbered nearly 100. Some excellent speeches were made by the Chairman, Dr. Joachim, Sir F. Leighton, Sir William Thompson, Mr. Sedley Taylor, Dr. Parry, Professor Stanford, Mr. Alma Tadema, and others. A movement is on foot to present Dr. Joachim with a violin, valued at upwards of £1,000, in commemoration of his artistic jubilee.

THE first annual dinner of the London College of Music was held on the 26th ult., at the Holborn Restaurant, Mr. W. H. Cummings, President, in the chair. In proposing the toast of the evening, Mr. Cummings said they were celebrating the first anniversary of a young institution that was perhaps not very widely known. At their first examination eight candidates presented themselves, but on the last occasion there were no less than 400. An admirable selection of vocal and instrumental music was performed during the evening.

MEYERSSOHN'S "Elijah" was performed at the Hampstead Conservatoire Hall on Monday, the 4th ult. Madame Nordica, Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Brereton sustained the chief parts, and were joined in the double quartet by Miss Mildred Harwood, Miss Isabel Tomalin, Mr. Thomas Cassidy, and Mr. Stanley Smith. The band and chorus were admirable. Mr. Carrodus was the leader, and Mr. Geaussen the Conductor. "The Redemption" will be given at the next Concert, on the 8th inst.

AN Exhibition of specimens of the viola d'amour, an instrument of the violin family popular in the early part of the last century, was made at the Rooms of the Royal Society of Musicians by Mr. Carli Zoeller, on the 14th ult., together with some books and sundries relating to the instrument. A selection of music written for the viola d'amour and the viola da gamba was played by Messrs. Zoeller, Payne, and Schneider in illustration of a paper on the subject which was read by Mr. G. Carnaby Harrower.

At the Church of St. Stephen's, South Kensington, Rossini's "Stabat Mater," with orchestra, has been performed each week during Lent on Friday evenings, and will be continued until Good Friday, under the direction of Mr. Hamilton Robinson, the Organist. The work is sung in Latin and a literal translation is distributed amongst the people. The performance of the music to words written in a tongue "not understood of the people" does not lessen its interest, though it may raise a question as to its legality.

At the Stormont Hall on Monday, the 4th ult. the South-West Choral Society gave its third annual performance of "The Messiah." The band and chorus consisted of 100 performers; Mr. Bond conducted. The choruses were splendidly given, the attack and tone being good. The band, led by Mr. Wade, worked well. The solos were sung by Madame Webber, Miss Maude Hayter, Mr. Maskell Hardy, and Mr. Charles Ortner.

MR. W. PINNEY, Mus. Bac., Oxon., Organist of St. George's, Hanover Square, was engaged for the Organ Recitals during the Ice Carnival at the Royal Albert Hall. His selections were well chosen from the works of the great composers, and the performance of them was justly and highly appreciated. Mr. Pinney also contributed two of his own compositions—viz., St. George's "Wedding March" and a graceful Gavotte.

THE first and second parts of Sir Julius Benedict's Oratorio "St. Peter" were given at St. John's, Waterloo Road, S.E., on Sunday afternoon, the 17th ult., before a very large congregation. The solos were rendered by Master H. Warren, Miss Jennie Bawtree, Mr. J. Gostick, and Mr. Frederick Winton, the chorus being supplied by the choir of the church, under the direction of the Organist, Mr. Henry J. B. Dart, who also presided at the organ.

ON Wednesday evening, February 27, Niels W. Gade's "Zion" was given by the Denmark Hill Choral Society in St. Matthew's School Room. The choruses were sung with precision and firmness, and Mr. W. D. Powell sang the baritone solo. Miss M. I. Davy was at the pianoforte, Mr. F. H. Stokes at the American organ, and Mr. J. Warriner, Mus. Bac., T.C.D., was the Conductor. The second part of the Concert was miscellaneous.

Selections were given from the works of Handel, Haydn, Mendelssohn, and Meyerbeer. Mr. James Loaring conducted and performed three solos on the fine organ of the Church.

MR. W. H. HARPER gave his second annual Smoking Concert on the 7th ult., at Anderson's Hotel, Fleet Street. He was assisted by Messrs. J. Hodges, Lawrence Fryer, Arthur Thompson, J. Gilby, Marshall Jones, and A. Hubbard. Mr. T. E. Gatehouse was the violinist, Mr. W. H. Harper presided at the pianoforte, and recitations were given by Messrs. H. Lloyd and Dacres Smith.

MENDELSSOHN'S Motet "Hear my Prayer" was given after the evening service at St. Matthew's Church, Denmark Hill, on the first Sunday in Lent, being the first of a series of Oratorio performances by the choir. The whole service was well sung under the direction of Mr. J. Warriner, Mus. Bac., T.C.D., Organist of the Church.

A PERFORMANCE of Stainer's sacred Cantata "The Crucifixion" was given by the choir of St. James's Church, Knatchbull Road, Camberwell, on Ash Wednesday evening. The solo portions of the work were divided between Mr. J. S. Holliday, Mr. C. Riches, Mr. Preston, and Mr. W. Bull. Mr. R. Felix Blackbee presided at the organ.

A CONCERT was given at the Cavendish Rooms, on the 20th ult., when an Operetta, entitled "The Village Festival," written and composed by Mr. Tindall, was produced. The soprano and tenor airs were sung by Miss Johnstone and Mr. Tandy in a manner which greatly contributed to the success of the work.

AFTER a break of some two months, the course of Lectures at the College of Organists was resumed on the 5th ult., when Mr. James Turpin, Mus. Bac., read an able paper on "False Relations," this paper being the second part of his treatment of the subject.

MR. W. A. BARRETT, 39, Angell Road, Brixton, London, asks us to make known that he will be glad to receive contributions of quaint traditional songs, words and music, which are popular in various places, for insertion in his forthcoming work on the subject.

MR. RALPH NORRIS, Organist of St. Nicholas, Cole Abbey, concluded a series of Historical Recitals on the 11th ult., showing the growth and development of organ music.

REVIEWS.

The Evolution of the Beautiful in Sound. By Henry Wylde, Mus. Doc., Cantab. [Manchester: Heywood.]

IN the two sections of this ably written treatise the author has enabled us to trace the origin, history, and gradual evolution of the modern series of sounds, from the most ancient periods through the Greek, Ecclesiastical, and Mediæval periods up to the present time, in a manner though learned yet lucid. He shows how that the origin of the beautiful in sound, treated from a metaphysical point of view, is to be found in human nature itself, as an answer to the mental demand of every sense for the true and beautiful. The formulation of this answer into a scientific system, our author contends, must be in harmony with the fundamental laws of nature; hence, musical art to be true and beautiful must accord with mathematical order as well as æsthetic taste. This point is ingeniously defended, though it may not be possible to convince every one by the reasoning advanced. In tracing the progress of art historically he speaks of the Pentatonic system, and affirms that its origin is to be traced primarily to the rude attempts at instrumentation amongst the ancient nations that flourished prior to the Greek era, such as the Hindoos, Assyrians, Egyptians, Chinese, and other peoples of antiquity. The five-stringed lyre, flute, lute, &c., gave rise to the attempt to formulate that system. Amphion, Orpheus, Terpander, and others elaborated the early stringed lyre, in some instances increasing the number of strings, but leaving no well-defined system of tones behind up to the Pythagorean era. In connection with this, elaborate descriptions and tabular illustrations are given of the Tetrachordal systems, both disjunct and conjunct.

The Pythagorean system is also fully described. Its failure to construct a scale which should unite the true and the beautiful, or mathematical principles with æsthetic taste, is asserted to be attributable to Pythagoras's leading idea of making the musical scale conform to the cosmic order of the heavenly bodies. Pythagoras announced the principle upon which a true musical scale between the notes of the octave should be constructed, but practically failed to exemplify his theorem, for reasons which are stated above. Aristoxenes, Eratosthenes, and finally Ptolemy formulated a series of sounds, but they likewise failed to indicate the true and beautiful. Euclid's Canon, on which so much is rested by the old theorists, was only a re-statement or exemplification of the Pythagorean system.

Besides these, all the Greek systems are elaborately described. These will be found to be only formulations of the old Tetrachordal systems rather than original methods. The Pythagoreans, although defining the basic idea of a true scale, yet failed to exemplify their principles; and after Pythagoras no further modification of his method was attempted until Ptolemy wrote his "Harmonicorum." Thus the customary reverence for classical authorities, whether as originators or founders of a true series of sounds, is stated to have arisen from conventional but erroneous ideas of what the Greeks affected either as discoverers or formulators. Dr. Wylde thinks that this reverence calls for a complete study of their various systems by way of correcting popular errors, and he proves that melodic progression was the only method that they could accept whilst harmonious combinations of different tones were impossible.

Again, it is shown that the early ecclesiastical scales were nothing more nor less than the Greek systems formulated afresh by Ptolemy. Up to the tenth century the combination of tones into harmony had been impossible for want of a due arrangement of the intervals or pitch of the several notes within the octave.

The invention of Descant first showed the feasibility of combining notes with rude harmony. Canonical institutions followed, and hence the history of music, up to the formation of a musical grammar, became a series of progressive styles, duly described, and culminating in the formation of the modern great scale, and the attempts at modification by the mean tone and equal tempered systems.

The specialties of this work, in dealing with the evolution of the beautiful in sound, are found in the thorough and searching analysis of the origin, progress, and ultimate development of musical science, tracing up tonal experiments from their primordial exercise in nature, through all the varieties of systems, ancient and mediæval, until their culmination in modern art. The proofs that are afforded of the indissoluble union between the "true" and the "beautiful," or, in other words, between arbitrary tonal laws and pure æsthetic taste are offered, and the book practically condenses the voluminous mass of theoretical matter contained in Helmholtz's Treatise, in Ellis's Commentaries, and many other costly and diffuse treatises on musical growth and history. Numerous and carefully prepared tabular illustrations of every position assumed are supplied in the text, which is further interspersed with highly suggestive reading matter, and opens up wide avenues for thought, hopes of progress, and elevating views for the illimitable possibilities of music and the future of musical art.

Benedicite, Omnia Opera. Set to music by C. E. Miller, J. W. Elliott, Alfred J. Eyre, and Albert Wood.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE favour with which the restoration of the Benedicite in the place of the Te Deum in the Morning Service has been received, has called forth a number of settings by various musicians. The latest additions are those by the writers whose names are quoted above. Taking them in the order as given, a word of commendation is due to Mr. Miller for his setting, which is melodious and effective, and although the chant for verse twenty-seven to end contains an interval, which may seem difficult to the eye, it is not so to the ear. Mr. Elliott makes a break in the continuity of the verses as usually set, by providing one change at verse nine and another at verse eighteen, as is commonly done. Variety is obtained by the judicious alternative of unison and harmony at verse twenty-seven to end, and the whole setting is effective and good. Mr. Eyre's music is also a bold alternation of unison and harmony, and appended to the setting of the Benedicite is an excellent quadruple chant for the Te Deum. The quadruple chant-form has been adopted by Mr. Wood for his setting of the Benedicite, the form being complete in four verses. A special arrangement is made for the Gloria. The whole of these settings may be accepted as valuable additions to the music already existing for the "Song of the Three Children," now in common use by the church in the Lenten and Advent seasons.

Part-Songs for Treble Voices. Specially adapted for High Schools. Edited by Mrs. Carey Brock and M. A. Sidebotham. Part II. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

WE heartily commend this selection of Part-songs—all arranged for three treble voices—the first Book of which we noticed in March last year, not only as containing some good practice for singing in concerted music, but because all the numbers are melodious enough to become general favourites. No. 1, "Blow, gentle gales" (originally a quintet), is one of Sir Henry Bishop's most popular choral pieces, and makes an effective trio, as arranged by Miss Sidebotham. No. 2, "The bird at sea," written by Mrs. Hemans and composed by Henry Smart, is one of those refined and attractive trios for which the composer stands almost unrivalled, and is too well known to need a word of welcome. No. 3, "Elves of the forest," is the trio in the second act of the Opera "Die Zauberflöte"—"Seid uns zum zweitenmal willkommen" (adapted to English words by Miss Sidebotham)—an excellent specimen of Mozart's style, the beauties of which will well repay any amount of study. No. 4, "Bird of the wilderness," composed by Burnham W. Horner. No. 5, "Boscobel" (music by Miss Sidebotham), and Elizabeth Stirling's four-part song, "All among the barley," arranged for three voices by Berthold Tours, complete a volume which we hope will very shortly find its way into all schools where part-singing is carefully and earnestly studied.

Schilffieder (Reed Songs). For Voice and Pianoforte. Words by N. Lenau. Composed by Sebastian B. Schlesinger (Op. 32). [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

APART from the musical merit of these Lake-songs, the composer deserves much credit for so diversifying the character of the pieces as to avoid creating the slightest feeling of monotony in their treatment. No. 1, a calm and melodious song amongst the reeds, in the gloaming, and No. 2, a dreamy Reverie during the splendour of the sunset, are happily contrasted with the impassioned subject of No. 3, expressive of a rain-storm, an agitato accompaniment in triplets materially heightening the effect of the melodious voice part. The rising of the wind, with vivid flashes of lightning, in No. 4, and the placid feeling induced by the moonlight reposing upon the glassy lake in the fifth and final song (an appropriately quiet piece, sympathetically accompanied), form an effective conclusion to what may truly be termed a "Circle of Songs," the delicate treatment of which, both in the verses and their musical colouring, cannot fail to ensure for them a ready acceptance.

Musical Anecdotes and Stories of the Great Musicians.
[George Gill and Sons.]

THERE are many anecdotes and stories in the pages of this work which have done duty over and over again in books of like character. Others there are which appear in a collection of this kind for the first time. Of these latter all the anecdotes concerning Balfe may be mentioned. These have been taken without acknowledgment from Mr. Barrett's "Balfe, his life and work." There is no preface to explain this method of making up a book and it is therefore possible that other works have been also laid under forced contribution. There is no index to the contents and the book is greatly decreased in value, for few readers of anecdotes care to take the trouble to go through a book to find what they require. There are portraits of several of the personages spoken of, all apparently taken from other works; some of these are good while others are very bad.

Original Compositions for the Organ, Nos. 111 and 112.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE first of these numbers consists of a Pastorale in D by Mr. Luard Selby, whose tasteful organ music we have noticed on several former occasions. The present is a charming sketch of very moderate difficulty, though the work is fairly divided between the manuals and the pedals. The registering shows a feeling for orchestral colour and variety, and ought to prove extremely effective. The next number contains Six Easy Voluntaries by Kate Loder. Although female composers are more numerous than formerly, the organ has not as yet attracted much of their attention, and these pieces must therefore command a certain amount of interest, if only to those who are attracted by curiosities. It may be said at once, however, that the composer needs no allowance on the score of sex. Her voluntaries are musicianly, and she has mastered the legitimate organ style of writing. They are all suitable for church use, and a tendency to over-indulgence in chromatic harmonies is the only defect in them worthy of mention.

FOREIGN NOTES.

FOUR complete performances of Wagner's "Nibelungen" tetralogy were announced to be given last month at St. Petersburg by a strong German Company, under the direction of Herr Angelo Neumann, and assisted by the Imperial orchestra. The ample guarantee fund demanded by Herr Neumann having been more than covered by subscribers, and the interest evinced in the Russian capital in the undertaking being very widespread, there can be scarcely a doubt of its proving a financial success at all events. From reports just to hand it would appear that the first performance of the giant work, which was completed on the 16th ult., passed off brilliantly, in the presence of many distinguished persons, and was, on the whole, greeted with enthusiasm. The most powerful impression, however, according to the St. Petersburg Zeitung, was produced by the final drama of the tetralogy—viz., "Götterdämmerung." The journal quoted adds: "By her impersonation of the part of Brünnhilde, Fräulein Malten shed a lustre over the entire work, which formed, indeed, an important element in the success of the first cycle. She has done an enormous service to German art, and in the face of superb artistic efforts such as she has just exhibited to us, all party feeling becomes silenced. The applause which rewarded her, as well as Herr Vogl, was simply deafening." The Russian Emperor was announced to be present at the second representation of the cycle.

A Correspondent writes to us from Berlin: The last of the Philharmonic Concerts of the season, on the 4th ult., was rendered memorable both on account of the co-operation on that evening of Johannes Brahms and Hans von Bülow, and of the extraordinary demonstration of enthusiastic appreciation on the part of the densely crowded audience. The fact of Bülow playing the pianoforte part of Brahms's Concerto in D minor to the composer's conducting was in itself sufficient to attract a multitude of music-lovers on this occasion. But what they had not bargained for—viz., Hans von Bülow's presiding at the big drum when Brahms conducted his "Academical" Overture, just added the finishing touch to the gradually developing "festival" elation of the audience. Bülow himself conducted a masterly performance of Beethoven's B flat major Symphony, as well as of the Overtures to Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" and to Wagner's "Tannhäuser."

A season of Italian Opera commenced last month at the Kroll's Theater of Berlin, Signor Luigi Arditi being the principal orchestral Conductor. M. Léo Delibes's opera "Lakmé," which is being splendidly mounted, will be one of the novelties to be introduced here.

Ignaz Brüll's new opera, "The Stony Heart" (founded upon Hauff's popular story), has now been performed at several German theatres with unvaried success, and is generally considered the best operatic production of the composer of "The Golden Cross."

Herr Nachbaur, the Munich tenor, well known also to London audiences, who for over twenty years has been the sole representative of Walter Stolzing in the "Meistersinger" performances at the Munich opera, has at length been replaced in that part by a more youthful rival, Herr Mikorcy. Nachbaur, it will be remembered, was also the ideal representative of Lohengrin in the eyes of the late ill-fated King Louis of Bavaria.

An opera by Lortzing, "Hans Sachs, oder Die Meistersänger," is about to be revived at the Stadt-Theater of Bayreuth. The opera, which was composed some five years before the completion by Wagner of his book of "Die Meistersinger," was first produced on June 23, 1840, at Leipzig, where it met with but little success, and was soon after forgotten. Although Lortzing generally compiled his own libretti, the present one is from the pen of an actor, Ringer, and is founded upon a drama bearing the same title, by Deinhardstein. The revival, at the classical town of Wagnerian drama, is an interesting one, though it will be difficult to trace any similarity in the dramatic situations of Herr Ringer's book to those of Wagner's stupendous comic opera.

The recent concert tour in Italy of the Heckmann Quartet was a great triumph, their performances being greatly appreciated not only by the general public, but also by the Court at the Quirinal. Queen Margherita invited the artists to play before the Court, where their performance excited great admiration. Herr Heckmann received from Her Majesty a valuable breast-pin with her initials in diamonds.

A young Englishman, Mr. Hongrave, of London, at present a pupil at the Raffische Conservatorium at Frankfurt, played Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat major, and some pieces by Chopin, at a recent Symphony Concert at Homburg, with much success. The local press speaks most highly of the young pianist's present attainments.

A scenic representation of Liszt's Oratorio "St. Elizabeth," similar to that which took place some time ago at the Weimar Theatre, is being planned at the Imperial Opera of Vienna, under the auspices of director Jahn.

An excellent and highly appreciated performance of Mr. Berthold Tours's "Gloria in excelsis" in D major is reported from Dresden, where it formed part of the usual evening performance in connection with the service at the American Church, under direction of its esteemed Organist, Mr. Whitney Coombs.

Herr Franz Rummel, the well known pianist, who is just now engaged upon a concert tour in Scandinavia, has recently had the honour of playing before the Queen of Denmark at Copenhagen, who expressed herself much gratified by his performance. Her Majesty of Denmark, it may be added, is herself a musician of no mean proficiency.

Max Bruch's new choral work "The Fiery Cross," met with its first public performance on February 26 at Breslau, under the composer's direction, and created a highly favourable impression. The new work is said to stand at least equally high with the same composer's "Odysseus" and "Achilleus." The solo parts on the occasion referred to were sung by Fräulein Sicherer of Munich, Herr Scheidemantel of Dresden, and Herr Kühn of Breslau.

A new comic opera, entitled "Der Meisterdieb," the libretto (founded upon Fitger's poetic story of the same title) from the pen of Gustav Kastrop, the music by Eugen Lindner, was brought out at the Weimar Hof-Theater, on the 3rd ult. The composer conducted the performance, which was much applauded, and the new work, considering especially the existing dearth of new works of this description, is likely to be retained in the repertory of the Weimar opera.

A new opera "Gorinskha," by Anton Rubinstein, will be brought out at the Imperial Opera of St. Petersburg during the present season.

The projected erection of a monument to Robert Schumann, at his native town of Zwickau, has been rendered somewhat problematical, inasmuch as, up to the present, only a few thousand marks have been subscribed by the public towards the object in view.

Our Russian contemporary, the music-journal Nuvelletot, having entered this year upon the fiftieth anniversary of its foundation, it is proposed by Russian composers, musical critics, and others connected with the art, to commemorate the event by special contributions on their part, to be embodied in an Album, which is to be distributed amongst the subscribers to the journal in question.

Signor Cagnoni's opera "Il Duca di Tapigliano," first produced in 1874, has been revived at the Teatro Sociale of Bergamo, with very considerable success.

A new ballet, entitled "La Sulamite," the music by Charles Haring, has been well received on its recent first performance at the Grand Théâtre of Bordeaux.

An opera by the Spanish composer Breton, "Gli Amanti di Teruel," has just been produced with much success at the Teatro Real of Madrid.

Weber's "Der Freischütz" was produced for the first time at East Saginaw (Michigan, U.S.), on February 3, under the direction of Herr Felix Jaeger.

With a success far surpassing that achieved by the same work last year, Verdi's "Otello" has just been reproduced at the San Carlo Theatre of Naples, under the able conductorship of Signor Mancinelli.

At the S. Carlo Theatre of Lisbon, a new opera "Flavia," by Adolphe Sauvinet, is being actively mounted; Verdi's "Otello" continuing in the meantime to attract numerous audiences.

A new music journal, the Gazeta Musical de Lisboa, has just been issued in the Portuguese capital.

Joseph Lauterbach, the well-known violinist and musician, has just celebrated, at Nuremberg, the fiftieth anniversary of his first appearance in public at that town, he being then seven years of age. Lauterbach is a professor of his instrument at the Dresden Conservatorium.

Dr. Emanuel Klitsch, an intimate friend of Robert Schumann, and one of the earliest contributors to the music journal founded by the latter—the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik—died at Zwickau on the 5th ult., aged seventy-seven.

The tenor Catelin, one of the favourite singers at the Théâtre Lyrique under the Second Empire, has just died in Paris, aged sixty, having, it is said, starved himself to death. Since his retirement from the lyrical stage, Catelin contracted miserly habits of a suicidal nature. He had been in receipt of a pension granted by the Société des Artistes Musiciens, and a considerable sum of money was discovered after his death hidden away amongst his furniture.

Ignacio Orcyero y Ramos, a much esteemed composer and organist of Madrid, died recently in that capital, aged sixty-one.

Carl Davidoff, the eminent violoncello player and musician, for many years a professor, and at one time the director of the Conservatoire of St. Petersburg, died at that capital on February 24, at the age of fifty-one. Davidoff was a native of Russia and received his musical training partly at Moscow and partly at Leipzig, at which latter town he was also, for a short period, a professor at the Conservatorium.

Baron Arnold von Senfft-Pilsach, an amateur baritone singer well known in German concert rooms, and the gifted pupil of Julius Stockhausen, died at Marburg on the 7th ult.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—It may not be uninteresting to students and others who are now reading Mr. Joseph Bennett's enjoyable articles on Handel in THE MUSICAL TIMES if a striking peculiarity in the "Utrecht Te Deum" be pointed out. It is this: the last chorus, "O Lord, in Thee have I trusted," which begins in D major with a subject almost identical with that of "The horse and his rider," ends with no less than four bars of subdominant harmony, thus:—

I have recently come into possession of a copy of Randall's full score of this work, which formerly belonged to Dr. William Crotch. On the last page the late Oxford Professor has written: "This is most original—a stop on fa—viz., a deceptive cadence, probably to express ye word confounded." Dr. Crotch also remarks that the subject of the opening Allegro (No. 1) "is taken from Kuhnau's Organ Sonatas, Leipzig, 1696."—Yours very truly,

CHARLES W. PEARCE.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

ABERDEEN, N.B.—An Orchestral Concert was given in Ferryhill Parish Church, on the 4th ult. The introduction of an orchestra into a Presbyterian Church may be regarded as a progressive step. The programme was of great interest, and included choruses and solos from the oratorios, organ and violin solos, with an organ Concerto and a Sonata for organ and orchestra by Mozart. The choir did their share of the work remarkably well, singing with steadiness and taking up the various leads very creditably. One of the chief features of the Concert was Handel's Second Organ Concerto, the organ part being played by Mr. H. C. Tonking. The vocalists were Misses Ross, Duffus, and Mr. Youngson. A violin solo, composed by Mr. Lanyon and played by Mr. Tonking, was perhaps the first violin solo which has been played in a Scotch church. Mr. Morgan was the Conductor.

ABINGDON.—The Orchestral Society's Concert took place in the Corn Exchange, on February 28, under the new Conductor, Dr. Dodds, Queen's College, Oxon. Miss A. Dinelli led the band, and also gave two violin solos. The second violins were led by Mr. H. Joachim (Balliol College), nephew of the eminent Professor. The most important orchestral numbers in the programme were Haydn's No. 8 Symphony, Wuerst's Russian Suite, and Mendelssohn's Serenade and Allegro Gioioso, the pianoforte part of the latter piece (and also two solos by Chopin) being exquisitely played by Mr. Paul V. M. Benecke (Magdalen College), a grandson of Mendelssohn's. Miss Bessie Latham was the only singer. Mrs. Slade Baker accompanied the solos, and the missing instruments of the band were represented by Mr. Hotchkin, Mus. Bac., on the harmonium. The improvement which the Society has made may be inferred from the fact that the orchestra was composed of amateurs, with the exception of Miss Dinelli.

ACCRINGTON.—The large room of the Town Hall was crowded on Thursday, the 14th ult., when Mendelssohn's Elijah was performed by the Choral Society with a completeness and artistic finish most creditable to all concerned. The performance had been anticipated with extraordinary interest, as Mr. Santley had been engaged to sing in the Oratorio, this being his first appearance in the town. The other principals were Miss Carlotta Elliot (who at the last moment took the place of Mdlle. Rosina Isidor, who was suffering from indisposition), Miss Bertenshaw, and Mr. Houghton. Mr. Thalberg Brown was the Conductor, Mr. C. H. H. Booth, Organist, and Messrs. Nuttall and Pollard leaders of the band.

ANDOVER.—On Thursday evening, February 28, a special Musical Service was held in the Parish Church, chiefly consisting of a selection from Mendelssohn's St. Paul. The chorus, numbering 100, was assisted by an orchestra led by Mr. Arthur Bennett, of Andover. Mr. George H. Westbury presided at the organ. The Rev. W. H. Weekes, Curate of Andover, conducted. The soloists were Mrs. Barrington Browne, the Lady Agneta Montagu, Rev. H. Gibson, and Rev. S. Lushington.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Bournemouth has two excellent Societies, "The Philharmonic" and the Choral Harmonic Society," both of which have produced, and are producing works of living masters as well as those of the past. The latter Society is conducted by Mr. Lemare, whilst Signor La Camera is the director of the Philharmonic. The Society has for its President Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, whose Rose of Sharon, led by Mr. Carrodus, was recently performed, and later on (the 27th ult.) two grand performances of Gounod's Redemption were given. The chorus-singing showed that the body was never in such a high state of efficiency as it is at the present time, and augured well for the success of future undertakings. The orchestra, too, exhibited thorough and careful drilling, both wind and strings evidencing that attention to details which is characteristic of Signor La Camera. In addition to all this, Bournemouth abounds in churches, most of which have excellent choirs, whilst the famed "Italian Band" is in great requisition and frequently forms the nucleus of numerous classical orchestral performances; there is also a body of musicians known as the "Town Band," so that for street music the favourable watering-place and health resort stands well to the front, especially when it is mentioned that vocal and instrumental concerts take place daily in the "Avenue" Arcade, a fashionable promenade formed upon the site of the old Town Hall. It is proposed to give Sullivan's Golden Legend shortly, the performance of which will probably close the Philharmonic season.

BRENTWOOD.—The second Concert of the season by the Vocal and Instrumental Society, under the Conductorship of Mr. Louis J. Turrell, was given at the Town Hall on Tuesday evening, the 5th ult. The programme consisted of Haydn's First Mass and a miscellaneous selection of vocal and instrumental music, including Weber's Overture to Oberon, which was well played by the orchestra. The vocal solos were all taken by members of the Society. Mr. Henry Lewis was leader of the orchestra, and Miss Florence Smith and Mr. Turrell shared the duties of accompanist.

BURNLEY.—The Carl Rosa Light Opera Company paid a short visit, producing the comic opera Paul Jones on the 7th ult., in the Victoria Rooms.—Messrs. Van Biene and Lingard's company followed with Falka, on the 17th.—Mr. Spencer gave his second Popular Concert on the 23rd ult. The orchestra played two movements from Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony, Gurlitt's "Marionettes" Overture, Macbeth's Intermezzo "Forget-me-not," &c. Misses Horner and Robins and Messrs. Hartley and Arnold sang some well-known songs in a pleasing manner. Mr. Broughton accompanied on the pianoforte, Mr. Titherington led the band, and Mr. Spencer conducted.—The new peal of bells provided for Holy Trinity Church was solemnly dedicated at a special Service on the 21st ult. The Rev. J. M. Dorset-Owen, M.A., Vicar, read the dedication prayers; the Bishop of Sodor and Man (Dr. Bardsley) preached an interesting sermon. A new hymn-tune was effectively sung by the choir, accompanied by the composer, Mr. R. Watson (Organist and Choirmaster). At the close the Old Hundredth was sung by choir and congregation along with fine effect. Before and after service tunes and peals were rung on the new bells.

CALCUTTA.—Mr. Ernest Slater, F.C.O., the Organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, Calcutta, gave his Third Organ Recital on Monday, February 18, and, as on the former occasions, the Cathedral was crowded. The vocalists were Mrs. Sinkinson, Mr. H. E. Sanderson, and Master Ernest Pritchard. Mr. Slater played Bach's Prelude and Fugue in B minor, the Andante from Mendelssohn's Sinfonie, No. 4, Meyerbeer's Schiller March, and several smaller pieces. Master E. Pritchard, the solo boy of the Cathedral Choir, sang "God shall wipe away all tears," from Sullivan's Light of the World.

CHICHESTER.—On the 5th ult. the annual Concert of the Church of England Temperance Society attracted a full audience to the Assembly Room. The programme comprised a miscellaneous selection, and Hutchinson's I he Story of Elaine. The principal vocalists were Miss Ada Moore, Miss Kate Ward, Mr. W. Evan Cox, and Capt. Gibbings. Mrs. Dean presided at the pianoforte and Mr. H. P. Allen at the harmonium. Mr. Seymour Kelly, the Conductor, and his class are to be congratulated upon a successful Concert.

CROYDON.—The programme of Mr. Pusey's annual benefit entertainment, on February 28, at the Public Hall, presented by Miss Pusey and Mr. Pusey-Keith, was very attractive. In the Beethoven Sonata, the Chopin Selections, the Weber Polacca, Mendelssohn's Andante and Rondo Capriccioso, Liszt's Fantaisie, the Polka (Raffi), and Berceuse (Grieg) Mr. Keith's facility of execution was fully demonstrated. Miss Edith Pusey displayed much power in the Potion scene from Romeo and Juliet, and gave the "French Lesson" scene from Henry V., with a keen appreciation of its refined humour. In Alfred Austin's "Ave Maria" Miss Pusey exhibited a command of pathos and feeling of the highest order.

DARTFORD.—The first Concert this season in connection with the Choral Association was given in the Conservative Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 5th ult. The members of the society mustered in full force, and they were assisted by Miss Fusselle, Mr. Foxon, and Mr. B. H. Grove. The first part consisted of Mendelssohn's Lauda Sion. Mr. F. H. Squires, F.C.O., conducted. The second part was miscellaneous. Mrs. Hall accompanied on the pianoforte, and Mr. R. Lemaire on the harmonium.

DEVONPORT.—Mr. John Hele, Mus. Bac., has been presented by the members of Stoke Church Choir with a pair of massive silver candlesticks, on behalf of the clergy, churchwardens, and choir, as a memento of his nine years' connection with the parish as Organist and Choir-master.

DUNDEE.—On the 12th ult. the Philharmonic Society gave their Annual Concert, with the assistance of Miss Louie Heath and Mrs. A. C. Haden as solo pianist and vocalist. Haydn's Eighth Symphony, Beethoven's Coriolanus Overture, and an extract from Cowen's Language of the Flowers were among the orchestral pieces performed. Beethoven's Septet was also a welcome novelty. The Glee Choir gave their second Concert, on the 14th ult. The most successful number was "There is a land," from J. More Smieton's new Cantata King Arthur. Numerous songs were given by members of the choir, and Miss Heath was solo pianist. The first performance in this district of Sullivan's popular Golden Legend was given by the Broughty Ferry Choral Union, on Tuesday, 19th ult. The principals were Miss Chatenet, Madame Joyce Maas, and Messrs. Claude Ravenhill and W. H. Burgon. The chorus acquitted themselves well, notably in "O, pure in heart." The second part of the evening was devoted to Alexander's Feast (Handel), in which Mr. Burgon made a distinct success in "Revenge, Timeous cries." The accompaniments were played on two pianofortes by Miss Louie Heath and Mr. D. Stephen, and Mr. R. Stiles (harmonium). Mr. Neale conducted. Popular Concerts, all of the ballad type, are being given in the Kinnaird Hall on Saturday evenings. On the 25th ult. the Amateur Choral Union gave their second Concert in the Kinnaird Hall. The Dead March from Saul and the Funeral Anthem from Sullivan's Martyr of Antioch were given in memory of Mr. Henry Nagel. The first part of the programme was allotted to the Orchestral Ballad "The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow," and the Choral and Orchestral Ballad "Lord Lillie's Daughter," by Hamish MacCunn. Sir Arthur Sullivan's Golden Legend followed. The soloists were Miss Emily Spada, Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and Mr. Andrew Black. The two grand choruses—the beautiful "O gladsome light" (unaccompanied) and the epilogue, "God sent His messenger, the rain"—were given by the Choral Union in a manner quite unexceptionable. Mr. Daly was an efficient leader of the orchestra, and Mr. Harrison presided at the organ, rendering valuable aid throughout the Concert. It was the universal opinion of the audience that this was by far the best Concert that Mr. Carl D. Hamilton has given since he took up the bâton of the Dundee Amateur Choral Union.

EPFING.—The Forest Orchestral Society, a large body of amateur instrumentalists, though only a few weeks old, was enabled to give a public performance on Tuesday evening, the 5th ult., at the Woodford Lecture Hall. Mr. J. Greebe, Miss Haynes, Mr. H. P. Andrews, Mr. F. Behm, and Mr. W. Riches were the principals. The orchestral portion of the programme included Gounod's Overture Mirella, three movements from Haydn's Symphony (No. 2), Mendelssohn's Overture Son and Stranger, and other minor pieces, and was conducted by Mr. Walter Newport; while in the vocal numbers the honours of the evening were fairly shared by Miss F. Reeland and Mr. Laird Donald. A Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra was played by Miss Reed.

GRAVESEND.—An evening Concert was given by the members of the St. George's Choral Society at the Public Hall, on the 5th ult., when Bennett's May Queen was given, with a miscellaneous second part. The soloists were Miss Eveleen Carlton, Miss Grace Thill, Mr. W. Braxton Smith, and Mr. Edgar Mortimer. The choruses of the May Queen were well rendered, and were accompanied by Mr. J. Carter Jenner. Mr. G. R. Ceiley, A.C.O., conducted.

GREAT YARMOUTH.—At the Town Hall, on the 14th ult., a Cantata, on popular lines, entitled A Daughter of Moab, another musical version of the story of Ruth, was given with some success. The chorus and orchestra were represented by a choir of fifty voices and the Cecilian Band. The principal singers were Miss Gant, Miss Edith Harbord, Miss Constance Pock, who made a distinct mark as Naomi; Miss Harbord, Mr. E. Collinson, and the Rev. A. E. Sharpley, B.A. The leader of the band was Mr. J. D. Jones, the pianist was Mrs. Rogers, and the Conductor the Rev. E. Hall.

HALSTEAD.—Mr. George Leake's sixth annual Concert was given in the Town Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 5th ult. The performers were Mr. Stanley Blagrove (violin), Mr. Arthur Blagrove (violin-cello), Mr. G. Leake (pianoforte), and Mr. Donnell Balfe (vocalist). The instrumental portion of the programme was entirely classical in character, and included the Trio in C minor (Brahms), for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello; the "Fantasiestücke" (Schumann), for pianoforte and violoncello; and the Trio in D minor (Mendelssohn), for the three instruments. Mr. S. Blagrove contributed violin solos by Svendsen and Saint-Saëns, the latter being encored; while Mr. A. Blagrove gave a violoncello solo by Popper. Mr. G. Leake's brilliant performance of Mendelssohn's "Seventeen Variations Seriesues" (Op. 54) was loudly applauded.

HANLEY, STAFFORDSHIRE.—The Hanley and Shelton Philharmonic Society gave Mendelssohn's St. Paul, in the Victoria Hall (Town Hall), on the 7th ult. The principals were Miss Marshall Ward, Mrs. T. Taylor, Mr. Banks, and Mr. Brereton. Mr. F. Ward was leader of the band and Mr. W. Edwards presided at the organ. The band and chorus numbered over 200, and were ably conducted by Mr. F. Mountford.

HIGH WYCOMBE.—The Choral Association gave an excellent performance of Spohr's Last Judgment in the Town Hall, before a large audience, on the 4th ult. The principal vocalists were Miss E. H. Butler, Master Luttman, Mr. A. B. Weston, and Mr. G. F. Browne. A short miscellaneous selection formed the remainder of the programme. Mr. J. G. Wrigley, Mus. Bac., Oxon., conducted.

HULL.—The Philharmonic Society gave its second Orchestral Concert of the season in the Public Rooms, Jarratt Street, on the 20th ult. The first piece, Mendelssohn's March "Cornelius," was followed by Beethoven's C major Symphony. The Overtures to Don Giovanni and to William Tell reflected every credit on the orchestra and Conductor. The second part of the programme opened with Sterndale Bennett's Overture, "The Wood Nymphs." One of the most effective pieces, and at the same time a novelty in Hull, was Mackenzie's "Benedictus," played by all the violins. It is one sweet strain of suave melody, and as a composition it is as delightful as its spontaneous and unassuming. A Pizzicato by Desormes, called "Sérénade des Mandolines," secured an encore. The programme concluded with the Overture to Stradella, which, though inferior to that of Marta, is second to no other of Flotow's compositions. The Concert was conducted by Mons. Hartog, who deserves much praise. The vocalist of the evening was Madame Antoinette Trebelli, who sang with considerable finish and vocal charm. Mr. J. W. Hudson played the accompaniments.

KING'S LYNN.—A Concert of vocal and instrumental music, consisting principally of selections from Handel's Messiah, Haydn's Creation, and Mozart's Twelfth Mass, with full band accompaniments, was given by the Primitive Methodist London Road Choir, in the Chapel, on Friday, the 8th ult. Mr. J. G. Churchman was leader of the band, and Mrs. Ridley, Miss Barnard, Miss A. Cook, Miss Savage, and Mr. E. Taylor were the principal vocalists. Mr. W. O. Jones presided at the pianoforte, Mr. J. M. Ridley at the organ, and Mr. J. J. Wright conducted.

LEEDS.—On Sunday afternoon, the 24th ult., J. E. Newell's Sacred Cantata, "The Christian Pilgrim," was sung in Holy Trinity Church, by a choir augmented for the occasion. The solos were sung by Miss Sidebottom, Miss Head, Mr. Fisher Heath, and Mr. W. Deatry. The choruses were effectively sung. Mr. Hudson was the Organist.

MAIDENHEAD.—On the 5th ult. the Philharmonic Society gave its second Concert of the season in the Town Hall. The programme included Stainer's Jairus and a miscellaneous selection. The principal performers were Madame Minnie Gwynne, Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys, and Mr. Oliver Walton. Mr. J. G. Wrigley, Mus. Bac., Oxon., conducted. Barnett's Ancient Mariner is announced for the next Concert.

MAIDSTONE.—The last of the season, and fifty-third of the series of Subscription Concerts was given on the 5th ult., in the Corn Exchange, Maidstone. Mr. August Manns brought his full orchestra from the Crystal Palace, and afforded a rich treat by giving a portion of a Symphony, some grand overtures, and selections—Leonore (No. 3), William Tell, Rosamunde, &c.; and the vocalists were Miss Alice Gomes and Mr. W. H. Brereton. The whole Concert was a great success.

MELBOURNE, DERBYSHIRE.—On Tuesday, February 26, the Glee and Madrigal Society gave an excellent performance of the selections of the works of Handel used at the Crystal Palace Festival of 1888. The orchestra was led by Miss Hubber, and the various solos were sung by the Misses Haimes, Miss Hale, Miss Wilson, and Messrs. Adcock, Jacques, and Hankinson. The chorus singing was good. The rendering of Zadok the Priest, "Calumny," "Wretched lovers," "Ye tutelary gods," and "Ere to dust" calling for particular notice. Mr. Arthur Wilson conducted.

OUNDE.—On the 5th ult. the Choral Society gave a Concert in the Girls' National Schools, under the conductorship of Mr. T. W. Blakey. The soloists were Miss Clara Surgey, Mr. A. G. Smith, and Mr. J. B. Smith. The chorus numbered about eighty voices, and there was a small orchestra. The works performed were The Daughter of Jairus (Stainer) and the Dramatic Cantata Hero and Leander (C. H. Lloyd). The chorus sang well.

RUSHDEN.—The May Queen was performed by the Choral Society on the 19th ult. Miss Vinnie Beaumont, Miss Parker, Mr. Stubbs, and Mr. De Lacy were the solo vocalists. Mr. Woodward conducted.

SCARBOROUGH.—An exceedingly interesting Concert of vocal and instrumental music was given in All Saints' Room, on Friday evening, the 1st ult., by Mr. E. A. Sydenham (Organist of All Saints'). The programme, by special request, consisted exclusively of productions by Mr. Sydenham. There were songs for soprano, "Oh, my heart," and "The blind boy" (the latter with violin obbligato), sung by Mrs. Miles and Miss Emily Pattison respectively; a mezzo-soprano song, "The River," sung by Mrs. Miles; a contralto song, "In a Cathedral," sung by Miss Ethel Wigney (for whom it was composed); tenor songs, "I think on thee" and "Why, lovely charmer" (the latter with violoncello obbligato), sung by Mr. Geldard; "Annie" and "Annette," sung by Rev. R. Brown-Borthwick; and baritone songs, "The knight of old" and "Time is a vagabond," sung by Mr. Ward Drake, R.A.M. There were also a duet for harmonium and pianoforte, Andante con moto, played by Rev. R. Brown-Borthwick and Mr. Sydenham; two violin solos, Romance in E and Mazurka, played by Mr. Cass; a violoncello solo, Romance in F, played by Mr. Percy Hill; the "Londesborough Waltz" (arranged for pianoforte, harmonium, violin, and violoncello), played by Messrs. Sydenham, Owen Williams, Cass, and Hill; a pianoforte solo, "Laughing water," played by Mr. Sydenham; and Two Sketches for pianoforte, played by Mr. Owen Williams. A choir of about thirty ladies and gentlemen sang the following part-songs, conducted by Rev. R. Brown-Borthwick:—"Blame not my lute," "Tell me, thou soul," "The parting kiss," "The maiden of the Fleur de Lys," and "A battle song," the latter forming a fit conclusion to this unique and most enjoyable Concert.

SHREWSBURY.—Mr. Bratton's first Pupils' Concert was given in the Music Hall, on the 5th ult. The hall was literally crammed. The band numbered upwards of seventy performers. The principal performers were Madame Hope Lockley, Miss Dixon (harpist), Mr. Lockley, and Mr. J. H. Thomas (cornet soloist). Mr. Bratton's pupils—the juvenile solo violinists—Miss Parry, Miss Hoult, Miss Ethel Dixon, and Master Vernon Dixon also appeared.

SLIGO.—The Musical Society gave a performance of Handel's Saul on February 28. Mrs. Scott-Ffennell sang the contralto music, and the other solos were allotted to amateurs from Dublin, Longford, and Sligo. Mr. A. T. Froggatt, Mus. Bac., conducted.

SPALDING.—Smart's Bride of Dunkerron was performed at a Concert here on the 4th ult., by Mr. Price's Singing Class, before a large and enthusiastic audience. Miss Bliss, Mr. Dunkerton, and Mr. Latter were the principals, and gave great satisfaction. The chorus, who numbered about fifty voices, sang exceedingly well throughout. Miss Price was at the pianoforte and her playing greatly helped the success of the Cantata. Mr. Edgar Price presided at the harmonium. A miscellaneous selection followed the Cantata. Mr. W. J. Price, Organist of the Parish Church, conducted.

SURBITON.—Mr. R. Sebastian Hart gave his annual Concert on February 26. The performers were Miss Bertha Colnaghi, Miss Esmée Woodford, Miss Mary Willis, Mr. Arthur Coward, Mr. Iver McKay, Mr. Randolph Coward, Mr. Joseph Ivimey (violin), and Mr. R. Sebastian Hart (pianoforte). The programme, which was very interesting, included Beethoven's Sonata (No. 1) for violin and pianoforte, which was excellently played by Mr. Joseph Ivimey and Mr. R. Sebastian Hart. Miss Mary Willis delighted the audience with her charming rendering of Cowen's "Tears."

TURRO.—An Organ Recital, the seventh of the series, was given in the Cathedral, by the Organist, Mr. G. R. Sinclair, on the 2nd ult. The programme included works by Mendelssohn, Wagner, Beethoven, and Bach, with vocal pieces by Master Thomas and Mr. Truscott.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—A very successful performance of Molique's Abraham took place at the Great Hall, on Monday evening, the 4th ult., when Mr. Frederick Hunnibell's Choral Society, and the band of the Tunbridge Wells Orchestral Society, were assisted by several London professional artists. The chorus consisted of about 100 voices. The leading vocalists were Madame Bertha Moore, Miss Alice Lamb, Mr. W. Nicholl, Mr. B. H. Grove, and Mr. E. Oliver. The leaders of the first and second violins, and several other members of the band, were from the Royal Italian Opera, Albert Hall, and Crystal Palace orchestras. Mr. Frederick Hunnibell filled the office of Conductor in an admirable manner.

WARRINGTON.—The long-established Musical Society—which some years ago celebrated its jubilee—gave its third Concert for this season on the 22nd ult. For St. Paul Miss Jessie Griffin, Mr. Holberry Hagyard (Trinity College, Cambridge), and Mr. Sutton Shepley (Chapel Royal, St. James's), were engaged, and the orchestra of the Society was completed from Manchester and Liverpool. The Oratorio was admirably rendered, under the direction of Dr. Hiles, with the able assistance of Mr. Townshend Driffell (Liverpool) at the organ. Miss J. E. Dampier Jeans (a member of the Society) sang the contralto music with great firmness, and Mr. Hagyard made a very favourable impression. The choir of the Musical Society is one of the largest and finest to be found in the district, and it is not creditable to the town that no suitable room is supplied for its public performances.

WHALLEY.—The Vocal Society gave its second Concert on the 23rd ult. The programme included "Come, let us sing" (Mendelssohn) and "Spring's Message" (Gade). The performance of both works was much appreciated. Mr. W. H. Robinson conducted, and also played Chopin's "Impromptu" in F sharp and Grand Valse in A flat.

THE LIGHT OF ASIA

A CANTATA

THE WORDS FROM THE POEM OF

EDWIN ARNOLD

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

DUDLEY BUCK.

Price, in paper cover, 3s.; paper boards, 3s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 5s.

Vocal Parts, each 1s. 6d.

THE TIMES.

The composer has done well in going to Sir Edwin Arnold's well-known poem for his subject, and he has with great ingenuity arranged a number of its most important passages into a libretto that is excellent as a vehicle for musical treatment. . . . In the opening chorus the composer declares himself as a musician of earnest aim; its fugal treatment is well carried out. . . . The choruses "Round him delicious gardens bloom'd" and "O come and see the pleasure of the spring," are graceful and show the influence of Sterndale Bennett, though no want of originality is felt. The duets between Siddārtha and Yasôdhara are full of passion, and the canonic passage in the second, "When most my spirit wanders," is so skilfully written that no feeling of dry scholasticism is produced.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

One rises from hearing "The Light of Asia" with a sense of charm and satisfaction. To what is this feeling due? In the first place to truth of expression. The music and the poetry blend, and their harmony—we attach no importance to an occasional exception—is sensibly complete. Next, the expression never goes beyond the necessities of the case, and thus a most important, though much neglected, law of art is observed. . . . The music is intelligible, and exercises its influence upon the heart without hindrance from a puzzled head. Then, the work is essentially melodious, being full of tune which, if not strongly characteristic, delights the ear, while the choral writing, sometimes vigorously descriptive, has often a grace and elegance that cannot be resisted. . . . We see no reason why "The Light of Asia" should fail to become a favourite among English choral societies. It has all the qualities requisite for a popular composition of the kind.

STANDARD.

There is much in the work worthy of praise. Mr. Buck is technically a master of his art, and he has not wedded himself to any particular school. . . . The orchestration is admirable, being picturesque without extravagance. In several numbers a pleasant vein of melody is discernible, the best being the chorus, "O, come and see the pleasure of the Spring," the wedding chorus, and the bridal duet, in which some canonic passages are introduced with excellent effect.

MORNING POST.

Mr. Dudley Buck, though well known and honoured in America, has hitherto only been known in England by his song "When the Heart is Young." . . . Few, however, even of the admirers of that ballad were prepared to hear a work so beautiful in its treatment as "The Light of Asia." . . . The work itself possesses many qualities which tend to secure popularity. Its several portions are for the most part interesting. The choruses are vocal and effective, and as such attractive to that section of the public which delights in melody.

DAILY NEWS.

The opening chorus, the "Spring song," the four-part male chorus of councillors, and the march of Indian maidens round the Prince's throne, are all excellent. So to a higher degree is the delicious seven-part chorus which describes the Indian night and the "rare company of Indian girls" lulled into dreams in the Pleasure House; while in the fine scene of the temptation the composer is able to indulge in strong contrasts, and to prove his possession of real dramatic power. . . . The love duet which the Prince and Yasôdhara sing at their first meeting, and the still more beautiful duet sung by the Prince and his wife when he has resolved upon his "Great Renunciation," are worthy melodic gems of a purely unconventional order.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

His instrumentation is full, rich, and varied, but never departs from its proper function of illustrating the scene or situation. It does not attempt to thrust the vocal portion of the score into the background. . . . There is undoubtedly very much in the composition to admire, enough, indeed, to create the hope that American musical productions may no longer be stranger to us than the latest productions of France, Germany, or the far North.

ATHENÆUM.

In "The Light of Asia" Mr. Dudley Buck shows himself a decidedly able musician, the construction of the various numbers, the part-writing for voices, and the orchestration being alike excellent. Indeed, we cannot point to a single flaw of a technical character from first to last.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

Mr. Buck is an accomplished musician, as his scoring shows. He has also the gift of melody. His choruses are grateful to sing, and his accentuation is careful and correct. He has the power to touch the sympathies of his hearers, as the performance more than once evidenced. . . . That "The Light of Asia" has the power of impressing and pleasing an audience, the one assembled in St. James's Hall, including many prominent musicians, gave unmistakable evidence.

AMERICAN MUSICIAN.

The general verdict in Newark is that the work is worthy to rank with the best cantatas of the day.

NEWARK (U.S.) DAILY ADVERTISER.

The work is replete with the sweetest melodies, and at times is decidedly dramatic. The orchestration is elaborate and striking.

The subscription is 9s. net, post-free, for either part of 100 pages each; or, 24s. 6d. net, post-free, for the three separate parts.

It will be clearly printed (with an independent staff for the pedals throughout) upon 300 full music sized pages of the ordinary oblong form, in one edition only—viz., the three separate parts. Each part will be stitched together with a cloth back, and have a stiffer wrapper.

Subscriptions may be sent in, or your name only, to the COMPOSER, 88, Tyrwhitt Road, St. John's, London, S.E. In the latter case, a notice will be sent when the work is ready (it is completed and already in the printer's hands), and on the receipt of your remittance will be posted to you.

Names, quoting church appointment, and postal address, should be sent in early, so as to be in time for the List of Subscribers, which will be published in the Musical Times as before.

P.O. Orders to be made payable at 243A, Lewisham High Road, S.E. The work will be found a useful one for presentation purposes.

The great success of the two large works for the Organ previously issued, and for which were obtained six hundred and one thousand subscribers respectively, including the leading Organists of the day, has encouraged the issue of the present work.

The majority of the pieces are of moderate difficulty and length, intricate combinations of the manual and pedal parts being studiously avoided; and in order to facilitate playing, and make the work of the utmost service to young students, fingering and pedal marks are given for almost every note. This will make the work particularly useful for teaching purposes, as the master will be spared considerable trouble in making guiding marks for a pupil, and the latter will be less likely to go astray when practising alone.

The Voluntaries chiefly take the form of Postludes, so as to supply an acknowledged want of a set of concluding Voluntaries for Divine service that will not make unreasonable demands upon the player, and yet at the same time will be solid and effective.

The whole work is set for Orga of two manuals; for it is borne in mind that most instruments in this country have two manuals only, and that while pieces written for two manuals can always be played upon one having three or more, those written for three cannot so easily be played upon two, for which, indeed, they require adaptation and re-arrangement, thus giving an organist something else to manage in addition to the execution of the piece.

It is generally acknowledged that close printing makes the reading of music a more difficult task than when it is more clearly spread out. By allowing the music ample space upon the plates this is to be obviated, as it was in the recent set of Voluntaries, with which the present work will form a companion volume.

Some of the principal features of the work are:—

1. The careful marking of crescendo and diminuendi passages for the Swell pedal; while the pedal part is planned out for the left foot only, to enable the right to produce these effects. Nos. 2, 5, 7, 8, and others will illustrate this; while No. 40 might be easily played by one not trained to use the right foot at all.
2. The marking of L.H. and R.H. where the hands are to play off their respective staves, with dotted lines to show how far.
3. The fingering and pedal marks that are given to almost every note.
4. With the intention that the form of the pieces and the treatment of the themes shall be clearly understood by even the youngest students; the details of the style of the various composers are always indicated, and other explanatory notes given with regard to the detail and construction of the pieces, so that it will be found a useful work for young students for the study of form, as the explanatory notes will be sufficient to make even the most uninitiated conversant with the form in which the piece is cast.

The Voluntarys are in no sense a set of variations on the themes, but compositions in which they are introduced, and receive various treatment. On this account the interest generally should centre on the original matter, to which the Hymn-tune themes afterwards lend an additional interest. Some of the others are built more upon the themes, which in such cases are frequently present. Their suitability to play immediately before or after the hymn has been sung will be recognised, as well as their appropriateness for certain special seasons where the tunes are associated with special hymns.

In striking out a new and comparatively untrodden path in thus issuing a complete work upon standard English Hymn-Tunes, the Composer hopes that he may strike a sympathetic chord in the hearts of English church organists, and he regrets that he was unable to include a larger number of modern favourites in the collection, as he had originally intended; but the permission to use copyright tunes was only obtained after the work was well in hand, so that he hopes to resume his work at these at an early date, if the present issue meets with favour.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

"Mendelssohn's Organ Sonatas, and those of Bach's Organ compositions, which introduce and treat the old German Chorales, appeal less to the English public than to the Teuton, with whose religious services those Chorales are so closely associated. Only a few of those that are treated in the above-mentioned works are really familiar to English congregations.

"Though the present work stands upon very different lines to those classics, it was prompted by that idea, and the discovery that congregations appreciate Voluntaries introducing a standard Hymn-Tune in which they are accustomed to join."

A circular containing description of each piece and all particulars, together with a Specimen Sheet of the Music, will be forwarded on receipt of Penny stamp.

LITTLE BO-PEEP

HUMOROUS PART-SONG

BY

HARRY DANCEY.

Price Threepence.

"It is becoming quite the custom to compose nursery ditties as part-songs, and to set nursery tales as cantatas. Like every other fashion, there is a danger of these compositions wearing out their welcome; but, judging from the specimen before us, Mr. Dancey has as much right to enter the field as many who have already achieved a success with such works. There is much feeling for the humour of the words displayed throughout this song, the treatment of the phrase 'When she awoke,' she found it a joke,' especially, being extremely effective. If well sung, this little composition could not fail to be warmly received."—Musical Times.

"The composer has dealt happily with the time-honoured nursery rhyme, for the music is good, and will be appreciated as much for its artistic effect as for its sense of humour."—The Lute.

"Offers few difficulties to amateur choirs, and appears highly effective."—London Figaro.

AN

OF

IMPORTANT MUSICAL EVENTS

BY

HERMANN KLEIN.

DAILY NEWS.

Various apparently slight, though really important, alterations have this year been made, in order to increase the utility of a work which, so far as England is concerned, is of its sort unique. The index has been considerably enlarged and amplified, so that even by itself it affords a bird's-eye view of all the important events that have happened in the London world of music during the past year. An ingenious system of cross-reference is likewise now adopted. . . . An obituary is added, and the various orchestral, chamber, choral, and other concerts, operatic performances, and festivals, are grouped under their various titles, the works produced being also referred to under the names of the several composers.

THE GLOBE.

Mr. Hermann Klein's invaluable Manual is published this year by Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co., who send it forth in a neat and substantial binding. The "Notes" themselves are as accurate in statement, sound in judgment, and excellent in arrangement as they have always been, while the addition of a full index to the events narrated is a very considerable gain.

SUNDAY TIMES.

Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co. are now the publishers, and they have issued this elegant little volume in a manner worthy of its now recognised importance as a valuable contribution to the literature of music. In a fluent, bright, and eminently readable style, Mr. Klein reviews month by month all the noteworthy musical events of the past year. No student of musical history should fail to add it to his library. . . . Nothing, indeed, of musical importance is missed in this usefully compiled and brightly-written book.

WEEKLY DISPATCH.

Those who are interested in the record of musical work should secure "Musical Notes," by Hermann Klein. The author possesses the art of condensation, and never wastes a line in fine writing, though he continues to make his narrative readable. As regards correctness, my careful perusal enables me to say that it is without a flaw. In a work of reference this is, of course, of the highest importance.

OBSERVER.

A full and faithful account of all the musical events of the past year, and it will not only be serviceable to professional musicians as an historical record, but is full of interest for amateurs.

TRUTH.

All the important events in the London musical year are chronicled, the novelties are described, and the whole is fully indexed.

GLASGOW HERALD.

In a compact and convenient form this little work contains a full account of the principal performances of the musical year in London, and of the novelties produced at the provincial festivals. To increase its utility the book is fully indexed.

BENEDICTUS

With Pianoforte Accompaniment

COMPOSED BY

A. C. MACKENZIE.

(Op. 37.)

Full Score, 5s.; Orchestral Parts, 3s. 6d.;

Also, as originally written for Violin Solo with Pianoforte Accompaniment, 1s. 6d.

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.

As an exceptional case, this movement absolutely gains by the change to which it has been subjected, the impassioned religious melody acquiring force by being played in chorus, and added beauty by a rich accompaniment of strings, horns, and wood-wind. The audience at once pronounced the piece a success, and the composer bowed his thanks for sustained applause from his place in the gallery.

STANDARD.

Dr. Mackenzie's "Benedictus" was originally written for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment. Since then the author has appreciated the capabilities of the music in an orchestral sense, and after several attempts—this composer, like Mendelssohn, never being satisfied at the offset—has written his score for a small orchestra. . . . So charming did this piece prove that the applause was unanimous, and was maintained until the composer had appeared at the end gallery and bowed his acknowledgment.

DAILY NEWS.

The remaining novelty was a brief but charming "Benedictus," originally written by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, as one of a set of violin pieces which Lady Hallé last summer introduced to London. The pianoforte accompaniment has, however, now been scored for wind orchestra by the composer, and the solo is given to all the violins of the orchestra.

MORNING POST.

There are beautiful harmonies accompanying the phases of melody, and the whole piece, which is replete with dignity and distinguished by originality, forms a most grateful addition to orchestral répertoires.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The clever musician has since scored it for a small orchestra, assigning the violin solo to the whole of the violins, and providing work for the other strings, flutes, clarinets, bassoons, and horns, in which form it is likely to obtain as much popularity on the platform as the first setting in the salon. It is a beautiful, quietly flowing melody, with such an elegant accompaniment as only a composer of genuine taste and sympathetic nature, having a perfect knowledge of the means of the instruments he introduces, could place upon paper.

THE OBSERVER.

The two leading themes are in themselves beautiful, and their scenic beauty is enhanced by exquisite orchestration, in which the wind instruments above-named, in conjunction with the violas, violoncellos, and double-basses, are happily employed. . . . This "Benedictus" is likely to become popular throughout the musical world.

THE GLOBE.

Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's new "Benedictus" for violins and orchestra (first public performance) is short and comparatively simple, but will add to his fame. . . . The "Benedictus" is a polished gem.

SUNDAY TIMES.

Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's new "Benedictus for Orchestra," a transcription of one of his "Six Pieces for Violin and Piano," Op. 37, is a gem of melody encased in a beautiful instrumental setting.

Violoncello.	B♭ Baritone.
Double Bass, 3 Strings.	French Horn.
Double Bass, 4 Strings.	Tenor Slide Trombone.

Some thousands of the above Tutors have now been sold, and we are continually receiving excellent testimonials and criticisms from Professors and Bandmasters. They are without doubt the best works of their kind in existence, and are invaluable to the artist as well as of the beginner, for the amount of excellent matter they contain, abounding with simple Exercises and Duets for Master and Pupil, and bringing the performer by a very gradual and simple course to a series of grand Studies and Solos.

Bandmasters forming String, Reed, or Brass Bands will find them most useful, as by issuing one to each member for private study they acquire a degree of proficiency at an earlier date than is possible to acquire without these tutors.

CHAPPELL'S PENNY OPERATIC PART-SONGS

FOR SOPRANO, ALTO, TENOR, AND BASS.

The present Collection of Part-Songs is entirely new, being selected and adapted from the most striking and popular Choruses in the favourite Foreign Operas. THE ETHICS OF ART.

THERE is a certain portion of the reading public whose minds are of so invertebrate an order that they are either unwilling or unable to form an opinion for themselves. To them any statement proceeding from an authoritative source appeals with convincing force, and they are ready to admit this authoritative sanction as attaching to everything that appears in the Papers. They are fetish-worshippers of print. Now there are various modes in which the claims of works of literature can be advocated in the organs of public opinion—leading articles, reviews, paragraphs, correspondence; but, failing all these, there remains that refuge of the author, the publisher's announcement. We do not mean the mere advertisement of the title of the book, but such anonymous headings as "A work of thrilling interest," "A daring exposé of the vices of society," and so forth. If the reviewer will not "crack up" his book, the author must do so himself behind the mask of his publisher. It is in this way that the work which we propose to consider is launched at the heads of the public. Whether Mr. Edward Irenæus Stevenson or his publishers are responsible for the effort to start a new correspondence boom on the subject "Is Music immoral?" we care not to inquire. The circular issued drawing attention to his book, which recently reached us, is, doubtless, with the full sanction of the author, and is a mere piece of clever ad captandum advertisement. A book, however good—if by an unknown author—is in danger of being crowded out now-a-days by the enormous over-production of printed matter. It is the aim of an enterprising publisher to fix the attention of the public on his own wares by some new device. He must emulate the Don't-look-at-my-back style of the itinerant sandwich-man, or in some such way endeavour to stimulate the public curiosity. Thus it is, then, that in the volume before us we have the spectacle of a powerfully written and engrossing romance, which is not allowed to be judged on its own merits, but is thrust upon our attention as an impeachment of the morality of art in general and music in particular. Our attention is directed in the publishers' circular "to the fact that within some forty years only three novels that were strongly musical, and yet otherwise interesting enough to make a popular success, have appeared—viz., 'Charles Auchester,' the (anonymous) 'Alcestis,' and 'The First Violin' of Miss Fothergill. To these 'Janus'* comes as a natural successor, though a story of very opposite attributes." This last sentence is studiously vague, but what follows is explicit enough in all conscience: "'Janus' is an argument in the form of a dramatic story, to the effect that any talk about the elevating influence of music is bosh, and that music is the most vitiating and corrupting principle to morals and society."

The plot of "Janus" may be summarised as follows:—Moritz Heisse, a brilliant young musician and composer, loves and is beloved by Nadine von Lillienburg, the beautiful and accomplished daughter of a worthless Austrian Count. She is about to elope with him at Milan when the story opens, but fails to keep her assignation, and hurries away to Turin to rejoin her father. After an interval of a few years we find Moritz established as a rising operatic composer in Germany, and so far cured of his earlier passion as to indulge in a platonic attachment—born of reverence rather than of love—for his prima donna, Elsa Ehlert, who is, by the way, a very close counterpart of the self-sacrificing heroine of "Alcestis." An old friend, Alexis von Gravenhorst, invites Moritz to visit him at his home and make the acquaintance of his wife. The composer gladly accepts, all unsuspecting of harm, and is brought suddenly face to face with Nadine. And then the story resolves itself into a modern version of Clytemnestra, Agamemnon, and Ægisthus. Nadine had foreseen everything and accepted the situation in advance. Alexis is always away on his estate, and the other two make much music and more love. So the months slip by until Moritz awakens to a consciousness of his treachery. Nadine's demands on his devotion grow too exacting, and his passion for her dies. He escapes from his Venusberg and resumes his platonic with Elsa, until her fiancé, a stolid lawyer, losing patience, provokes her into a tacit confession of her love for Moritz in the latter's presence, a love which Moritz is at once obliged to explain he can never return. But a worse catastrophe remains in store. Alexis hears of the early relations between Moritz and his wife, and, to satisfy himself, opens a pocket-book of the former's which falls into his possession. Finding his worst surmises confirmed he shoots himself, but so contrives his suicide that it may be set down to despair consequent on serious financial losses. Nadine, though secured by his devotion against all exposure, has nothing to live for and poisons herself. Moritz quits the scene abruptly, and is slain in a duel in Italy without redeeming his early promise.

So much for the plot, which is worked out with considerable power. It abounds in strong situations, which are handled with success. The dialogue is bright and pointed, and the characters are clearly drawn. It is, in fine, a clever and painful novel, but quite free from the unwholesome excrescences which are now-a-days paraded out of an alleged devotion to realism. If it were not for the publishers' announcement, one might very well acquit the writer of any deliberate intention to attack music in the interests of public morals. An author is not necessarily committed to the views that he puts in the mouth of his characters; but in view of the explicit declaration quoted above, we have no choice but to take the opinions ascribed to Alexis von Gravenhorst as those held by Mr. Edward Irenæus Stevenson. The statement of these views does not occupy much space in his pages, and they are succinctly put forward in the closing portion of the subjoined passage:—

"In regard to this vexed problem of music and morals, morals and music, art and morals—to broaden it—the difficulty with the question is that, like a statue of Janus, it presents two faces in a peculiarly uncompromising manner—an agreeable theory and a logical fact; and few people who stand at one angle, and study and descant, will shift their ground and study the other. But in all the history of civilisation of the human species, art dominates and develops a people to destroy it. The philosophy of it is simple. Art is a means. Devotion to a means belittles."

The first sentence is somewhat hazy, but the remainder is perfectly intelligible and furnishes us with a totally new clue to the decline and fall of the various great States and Empires of the world. It was the art of Pheidias and Michael Angelo that was the corroding and vitiating element in their greatness and stability. Of course there must be an exception to prove every rule, and the case of Germany is doubtless to be explained in this way, or perhaps the poison there has been neutralised by the action and reaction of various influences. Beethoven has been the antidote to the vitiating effect of Bach, the inroads of Mozart on public morality have been repaired by Gluck, Schumann has counteracted Schubert, and so on. England's prosperity is no doubt to be accounted for by her comparative lack of great creative musicians. Happy England, and happier America to have thus escaped the contaminating influence of art!

"Art is a means," proceeds the speaker, and having propounded an assertion which is about as well founded as the proposition "the moon is made of green cheese," he proceeds airily to the further statement "devotion to a means belittles." Ergo devotion to music, to art in fact, belittles and degrades nations and individuals. Let us, accordingly, see how the author works out his own thesis. Nearly all the persons who figure in his story are more or less concerned with, or devoted to, music. None more so than Elsa Ehler, the singer, who is represented as rising to the very foremost rank of European prima donna. From this constant contact with a degrading art one might expect the most disastrous results. On the contrary, Elsa is the only person in the story who enlists our admiration. She is described as a woman of singular purity of heart and loftiness of aspiration, who bravely hides the cruel wound which the man she loved had inflicted on her and passes serenely through life without a flaw on her character. Another personage who does not seem to have suffered from a life-long attachment to this degrading art is old Delié the violoncellist, who is described as a shrewd but tender hearted old man. Mr. Stevenson, it is true, has forestalled these objections by declaring that in the case of musicians who were good men, their art had nothing to do with their virtue. "In their cases virtue inborn or acquired has been too stout to be sapped by any enervating enemy." Music—even the music of Masses and Chorales—only brings about a sensuous enjoyment, an affection of the nerves. It unbraces and relaxes us. Apparently, according to Mr. Stevenson, even fugues are to be placed in this category.

Into a discussion of the proposition that "art is a means" we do not feel called upon to enter. It is no longer necessary to confute the arguments of those who disbelieve in the rotundity of the earth. As to the ethics of the subject, Mr. Stevenson's attitude is probably provoked by the disquisitions of those who claim for music on the positive side as much as he claims on the negative. No sensible person will argue that music, divorced from its associations—apart from the words to which it is linked or the surroundings in which it is heard—has a religious, or, to use a bad word for want of a better, a moralising influence. Music cannot rebuke or advise; it cannot preach patience or forgiveness. But, on the other hand—equally divorced from its associations—music cannot demoralise or degrade any more than a proposition of Euclid can. Its ancillary influence for evil can be as potent as its ancillary influence for good. That is to say, it can be employed to embellish or illustrate an unwholesome story, and so may reinforce the message or moral of that story, just as it may embellish and reinforce the sublimest truths of religion as set forth in a Mass or Oratorio. But to say that music is immoral is as logical as to declare that paint-boxes are immoral, because their contents are frequently employed to illustrate unworthy subjects. Or again, one might aver, with equal truth, that law is immoral, because it is concerned with the repression of crime, or because the personal morals of those who practise it are not always above suspicion. Indeed, it would seem that Mr. Stevenson had confounded the morals of musicians with the morality of music. His position is apparently this: When a musician is virtuous his art has nothing whatever to do with it (vide p. 87), but if he be immoral, it has everything to do with it. Evidently he has no belief in the often-quoted lines about the humanising influence of the arts—

Emollit mores nec sinit esse feros.*

Or if they soften, it is only in the sense of enervating. The more a man is an artist the more is he likely to fall a prey to temptation. Such is the view advanced in the following hypothetical case, and endorsed by Alexis von Gravenhorst, who represents the author's views:—"Imagine a man who thoroughly knows right from wrong and perfectly appreciates the beauty of honour and goodness. Now by nature he is the keenest possible enjoyer of the beautiful, and a successful, practical man of art, a painter, a musician—what you will. Put him where only moral principle can make him keep his footing. Will the artist element in him weaken him for contest? Will he fall the sooner because of it? I don't ask if that side of his character, directly or indirectly, holds him up. Will it—drag him down?" She spoke slowly, choosing her words. Alexis moved back from the table. He laughed undisguisedly. "You have sketched one of the most truly artistic or, rather, musical of temperaments, to borrow the cant phrase. I would not wager many rows of pins for its stability." "My unlucky friend falls then?" Nadine asked gravely. "The more readily; the deeper. Requiescat in pace." This is apparently a fair test, but in reality the question is begged by the first speaker. "Put him," she says, "where only moral principle can make him keep his footing." Exactly; no sane man so circumstanced would make his art the arbiter of his destiny at such a crisis. But that does not prove that art is immoral. And then what an elastic term is that of "artist"! including, as it does, in the popular acceptation of the term, everything from the sincerest devotee to the most cynical charlatan. Two points may be readily conceded. The first is that the artistic temperament is generally highly strung, emotional, impulsive, sensitive, capricious. And secondly, the conditions under which art is cultivated to any great extent do not, as a rule, admit of a simultaneous devotion to manly sports and exercises. But the exceptions to the rule have almost always tended to prove that the artist is a better artist for being an "all-round" man. It has been pointed out, we think by Herr Spitta, that, since Weber, nearly all the great composers have been men of general accomplishments, and not exclusively swallowed up in their one pursuit. Schumann, Berlioz, and Wagner were all eminent as writers. Mendelssohn had a gift for doing everything well, and as to character, why he had hardly a single redeeming vice! To sum up, then, there is not the least reason why an artist should not be manly and virtuous; and the best artists have generally been both.

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

No. XXVII.—HANDEL (continued from page 207).

GENERAL reference was made last month to the fact that Handel, after the performances of his "Esther" by Bernard Gates, was provoked by the action of a speculator into taking up Oratorio on his own account. This matter now demands full attention.

The name of the speculator in question has not come down to us; which is a pity, because one likes to identify the personification of baseness as well as of virtue. Whoever he may have been, he put an advertisement in the Daily Journal of April 17, 1732, as follows:—

“Never performed in public. At the great rooms of Villars St., York Buildings, on Thursday, the 20th of this instant April, will be performed, by the best vocal and instrumental music, ‘Esther,’ an oratorio, or sacred drama, as it was originally composed for the most noble James, Duke of Chandos, by George Frederic Handel. Each ticket, five shillings.”

It is easy to imagine with what feeling Handel read of this cool attempt to “exploit” his own work. Incredulity, doubtless, gave way to disgust, and disgust to indignation unrestrained. The master had not the greatest conceivable command over his temper. Though a good natured man, there were moments when he became volcanic. We can see him starting up from the breakfast table with flushed face and flashing eyes; throwing on his wig and hat, seizing his cane, and going forth with fell intent to do something, he hardly knew what. But about that something Handel was not long in making up his mind. A mere protest did not suit his thorough-going nature, he would carry the war into the enemy’s country, and use his great name and influence to check the flow of guineas into a thief’s pocket. So, when the speculator opened the Daily Journal on April 19, to chuckle over an advertisement in which he had boldly stated that the book of “Esther” was by Pope, he found another by its side. This was that other:—

“By His Majesty’s Command.

“At the King’s Theatre in the Haymarket, on Thursday, the 2nd of May, will be performed the sacred story of ‘Esther’; an oratorio in English, formerly composed by Mr. Handel, and now revised by him, with several additions, and to be performed by a great number of voices and instruments. N.B.—There will be no acting on the stage, but the house will be fitted up in a decent manner for the audience. The music to be disposed after the manner of the Coronation Service. Tickets to be delivered at the same price.”

Unfortunate, but rightly served speculator! It is presumed that he gave his performance on April 20, with poor results. At any rate, he disappears into the darkness out of which—like a thief in the night—he came, and we hear no more of him. On the other hand, virtue, in the burly person of our Handel, triumphed all along the line. The Royal Family attended his concert, and so many of the lieges were anxious to do the same, but could not find room, that another performance had to be given, and another, and yet others, to the number of six in all. May 2, 1732, is an important date in the history of English music—the date of the first public rendering of an English oratorio. Little did those who took part, whether as performers or auditors, imagine the results to follow.

It may have been thought that when the speculator collapsed under Handel’s prompt and vigorous return blow, men of his kind would take warning. But human nature is slow to learn any lessons which seem opposed to material interests, and speculator the second duly made his appearance. Him we can name. He was no other than Arne, the upholsterer, of King Street, Covent Garden, better and more worthily known to us as father of Dr. Arne, the composer. Arne had, in 1732, a controlling interest in the little Haymarket Theatre which stood not far from the site of the present house. Fired by Handel’s success, Arne cast an unhandsome eye upon the master’s “Acis and Galatea,” published by Walsh two years earlier, and (1731) brought out, more or less mutilated, by Rich at the Theatre in Lincoln’s Inn Fields. This work, without leave or license from the composer, Arne, the unscrupulous, prepared for a performance announced in the following terms:

“May 10th, at the Theatre in the Haymarket, on Thursday, the 12th inst., ‘Acis and Galatea,’ a pastoral drama, set by Mr. Handel, will be performed, with all the choruses, scenes, machines, and other decorations, being the first time it was performed in a theatrical way. The part of Acis by Mr. Moutier, being the first time of his appearing in character on any stage; Galatea by Miss Arne. Pit and boxes at five shillings.”

This had been preceded a day or two by a “par.” of the kind so familiar to modern journalism:—

“We hear that the proprietors of the English Opera will very shortly perform a celebrated pastoral opera called ‘Acis and Galatea,’ composed by Mr. Handel, with all the grand choruses and other decorations, as it was performed before His Grace the Duke of Chandos, at Cannons. It is now in rehearsal.”

The performance, “it being impossible to get ready the decorations, scenes, and machines before that time,” did not take place till May 17. Meanwhile, what was Handel doing? The answer is that he countermined the shameless Arne as he did Arne’s impudent predecessor and exemplar. Unable to prevent the man of the little theatre in the Haymarket from stealing his work, the master resolved that he should not long enjoy it undisturbed. Accordingly, on June 5, he put forth the subjoined advertisement:—

“In the King’s Theatre, in the Haymarket, the present Saturday, being the 10th of June, will be performed a Serenata called ‘Acis and Galatea,’ formerly composed by Mr. Handel, and now revised by him, with several additions, and to be performed by a great number of the best voices and instruments. There will be no action on the stage, but the scene will represent, in a picturesque manner, a rural prospect, with rocks, groves, fountains, and grottoes, amongst which will be disposed a chorus of nymphs and shepherds; the habits and every other decoration suited to the subject. Also on 13th, 17th, 20th. The libretto, printed for J. Watts, in three acts.”

From the terms of Arne’s announcement it would appear that “Acis and Galatea” was performed by him as an opera, after the fashion adopted by Macready and revived at the Princess’s Theatre within recent memory. Handel, however, preferred the merely pictorial stage, with dresses; appealing so far to the eye and no farther. One is tempted to put the question, “If no more, why so much?” But the master must be assumed to have known his own business best, and it may have been deemed politic to present a variation upon Arne. The “additions” offered by Handel as an extra attraction consisted of airs from his Italian Serenata of the same name, and three choruses, two sung in Italian and one in English—a polyglot arrangement which provokes Schœlcher to call the work, as thus given, a “macaronic ‘Acis.’” Four performances took place in June; the Serenata being then laid aside till the following December. It is worthy of record that, fired by Handel’s example, Buononcini brought out a Pastoral in the same month and had it performed in the same theatre. “It appears, therefore,” writes Schœlcher, “that Handel gave, at the theatre of which he was chief director, the work of a man who was set up for his rival. This was either an extreme of courtesy or an extreme of pride.” We add that it may not have been either, but simply an exercise of managerial discretion under the influence of a magnanimous nature.

After the two Pastorals, the King's Theatre closed till November, but in the interim Handel was not idle. To this period we owe the publication of his music—really a pasticcio—to Ben Jonson's "Alchymist" and of the "Twelve Sonatas, or Solos, for a Violin or a German Flute," and the six "Sonatas à 2 Violons, 2 Hautbois ou deux Flutes traversières et basse continu."

As already indicated, "Acis and Galatea" was revived shortly after the King's Theatre re-opened, and four performances took place (December 5, 9, 12, 16). On the first of these dates Handel received a letter from Aaron Hill, which should not be overlooked here. Some reader may ask, Who was Aaron Hill? The answer is—A dramatist and manager, who, in the first capacity, wrote the libretto of Handel's "Rinaldo," and, in the second, at one time acted as director both of Drury Lane Theatre and the Haymarket Opera House. His works are many, and he was altogether a man of great energy and influence, as well as sound judgment on matters theatrical. From an important person, therefore, came the following letter "to Mr. Handel":—

"Sir,—I ought sooner to have returned you my hearty thanks for the silver ticket, which has carried the obligation farther than to myself; for my daughters are both such lovers of musick that it is hard to say which of them is most capable of being charmed by the compositions of Mr. Handel.

"Having this occasion of troubling you with a letter, I cannot forbear to tell you the earnestness of my wishes, that, as you have made such considerable steps towards it already, you would let us owe to your inimitable genius the establishment of musick upon a foundation of good poetry; where the excellence of the sound shall be no longer dishonoured by the poorness of the sense it is chained to.

"My meaning is that you would be resolute enough to deliver us from our Italian bondage, and demonstrate that English is soft enough for opera, when composed by poets who know how to distinguish the sweetness of our tongue from the strength of it, where the last is less necessary.

"I am of opinion that male and female voices may be found in this kingdom capable of everything that is requisite, and, I am sure, a species of dramatic opera might be invented that, by reconciling reason and dignity with musick and fine machinery, would charm the ear and hold fast the heart together.

"I am so much a stranger to the nature of your present engagements that, if what I have said should not happen to be so practicable as I conceive it, you will have the goodness to impute it to the zeal with which I wish you at the head of a design as solid and imperishable as your musick and memory. I am, Sir, your most obliged and most obedient servant,—A. HILL."

This letter does credit in every way to Hill's perspicacity and judgment on the art questions involved; but Handel could not be expected to see with him eye to eye, especially as he combined the responsibilities of a manager with the duties of a composer. English opera was then, as it has been ever since, an unfashionable thing, and though it managed to struggle along, nothing in its circumstances gave hope of better fortune. On the other hand, Handel's patrons, in so far as they were adherents of anything, preferred Italian opera, which had, moreover, all the great composer's sympathies. Hill's letter, therefore, produced no effect.

In November of this year (1732) Handel completed a new opera, "Orlando," and produced it on January 27, 1733. The libretto had been "set" several times before—which is testimony in its favour, but the music survives in little more than the famous bass air "Sorge infausta," pronounced by Burney to be "in Handel's grandest style of writing for a bass voice." "Orlando" had a run of ten performances; then giving way to a revival of "Floridante." It may be noticed, as a considerable achievement for those times, that the new opera, performed on January 27, was published by Walsh on February 6, ninety pages of music being engraved, printed, and bound in seventeen days.

While attending to his duties in connection with lyric drama, Handel did not lose sight of the new field which the success of "Esther," and the other Concert-works, had opened up. There is no reason to believe that at this time he thought of oratorio save as a second and subsidiary string to his bow. He was still the composer of opera before all, and such, had it not been for overmastering circumstances, he would doubtless have remained. There existed no reason, however, why he should not work the new vein in leisure moments, and he did so by writing "Deborah," the last touches being put to it on February 24, 1733. This Oratorio was produced, next in succession to the revived "Floridante," on March 17, the public having been prepared by the following advertisement:—

"By his Majesty's command. 'Deborah,' an oratorio, or sacred drama, in English, composed by Mr. Handel. The house to be fitted up and illuminated in a new and particular manner, and to be performed by a great number of the best voices and instruments. Tickets to be delivered at the office of the Opera House, and Friday and Saturday, 16th and 17th inst., one guinea each; gallery, half-a-guinea. N.B.—This is the last dramatick performance that will be exhibited at the King's Theatre till after Easter."

Astonishment and indignation rose high at sight of the terms of admission to the new work, and Handel soon had cause to see that he had made a great tactical mistake. The more or less good natured public grumbled of course, but would have done nothing worse than decline to pay. Handel's enemies, on the contrary, saw an opening through which they made haste to push their deadliest steel, and thus really began the master's sorest troubles. Schœlcher quotes from the London Magazine of April, 1733, a letter addressed to the editor of The Craftsman by Paolo Rolli, a librettist once attached to the Academy of Music, and a man whom, there can hardly be a doubt, Handel had offended. The precious epistle is too long for citation as a whole, but a few choice sentences may be given as indicating the virulence with which Handel was assailed. "The rise and progress of Mr. H——l's power and fortune," observes Mr. Rolli, "are too well known for me now to relate. Let it suffice to say that he has grown so insolent upon the sudden and undeserved increase of both, that he thought nothing ought to oppose his imperious and extravagant will. He had, for some time, governed the operas, and modelled the orchestra without the least control. No voices, no instruments, were admitted but such as flattered his ears, though they shocked those of the audience. Wretched scrapers were put above the best hands in the orchestra; no music but his own was to be allowed, though everybody was weary of it; and he had the impudence to assert that there was no composer in England but himself." After much more of this, only worse, the amiable Mr. Rolli rejoices over the thin audience of "Deborah": "This accident, they say, has thrown him into a deep melancholy, interrupted sometimes by raving fits, in which he fancies he sees ten thousand opera devils coming to tear him to pieces; then he breaks out into frantic incoherent speeches, muttering sturdy beggars! assassination! &c." Beneath this coarse abuse, which floated on the top of popular feeling like scum, there was, no doubt, a good deal of irritation. The adherents of Buononcini disliked Handel heartily, as a measure of party warfare; then the master's bluff manners and natural independence had alienated many of the aristocracy, who could not understand such qualities in a man of mere intellect; while in league with all these were the people—a numerous band—who feel themselves personally affronted by another's success. Whether it be true or not that the anti-Handel ladies gave parties on the evenings when the King's Theatre was thrown open, the fact remains that "Deborah," at doubled prices, was a financial failure. Handel, under these circumstances, took a dignified and prudent course. He saw that a mistake had been made, and restored the old terms at the second performance; disdaining to show the least resentment against his pertinacious and bitter assailants. "Deborah" having been given four times, the opera season closed with representations of "Esther," "Orlando," "Floridante," and Buononcini's "Griselda."

Though the O. P. grumblers had their way in the case of "Deborah," ill-feeling against Handel continued to wax strong, and a number of rival composers, such as Arne, Smith, and Greene, sought to advantage themselves by setting up their own claims. This, as Burney remarks, was "the contention of infants with a giant," and Handel suffered little or nothing by their pretensions. Other circumstances were much more formidable, especially a rupture of the master's good relations with Cuzzoni and his old antagonist, Senesino. This brought the whole matter of Handel's unpopularity to a head, and had results of the first importance. It is bootless to enquire the precise cause of Handel's quarrel with Senesino. No particulars have come down to us, but it is easy to imagine the delicate relations that must subsist between a passionate man like Handel and a proud, conceited person like the male soprano. On such a point the aristocracy were certain to be on Senesino's side. We read in Schœlcher: "With certain exceptions, the English aristocracy had, from the beginning, no great inclination for Handel. Accustomed to be flattered by artists, they were shocked at the dignity which he preferred towards everybody. Burney observes, with his habitual exactness, in speaking of the subscribers to the opera of 'Alessandro' (1726): 'It is remarkable that among the subscribers not above two or three of the directors of the Royal Academy, or hardly any other great personages, appear on the list, though the publication preceded the quarrel with the nobility a considerable time.' On the other hand, there are none but dukes, marquises, earls, and right honourables in the subscription list for the two volumes of 'Cantate e Duetti,' published by Buononcini in 1722, at the price of two guineas per copy, although the volume had not more than ninety-nine pages. Some of his admirers subscribed for two and even five copies: the Right Hon. Mr. Pulteney, ten; the Duke of Queensbury, twenty-five; his wife, the Duchess of Queensbury, twenty-five; Lord Carleton, thirty; the Countess of Sunderland, fifty-five, &c." All these wealthy adversaries of Handel naturally espoused the cause of Senesino at the outset of the quarrel, and, as is ever the case, the more they meddled, the more they managed to embitter. The aristocracy demanded that Senesino should be reinstated at the Opera House, and Handel, who could be as haughty as the bluest blooded among them, declared that the Italian should never sing again in his theatre. Cannot we fancy the amazement and wrath of the dukes and earls at this rebuff? Were they, before whom ordinary men grovelled abjectly, to be thwarted by the son of a pettifogging German surgeon! A thousand times No. But what could be done? The laws of England, even in those days, had something to say about the liberty of the subject, and there was no safety in immuring Handel in "the deepest dungeon below the castle moat." Under all circumstances, nothing was possible save boycotting, and to that plan (which did not originate in Ireland) the proud peers of England stooped, giving up their boxes in the Haymarket, and putting their august heads together to think out the happy idea of setting up an opposition house. A few days after the season closed, Handel's opponents put an advertisement in the Daily Post, as follows:—

"The subscribers to the opera in which Signor Senesino and Signora Cuzzoni are to perform, are desired to meet at Mr. Hickford's great room in Pantion Street on Friday next, at eleven o'clock, in order to settle proper methods for carrying on the subscription. Such persons who cannot be present are desired to send their proxies."

It was now open war between the nobility and Handel. The malcontents took the theatre in Lincoln's Inn Fields and prepared for action, inviting Porpora to come over as composer and conductor, and engaging, besides the artists named in the advertisement, Cuzzoni and Farinelli, with various others. All this placed Handel in a very serious position. Deserted and actively opposed by the class upon which Italian opera then, and long after, depended for support, he must have seen that nothing short of a miracle could save him. But the resolute, unconquerable master did not despair. He girded up his loins for the battle, determined that if he had to fall it should be in the act of fighting. Handel struck the first blow by opening the King's Theatre on October 30 (1733), the nobility returning it by commencing operations on December 29.

Before following the fortunes of the fight, we must go back a little and see what Handel was doing in another branch of the art between the close of the season in June and the beginning of his battle royal with the aristocracy. On June 7 he finished "Athaliah," and went off to Oxford early in July with the new work in his pocket, having been invited thither by the Vice-Chancellor for the purpose of its production as a feature in the festivities of a Public Act. Thanks to the preservation of a diary kept by one Thomas Hearne, M.A., of St. Edmund's Hall, we enjoy some curious and amusing glimpses of the master at the University celebration. Mr. Hearne had a thorough contempt for music and musicians. He is amazed at the action of the Vice-Chancellor, and communicates his opinions to the diary in strong language, which, however, we are prepared to forgive, in consideration of the information and amusement imparted. "One Handell, a foreigner," wrote Mr. Hearne, on July 5, "who, they say, was born at Hanover, being desired to come to Oxford, to perform in musick at this Act, in which he hath great skill, is come down, the Vice-Chancellor (Dr. Holmes) having requested him so to do, and, as an encouragement, to allow him the benefit of the theatre both before the Act begins and after it. Accordingly, he hath published papers for a performance to-day, at five shillings a ticket. The performance began a little after five o'clock in the evening. This is an innovation. The players might be as well permitted to come and act." The foregoing is only a preliminary grumble at an "innovation," which the conservative soul of Mr. Hearne naturally regarded with alarm. He is stronger in the next entry:—"The players being denied coming to Oxford by the Vice-Chancellor, and that very rightly, tho' they might as well have been here as Handell and (his lowsy crew) a great number of foreign fiddlers, they went to Abbingdon, and yesterday began to act there, at which were present many gowmsmen from Oxford." The next day Mr. Hearne enters account of another Handelian performance, characteristically adding, "N.B.—His book (not worth rd.) he sells for 1s." Schœlcher, besides quoting the above, gives extracts from two pamphlets in which the proceedings of the Oxford Public Act are mentioned. We take one only:—

"Thursday, the 5th of July. About five o'clock, the great Mr. Handel shew'd away with his 'Esther,' an oratorio, or sacred drama, to a very numerous audience at five shillings a ticket."

"Saturday, the 7th. The Chevalier Handel very judiciously, forsooth, ordered out tickets for his 'Esther' this evening again. Some of the company that had found themselves but very scambingly entertained at our dry disputations took it into their heads to see how a little fiddling would sit upon them. Such as couldn't attend before, squeezed in with as much alacrity as others strove to get out, so that ere his myrmidons could gain their posts, he found that he had little likelihood to be at such a loss for a house as, once upon a time, folks say he was. So that, notwithstanding the barbarous and inhuman combination of such a parcel of unconscionable chaps, he disposed, it seems, of most of his tickets, and had, as you may guess, a pretty motly appearance into the bargain."

"Tuesday, July 10. The company, in the evening, were entertained with a spick and span new oratorio, called 'Athalia.' One of the royal and ample had been saying that truly it was his opinion that the theatre was erected for other guess purposes than to be prostituted to a company of squeaking, bawling, outlandish songsters, let the agreement be what it would."

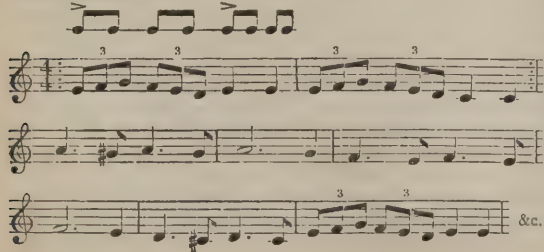

In spite of Mr. Hearne, the anonymous pamphleteer, and all their kind, the Oxford visit was a great success, and Handel went cheerfully back to London, to face the great combination arrayed against him. How he fared in this must be told later.

NOTES ON MUSIC IN BULGARIA.

THOUGH Bulgarian music as a separate entity cannot be said to have a distinct existence, this is not because the Bulgarians are destitute of the musical instinct or are incapable of enjoying music. Until quite recently the Bulgarians were cut off from almost all Occidental influences; all that they had experience of was some of the rude airs of the Southern Slav peoples—who have infinitely less of the creative or executive musical faculty than the Czechs, Poles, or Russians—and the distinctly Oriental music of the Turks and Turkish gipsies. The best known and most widely spread piece of native music in the country is the "Horo," the national dance, the origin of which, though nominally Roumanian, is undoubtedly Oriental, as may be gathered from the following bars:—

No. 1. Drum.

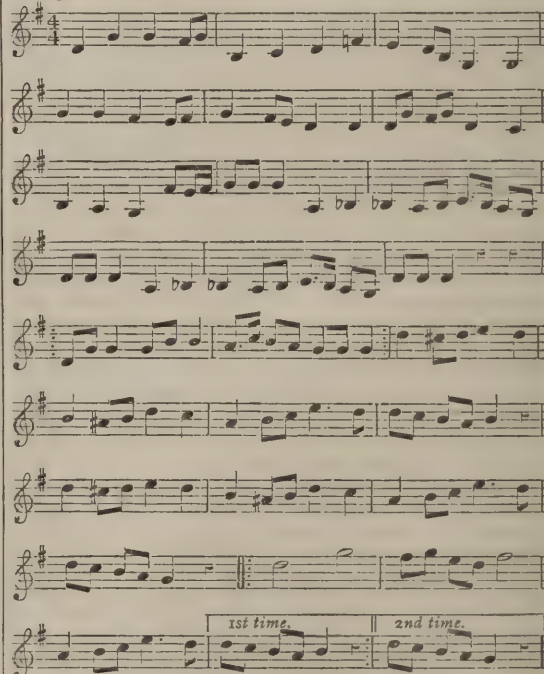

In the Danubian towns and Varna, which were more open to Occidental influences than the rest of the country, the itinerant orchestras of Czech female performers, who are to be found anywhere between their own country and Hong Kong, had familiarised the café-haunting townsmen with some popular forms of Western music indifferently executed, and it is probably a reminiscence of a Rustchuk or Varna café concert which supplied the author of what is now the official national hymn of Bulgaria with the leading motive of "Shumi Maritza." The genesis of this air is amusing to trace. It was originally a sentimental Volkslied, breathing the spirit of Teutonic Gemüthlichkeit, as the words, to which it was originally wedded will sufficiently indicate: "Wie ich mein, Liebchen trink' Dir den goldenen Wein"—

No. 2.

This air has of late years been allied to somewhat vulgar and trivial words of the music hall variety beginning "Wie die Huszaren zur Stadt hinausmarschiren," and going on to describe the effect on the "girls they left behind them." It is probably in this form that the tune struck the ear of a Bulgarian who, at the time of the Russo-Turkish war, adapted to it the patriotic verses with which it is now inseparably associated. After Bulgaria became a principality, with an army of its own, the Government engaged a band of Austrian military musicians, each member of which undertook to instruct a certain number of pupils in the use of his special instrument, the pupils on attaining proficiency being drafted off to the various provincial corps, which now possess each its regimental band. It was the Conductor of this parent band who worked up the air we have quoted above into the present shape, introducing it after a prelude of a quasi-Oriental character, which is not lacking in individuality—

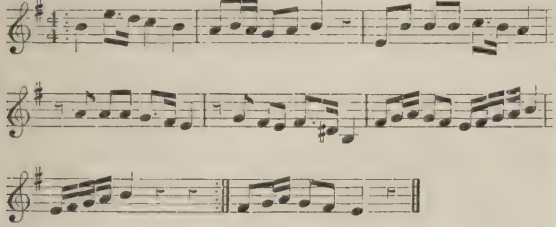

No. 3.

A Bulgarian musician, whose name we have forgotten, has dedicated a spirited march to Hadji Dimitir, a brave but unsuccessful Bulgarian Garibaldi, who, somewhere in the sixties, landed on the Danubian shore of Bulgaria with a small band of devoted adherents who were cut to pieces by the Turkish troops after a desperate, but unavailing, attempt to raise the country. This march, which is very popular in Bulgaria, runs, as far as we can recall it, as follows—

No. 4.

Not only have the Bulgarian bandsmen shown themselves fairly apt pupils of their Czech instructors, but the rank and file of the army have adopted con amore the Russian system of choral singing when on the march. It is their custom to group the best singers at the head of the column, one man starting the song, and the chorus being taken up by the rest, generally in unison. A pleasing incident of the Bulgarian soldier's daily life is the evening prayer, a short canticle of the orthodox service which, sung by the united voices of the whole detachment mustered for the purpose at sundown, never fails to agreeably impress the hearer by its earnestness and heartiness. The Russian soldier songs are much in vogue, though there are several favourite ditties of recent and Bulgarian origin, notably "Boi, Boi, iskami Ni Boi" ("The battle, the battle, we long for the battle"). This song dates from the revolutionary period of Bulgarian history which immediately preceded the Independence—

No. 5.

In the remoter parts of the provinces, and in those classes of the population which have not yet been touched by the conscription, the musical instinct, such as it is, finds vent in extremely primitive manifestations, notably in tom-tomming, an extraordinarily widespread habit amongst Orientals of various grades of civilisation. It is curious, by the way, to notice that the rhythm for which they manifest a special predilection is that of the Habanera. Peasant girls, going to or returning from their work in the fields, may be heard enlivening the neighbourhood with a peculiarly barbarous chant, sung entirely upon one note, with occasional ascents to the octave. Besides the eternal drum, the instruments known to the people, and played principally by the local gypsies of the country, are a small and inferior form of bagpipe with no chanters, the guzla, a very rudimentary mandolin, a fife, and a pipe resembling that of the pifferari. In some districts the nose-flute is not unknown.

It will be readily seen from the foregoing remarks that music in Bulgaria is in a transition stage, with a decided tendency to drift away from the Oriental and semi-barbarous forms of the past. It is too much to say that there is a musical revival in the country. The subject in itself is not one in which sufficient interest is manifested. In the few years that have elapsed since their emancipation, the more immediate needs of material civilisation have claimed the attention of the Bulgarians to the exclusion of organised effort after artistic development, and it will perhaps be long before it can be otherwise. Roads, railways, and bridges must be constructed before the State can spare funds for the establishment of music schools or art galleries. But the musical revolution is already in full swing, owing to the mere stress of circumstances. Improved communications have opened up the country to the troupes of wandering minstrels mentioned above, and the establishment of the conscription has familiarised all the men of the younger generation with suaver and more elaborate forms of expressing their emotions in music than those with which their ancestors had to be content. Judging by the proficiency attained by some of the educated classes in Bulgaria, who have had opportunities of musical education, as well as by the readiness and thoroughness with which the people at large have assimilated the lessons of their instructors, there seems little reason to doubt that whenever the nation finds leisure to devote itself to the serious cultivation of music it will not be behind-hand in its contribution to the art.

IN the recently published second part of his "Pleasures of Life," Sir John Lubbock devotes a few pages to discussing, in his discursive but genial fashion, the evolution of music and its value as a source of innocent joy and recreation. As his text he takes a passage from Plato which is worth citing, although Plato undoubtedly used the term in a different and more transcendental sense. "Music is a moral law. It gives a soul to the universe, wings to the mind, flight to the imagination, a charm to sadness, gaiety and life to everything. It is the essence of order, and leads to all that is good, just, and beautiful, of which it is the invisible, but nevertheless dazzling, passionate, and eternal form." He quotes, too, a luminous phrase of Carlyle's: "Music is a kind of inarticulate, unfathomable speech, which leads us to the edge of the infinite, and lets us for moments gaze into it." Another most impressive piece of testimony is that borne by Helmholtz, whom Sir John Lubbock rightly designates as "one of the profoundest exponents of modern science." He writes thus: "Just as in the rolling ocean, this movement, rhythmically repeated, and yet ever-varying, rivets our attention and hurries us along. But whereas in the sea blind physical forces alone are at work, and hence the final impression on the spectator's mind is nothing but solitude—in a musical work of art the movement follows the outflow of the artist's own emotions. Now gently gliding, now gracefully leaping, now violently stirred, penetrated, or laboriously contending with the natural expression of passion, the stream of sound, in primitive vivacity, bears over into the hearer's soul unimagined moods which the artist has overheard from his own, and finally raises him up to that repose of everlasting beauty of which God has allowed but few of His elect favourites to be the heralds." Here too is another splendid tribute to music from the pen of Cardinal Newman. After speaking of the paucity of the intervals of our scale, he says: "What a slender outfit for so vast an enterprise! What science brings so much out of so little? Out of what poor elements does some great master in it create his new world! Shall we say that all this exuberant inventiveness is a mere ingenuity or trick of art, like some game of fashion of the day, without reality, without meaning? . . . Is it possible that that inexhaustible evolution and disposition of notes, so rich yet so simple, so intricate yet so regulated, so various yet so majestic, should be a mere sound, which is gone and perishes? Can it be that those mysterious stirrings of the heart, and keen emotions, and strange yearnings after we know not what, and awful impressions from we know not whence, should be wrought in us by what is unsubstantial, and comes and goes, and begins and ends in itself? It is not so; it cannot be. No; they have escaped from some higher sphere; they are the outpourings of eternal harmony in the medium of created sound; they are echoes from our Home; they are the voice of Angels, or the Magnificat of Saints, or the living laws of Divine Governance, or the Divine Attributes; something are they besides themselves, which we cannot compass, which we cannot utter, though mortal man, and he perhaps not otherwise distinguished above his fellows, has the gift of eliciting them." These be weighty witnesses, and with them on our side, and many others as eloquent and learned, we need not be troubled by the talk of those who aver that music is a mere trick and can never penetrate below the senses.

WHAT will be done about the professorship of Music at Oxford? Great as were the talents of the last occupant of the chair, it cannot be denied that a non-resident professor is a mistake at the present day; indeed, they only served to demonstrate the impossibility of a professor exercising any practical influence by the delivery of a lecture once a Term. The University is full of students interested in the art and practice of music, and a resident professor, who had administrative skill and was not afraid of hard work, would have a great opportunity before him. Though many of the electing board have little or no knowledge of musical art, it is to be hoped that they will be alive to the necessity of securing a professor who will be on the spot to organise the enthusiasm that undoubtedly prevails at the University. If such a man be appointed, it would not be rash to prophesy a brilliant future for the Oxford School of Music. The names of many eminent musicians are spoken of as candidates. There can be no doubt that if Sir John Stainer were appointed, his acceptance of the office would give the highest possible satisfaction in all quarters. He possesses all the qualifications necessary, and would command the confidence of musicians and of all interested in music throughout the world.

THE tenth Annual Report of the Orphan School and Benevolent Fund for Musicians, 10, Darnley Road, Notting Hill, W., under the management of Miss Helen Kenway, shows how much good may be done with small means and earnest endeavour. The report states "that the subscriptions and payments of friends are not yet sufficient to defray the expenses of the Institution, but all fees and subscriptions are used solely for the benefit of the orphans." The value of the benevolence of those who give their services in helping the designs of this Institution is the greater because of its unobtrusiveness. The attention of kind-hearted musicians may be forcibly directed to this Institution, so that they may contribute something to enable it to extend its operations. "While we have time, let us do good unto all men, and specially unto them that are of the household of faith."

THE Report and Proceedings of the Birmingham and Midland Musical Guild for the fifth Session, 1888, just issued, shows the work of the Society during the past year, its Concerts, lectures, and other matters. A number of interesting meetings have been held, among which may be mentioned the lectures by Mr. Casson on "Organ Building Reform,"

Mr. Charles Lunn upon "The Old Italian School of Voice Culture," Mr. Cummings on "Nineteenth Century Music," and a capital paper on "Church Music," by Mr. Taylor. The balance sheet of the Society shows it to be in a good financial position. Other large musical centres might follow the lead of Birmingham in the establishment and maintenance of like associations, with advantage to themselves and no little profit to the world of musical art.

THE copyright of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" will, as many of our readers probably know, shortly expire. Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co. have this day issued, in anticipation of the demand which is likely to arise, a cheap and clearly printed pocket edition of the Oratorio at the price of one shilling. They have also reduced the cost of the octavo edition to two shillings. By means of this liberal concession, thousands of lovers of the beautiful music will be able to possess copies, and the most humble among the choral societies in the land will be in a position to study and to perform the work still more frequently than heretofore.

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

THE story of a pianoforte was, the other day, unfolded before Mr. Justice Wills, sitting in the Queen's Bench division of the High Court, and it is worth telling here. Mr. John Cheshire, the harpist, once upon a time hired of Mr. Archibald Ramsden, New Bond Street, a pianoforte valued at £39. After a while the hirer left for America, leaving his wife behind to wind up affairs and follow. Accordingly Mrs. Cheshire sold the household furniture, paid the rent up to date, and asked Mr. Ramsden to fetch away his instrument, then standing in an otherwise empty house. At this point the landlord, Mr. Alfred Bennett, came on the scene. He refused to give up the pianoforte, declaring that he had not been put in possession of the house. Presumably, therefore, he was holding the instrument as security for another quarter's rent. Hereupon Mr. Ramsden, having taken legal advice, made a forcible entry on the premises, but found that his property had been removed. An action for its value promptly followed. At the trial Mr. Justice Wills gave judgment for the plaintiff with costs, and without calling upon counsel for a reply to the evidence of the defendant's witnesses. Mr. Alfred Bennett, it appears, had sued Mr. Ramsden in another court for damages caused by breaking into the house, and there also he failed. By this time, probably, he knows that it is dangerous to meddle with a hired pianoforte.

THERE is no more comic reading than the reports of Town Council meetings. Here is an example from Neath, where, it would seem, the liberality of Mrs. Gwyn has built a hall, in which the municipal authorities intend to place an organ. Scene: The Council in session. Letter read from Mr. J. S. Church, asking for the post of Organist. He is not an organist at present, but, if appointed, would take lessons. Moved, that the application be referred to the Hall Committee. Amendment proposed, by Mr. Trick, that Mr. Church be appointed at once, so that he might get tuition at once. The Mayor: "Mr. Church says that he is not an organist." Mr. Trick: "I press my motion, subject to approval of Mrs. Gwyn." Mayor: "I should be sorry to convey this to Mrs. Gwyn." Mr. Trick (is this name a misprint for Thick?): "Why?" Mayor: "Mr. Trick, shall I explain?" Mr. Trick: "Certainly." Mayor: "The builders have not been consulted yet, and the organ will take six or eight months to build. Mr. Church says he cannot play, and I say it would be wrong to select Mr. Church to-day." Mr. Trick (light having penetrated him): "I withdraw." We leave the story in its beautiful simplicity.

THE old subject of the treatment of artists in social life still crops up from time to time. We read in a contemporary:—"To invite a musician to a meal, with the hope of getting a little music out of him, is the embodiment of penuriousness and meanness. Stephen Foster, on one occasion, was invited by his aunt to a supper with the request to bring his flute along. He saw the point, stayed at home, but sent his flute. Gottschalk, when invited to dinner, always asked whether he was expected to play or not. If he was expected to play he charged twenty-five dollars. Chopin is said to have been the guest of a rich shoe-dealer. After dinner the rude host asked him to play. Chopin excused himself, saying that he had eaten little, but the sardonic remark was quite wasted on the man of leather. 'Oh! sit down and play something, just to show us how it is done.' Chopin complied. Some time after he invited the shoe-dealer to a party at his house, and, ordering in a cobbler's bench, requested him to sew a patch on a shoe 'just to show how it is done.'" We do not find this story in Mr. Niecks's biography, but it is decidedly ben trovato.

"JUSTITIA" sends us the following statement: "The organist of St. James's, Bermondsey, was appointed about four years ago at the by no means high salary of £25 per year. Rather more than a year ago, the powers that be, thinking they might curtail their expenditure, reduced their organist's salary by £10, so that now the organist receives £15, while the blower (whose stipend has not been reduced) receives but £5 less per annum, and this at a church that has numbered such men as Turle and Oliver May among its organists. I may add that the organist is a very capable performer, and holds excellent testimonials from able and well-known musicians. I hope you will think with me that such cases should be exposed and something be done to establish some sort of status for organists. At present they are entirely at the mercy of the frequently capricious clergyman, or, perhaps, still more eccentric churchwardens." This story needs no comment. The moral on the face of it is—Combine! combine! combine! How slowly do the professional classes learn the lesson of the trades unions!

HERE is a good story, and probably a true one: Two artists, a violinist and a pianist, attend, professionally, a musical soirée. The violinist plays a solo by De Beriot, and the hostess expresses surprise that a performer of his ability should countenance such trash. The two artists put their heads together about this, and the result is seen when they play an arrangement from "Tristan und Isolde." At the end of the Liebestod motive, the pianist strikes the utterly foreign chord of C; the violinist following with that of C sharp. The hostess and her friends listen with rapt appreciation. At the close, said the pianist to the hostess: "Did you hear that terrible chord just before the Tristan motive?" She did. "Well," adds the conspirator, "that represents Tristan's wailing cry of anguish when he exclaims 'Let us die together.'" Then to him the hostess: "How expressive! How like Wagner! Ah! none but Wagner could have written such expressive music!" The two practical jokers adjourned to a café and looked at each other across a table in silence.

It cannot be very long ago that Mr. Henry Goodwin lived in Edenic innocence among the flowers which it was his business to tend. But the tempter came, as once to Eve, and communicated to the guileless Mr. Goodwin that knowledge of good and evil—especially evil—which proved fatal to our first parents. "Flowers are all very well," said the tempter, "but there are ways of living that bring you into contact with higher forms of beauty, and involve much less labour." Mr. Goodwin yielded, and, under the guidance of the wicked one, procured a card, the legend upon which falsely set him forth as a representative of THE MUSICAL TIMES. Armed with this document Mr. Goodwin left his flowers and started on a new line of business, the selection of which showed a fine appreciation of respectability.

MR. GOODWIN'S tactics as a chevalier d'industrie had the simplicity of genius. Over his morning coffee he noted the time and place of musical services, organ recitals, and so on. To these, with the so-called MUSICAL TIMES card in his pocket, he would repair, enjoy the performances, make his way to the vestry, present his credentials, and receive with dignity, yet obvious appreciation, the courtesies always paid to our representatives. On his retirement it was generally found that some valuable, not endowed with the power of movement in itself, had gone with him. Mr. Goodwin might long have carried on this agreeable and profitable occupation had not the old Adam—the gardening Adam—survived within him. A momentary flash of the instinct of Eden caused him to take two shrubs, value 5s., from an Islington Churchyard. He was caught, the police found out all about him, and the game was up. For fifteen months to come Mr. Goodwin will enjoy a healthy seclusion in one of Her Majesty's prisons.

WE must congratulate Mr. John Boyle O'Reilly, a Boston editor, upon possessing an uncommon share of Celtic imaginativeness. In a recent essay on Irish music, Mr. O'Reilly conveyed to his trusting readers the following information, among much other:—"The Irish have always been, and even to this day are, addicted to music, and it is an exception to find one who cannot play the harp with more or less skill. . . . That sweet singer, Thomas Moore, eighty years ago, wrote new words to old music which he found scattered over Ireland like jewels. . . . he went to England to sing them anew—not in English tone or tongue, but in the sad tongue of his distressed country." The typical Paddy from Cork will be very much surprised, and equally pleased, to hear that he is a harpist, while the fact that Tom Moore sang songs in the Irish tongue to the English aristocracy cannot but greatly interest admirers of that poet. Mr. O'Reilly will, we trust, make some further discoveries.

STILL goes on the Wagner controversy in New York, the adherents of Italian opera and those of Germany's "new art" giving and taking like the Greeks and Trojans of Homer. Mr. Henderson, musical critic of the New York Times, when lecturing on the fiery topic before the Nineteenth Century Club, foreshadowed a compromise between the two schools—or, rather, a fusion which should result in the perfection of lyric drama. We are to see this glorious result when German dramatic strength marries Italian melody and sentiment. The audience applauded the prospective nuptials, but Professor Monti, on the one hand, contended for Italian opera in its unwedded condition, while, on the other, Mr. Krehbiel "took issue with both his predecessors."

Finally, the chairman remarked that "music hath charms to soothe the savage breast," and the meeting broke up, wondering whether the quotation was intended to be satirical.

It is stated that Messrs. Ernest Gye and Lavine are organising an operatic enterprise for next season in the United States. Interviewed upon the matter, Mr. Lavine said: "We propose . . . to produce Italian opera on a grand scale, on an American foundation, and thoroughly infused with American ideas." Precisely what this may mean we know not, but "the dramatic prima donna will be Mrs. Albani, and another American whom I don't want to name. We expect to put on the stage a company of 180 people. We shall open the season in either New York or Boston with a repertory of six operas, and increase to ten during the winter. Among them will be, I hope, Verdi's 'Otello,' the title rôle of which Mrs. Albani will create in London this coming winter." Here is news indeed. All England will rush to see Madame Albani as the Moor of Venice, and all America will be at the other end of the Atlantic cable.

WE have before called attention in these columns to the annual issue of a "Review of the New York Musical Season," by Mr. H. E. Krehbiel, the eminent critic of the Tribune. The volume for the season just past will shortly be published for America and England by Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co. It contains a new and important feature—"An appendix showing the accomplishments of the principal cities of the United States and Canada in the department of choral music." Within this limit the book will, therefore, convey a trustworthy idea of the very interesting stage which the development of music has reached on the Western Continent. Mr. Krehbiel is a man of, what are sometimes called, "advanced views," but the reader who may disagree with his opinions will find that they do not make his facts less valuable.

WE read in a contemporary: "Thalberg's piano and playing was as chaste and as objective as a chiselled Greek statue, and just as cold; but it was a miracle of polish and repose. We are latterly, perhaps, too much carried away by frantic exhibitions of force and fury. Rubinstein and his Russian roar are being unsuccessfully imitated by every callow and sucking virtuoso. The loss to art is great, the symmetry and sense of proportion are ruined by those furious explosions of pianism which pass for individuality but which are mere technical brutalities." This is plain and healthy speaking, but let us not blame the modern pianist only. Modern music altogether has largely come to be an exhibition of force and fury, of explosions and brutalities, and the public will have it so. At the end of thirty reposeful bars they begin to yawn.

WE have just read an uncommon criticism of Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, and invite the reader to share our admiration of its courage: "The Schubert 'Unfinished' Symphony, which appears from time to time in our concert-programmes, to weary us with its tedious prolixity and its endless repetitions, should be 'put to sleep' for a few years at least. The first of the two movements is built on two commonplace ideas, which are drawn out almost interminably, with an absence of variety and poverty of invention that render it aimless and well-nigh intolerable. The second movement is more interesting, but too long to be enjoyable." As Sir George Grove is not very well just now, we trust measures will be taken to prevent the foregoing extract from coming under his eye.

MR. ASGER HAMERICK, now resident in Baltimore, has written and produced a new orchestral Symphony, of which the Baltimore American thus speaks:—"It is not only, perhaps, the best orchestral work which Mr. Hamerick has given, but also one of the best composed in this generation. . . . While the Scherzo—Allegro grazioso—is light and graceful, suggesting the merriment of the Scandinavian rustics, whose ambition is to kick the rafters off the huts in which they dance, the first, third, and fourth movements combine the breadth of Rubinstein with the expression of Berlioz and the strength of Beethoven." Mr. Henschel is in America just now; perhaps he will look into this "Symphony Lyrique."

WE often hear of concerts in England where the principal listeners are members of the Royal Family, but for those where they are the principal artists it seems we must go to St. Petersburg. We read that at a recent musical performance at the Marble Palace the Grand Duke Constantine played a Piano-forte Concerto by Mozart, the Princess Helena of Mecklenburg-Strelitz sang an air from the same composer's "Requiem," and the first violoncello in the orchestra was held by Her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Constantine. It is also stated that the Czar is a good violin player.

DR. SCHOFIELD, who has lately lectured before the Duchess of Albany and an assembly of ladies on the danger of fostering precocious talent in children, is deserving of the warmest praise. But when he says that instead of trying to force on any special gift, it should be retarded and an all-round development aimed at, it must be remembered that, were this advice universally acted upon, we should have no really great artists. A special faculty must be specially educated; but whenever a young child is "forced," it is with the idea of money being made, not by his exceptional talent, but by his exceptional precocity.

AN American paper lately said of Miss Emma Abbott: "She is charming the Southerners with the 'Last Rose of Summer.' Emma has been the last rose of summer for a good many years, but she joins hands with the next season's crop all the same." Upon this a contemporary remarks: "Suppose we all give Emma a rest from sharp paragraphs for a while; they don't seem to do any good; she keeps right on singing in spite of them." Miss Abbott never had a greater triumph than this proposal of an armistice from such an opponent as the American press.

MR. GERICKE, who succeeded Mr. Henschel as Conductor of the Boston Symphony Concerts, has himself retired from that post, and gave his last Concert a few weeks ago. "Friendly hands," we read, "had decorated the Conductor's stand liberally with flowers and garlands, while from a wreath floated green and white ribbons, Mr. Gericke's native Hungarian colours." The late Conductor is a man of fine taste, with a leaning towards musical conservatism; but at Boston he was unaccountably fond of orchestral arrangements.

If we may judge by the April number of a publication, nominally humorous, published in Scotland, it takes a good long time for a joke to travel northward. A London publication, over two years ago, gave descriptions of the personal appearance of certain of the London musical critics. This paragraph has found its way at last into the current number of the Scottish paper in question. The applicability of the quotation is the more apparent from the fact that two of the critics so graphically described are no longer in the land of the living.

The excellence of the orchestra at the Brighton Aquarium is such as to encourage a hope that good music might shortly become as much a feature at this institution as it was some years ago, under the skilful direction of Mr. F. Corder. The announcement of the performance of Sterndale Bennett's "Woman of Samaria," on Good Friday last, would have seemed like the realisation of this hope, had it not been followed by an intimation that on the next night a burlesque company would perform "Military Billy Taylor."

THERE has been a Wagner war in St. Petersburg. A correspondent of Il Trovatore writes to that journal: "As regards the German opera campaign at the Marie Theatre, the success is small, very small; the discontent of the public is great, very great. At the performance of the 'Walküre,' the audience made a veritable scandal, notwithstanding that the Emperor and Empress were present. One artist—Madame Vogel—was hissed nearly throughout." One may say that in Wagner's ashes "live their wonted fires."

THE American prima donna, Miss Eames, is causing the flame of poetry to burn in French bosoms, and the following acrostic has been addressed to her managers:—

En dépit du grand nom que porte votre scène,
A nos yeux son éclat commençait à pâlir;
Mais Eames est venue! A sa voix de sirène
Un instant du chant on salue une reine;
Son triomphe est garant d'un splendide avenir.

Le Minétre recognises the good intention of the poet, although his verse is not that of Victor Hugo.

MUSICAL servants are now, we see, constantly enquired for. One advertisement, for a "Mother's help," tells us that the applicant "must be a good needlewoman, understand dressmaking, teach music, a thorough lady, and early riser." Another, for "an attractive young lady" to help in the bar of a small hotel, requires that she shall be "domesticated and a competent pianiste." The salary for these accomplishments is £12 a year in each case; but the hotel-keeper discreetly terms it "wages."

It is not often that the artists engaged to support a "star" strike work in the middle of a Concert and leave the hall. Yet this is said to have happened recently at Florence, on an occasion at which a Spaniard named Icernamo appeared as composer, pianist, violinist, and singer. Less often does the man so deserted show such resources as did Mr. Icernamo, who sang "La ci darem" without the lady, her part being, as far as possible, executed by him in falsetto. A man not easily beaten is this Spaniard.

MR. STANTON is the Director of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York; and the American Musician, through the mouth of Mr. John C. Freund, says that "the German element is just a bit too strong for Mr. Stanton," adding "By dint of telling us that Italian opera is dead, and that we are all Teutons, and that this is the end of the nineteenth century—which important fact they are never tired of repeating—they are beginning just to tire us. Their tone is just a trifle too arrogant for us."

It is a pity that the Viennese cannot refrain from quarrelling over the Mozart statue. They treated the master badly when he was alive, and now wrangle over his remains. Some time ago the Statue Committee suspended operations because of a disagreement with the municipality, and now they have brought out an entirely new scheme preparatory, we fear, to another conflict with the authorities. Truly Mozart is avenged.

THE Committee of the Sunderland Philharmonic Society, desiring to stimulate thought on musical subjects among their members, have offered prizes for the best two essays on "Choral Societies: their Function and Influence." Should the idea be taken up, they intend, further, to institute an annual discussion upon the works performed at their Concerts. The Sunderland amateurs are going ahead, and in the right direction.

MISS ELLICOTT has written a short piece for soprano solo, chorus, and orchestra, which is to be performed at one of the secular Concerts in connection with the Gloucester Festival. Apropos, that Festival will present a gathering of the talents. Sir Arthur Sullivan, Dr. Hubert Parry, Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, Mr. F. H. Cowen, and Mr. C. Lee Williams will all be present with examples of their skill. Well done, Gloucester.

FOREIGNERS, who may imagine that a "Music Hall" in England has something to do with music, will, we think, be surprised to read that at an establishment so-called, the principal performers just engaged are "the Champion Light-weight wrestlers of Lancashire," that the company is to include "burlesque gymnasts," and "clever dogs," and that "a new screaming Comic Entertainment" is promised during the evening.

THE following remarks on Von Bülow will excite wonder where they do not cause mirth: "In the high white light of a matchless musically intellectual mind, all he touches becomes instinct with a vivid life; the tone leaps up to meet his electric touch, and lo! a marvellous tonal edifice is created under our very sight, or, rather, hearing." Aladdin's lamp is superseded by the Doctor's electric white light.

A CORRESPONDENT writes from Hartlepool: "Can any of your readers give information on the subject of a ladies' surpliced church choir? Where does one exist? and what is the costume considered to be orthodox?" If there be such a choir anywhere—we think there is—its light is assuredly not hidden under a bushel, and someone must know of it. On behalf of our correspondent, we invite particulars.

THE Emigration Commissioners of New York are wise men. We read in the Musical Courier: "A band of German musicians among the steerage passengers of the steamship Queen from Liverpool were detained at Castle Garden on Thursday, as undesirable immigrants." Our contemporary exclaims, "Send them back." O that it were ever thus—and everywhere.

IN the programme of a Concert, given at Chester by Sir Charles Hallé, the following appeared: "Concerto—Violin. Adagio and Rondo Finale, from Concerto in E major (Vieuxtemps)." A correspondent writes that this was commented on by a person sitting near him in terms as follow: "It says concertina and violin, but one never knows what it means in this 'ere Latin!"

WE can scarcely wonder at the slovenly manner in which the vocal portions of divine service are often rendered when, at a city church, an alto (male), tenor, and bass are required, "for choral communions, anthems, &c.," with two attendances on Sundays, and one week-night practice, for a salary of £5 per annum. It should be added, however, that this is modestly termed by the advertiser a "small payment."

THE following recently appeared in a Scottish newspaper: "The first series of six original tunes to well-known hymns have been most sweetly rendered by —. 'Lord, in this Thy mercies' day,' in the key of three flats, and 'Art thou weary?' in one flat, as well as 'Our blest Redeemer,' are very telling." So is the review.

So the Wagner Society has made an alliance with the Richter Concerts "for one night only," and the music discoursed under their joint auspices on June 24 will be all Wagner. It is necessary for the Society to do something after that terrible experience of "Tristan und Isolde" with pianoforte accompaniment.

IN some respects the American critics show a lead to all of us, though we may not be inclined to follow them. One says that Albani is "unable to divide herself into four parts, however adiposely adapted to that end," and adds, of another artist, "If she could divide herself, Miss Damian might easily sing a duet."

THE Neue Zeitschrift has tabulated the works of Franz Liszt, and the totals come out thus: Original compositions, 397; transcriptions of his own pieces, 254; transcriptions of pieces by other composers, 450; foreign works edited and revised, 34. Grand total, 1,135. Whatever may be said of Liszt, no one can accuse him of laziness.

IT seems a barren expedient to offer prizes now-a-days in hopes of discovering merit. The sum of 500 francs set apart by the Parisian Society of Musical Composers for the best pianoforte and wind "Sextet" is still going a-begging, the judges having refused it to any who took part in the recent competition. They made one "honourable mention."

IT appears that the Wolverhampton Festival has collapsed simply and solely on account of public indifference. The Committee had made preliminary arrangements, but the applications for tickets were so few that prudence counselled a giving up of the whole thing, at least for the present. We are sorry—for Wolverhampton.

THERE is a good story of a Rio de Janeiro manager who engaged, in Paris, three artists for the post of first tenor. The three met on board ship and demanded an explanation of their chief. They had it: "Gentlemen, in a week after landing, two of you will be dead of yellow fever. The survivor gets the work and the salary." Tableau!

IN view of the recent performance of "Fidelio" at Brussels, the dialogue was set in recitative by Mr. Gevaert. The Flemish master might have saved himself trouble and taken the recitatives composed by Balfe, which are masterly from beginning to end. But, perhaps, he did not know of their existence.

MADAME SEMBRICH is expected in London this season, and three Orchestral and Vocal Concerts will be given in her name. "Nikita" is looked for also, and she will give a Concert. Other visits are in store. We are going to experience the truth of the proverb, "It never rains but it pours."

THE Pianoforte Quintet, composed by Mr. Gerard F. Cobb for performance at the Musical Artists' Concert on Saturday next, is a charming composition, full of grace and elegance, and marked by excellent themes. Though in strong contrast with the blustering fashion of the day, its success may be hoped for.

DR. J. F. BRIDGE is engaged upon the last part of his new Oratorio, the book of which has been compiled from Scripture by Mr. Joseph Bennett. Will he offer it to the Stewards of the Worcester Festival? We should say not, because the Stewards should ask for it.

IN the advertisement of the "Dulcephone"—an instrument for dulling the sound of the pianoforte—we are told that Sir John Stainer terms it "a boon for students"; may we not suggest—as representing the long-suffering musical public—that it is also "a real blessing to unwilling listeners."

WE gladly hear that there is an intention to place a "brass" in Winchester Cathedral to the memory of Samuel Sebastian Wesley, sometime organist there. Now, Hereford and Gloucester, follow this good example of homage to a great, though it must be confessed, eccentric musician.

THE Norwich Festival of 1887 was reproached in some quarters as being a "Festival of Foreigners." It is not likely that the term will apply to the solemnity of 1890, since both Dr. Hubert Parry and Mr. Hamish MacCunn have engaged to compose works for it.

THE late Mr. Oliver Ditson is said to have left 15,000 dollars to found a permanent home for poor singers. The sum is not sufficient. There are few persons who could not number among their own acquaintance more than enough poor singers to exhaust the whole sum in a week.

THE following advertisement, taken from a leading South Wales journal, should be read in connection with a paragraph which appears elsewhere concerning the Neath Town Council:—

"Wanted, a Pianist. One with a little knowledge of music preferred. Address," &c.

A LADY pianist is thus spoken of by an American critic: "Summer night or stately swan is not more restful to look upon, yet her fingers play like swift wind about a flower." The aroma of this sentence, as the writer would perhaps say, must not be disturbed by the ordinary odour of commonplace remark.

IT is said that the German Emperor will go to Bayreuth for the Wagnerian performances next autumn. Also that, not long ago, he witnessed a representation of a Wagner opera in solitary state. Let us hope that William the Second's imitation of the late crazy King of Bavaria will now stop.

HOPE regarding Boïto's "Nerone" may as well be given up. The opera makes no progress; not that the librettist-composer is lazy, but that he suffers from an invincible self-distrust. He writes and destroys, and destroys as much as he writes.

IN view of the Exhibition season, the French Director of Fine Arts has ordered all the unfinished parts of the Grand Opéra to be completed forthwith. Some of the Parisian journals opine that, while about it, he should provide the house with a new director.

WE once heard a student say, when required at a Musical examination to "finish this canon," that, if left to himself, he should never have commenced it. Is not this worth thinking of by teachers who set musical papers for candidates?

IN a notice of an invention for filling the bellows of an organ, it is said that it would prove "cheaper than paying blowist." We never before heard the term, but "it may pass."

IT has just been said of a certain vocalist: "Her voice is a soprano of somewhat low register, with the register closed." May it be said that the artist in question is now "shut up"?

"THE glorious Patti got there last night with both feet." This means, in America, that she sang very successfully. It is well to note such premonitions of the language of the future.

THERE has just died in Milan a gentleman who had regularly attended performances at La Scala for sixty-five years! The endurance of the human frame sometimes approaches the marvellous.

DR. VON BÜLOW made his first appearance in New York as conductor of a Concert for the Society of Ethical Culture. Have our cousins anywhere a Society for the Culture of Temper?

THE war-songs of the Union and Confederate armies in the American Civil War have been collected. They form a most interesting volume of nearly 700 pages.

MR. CAMPANINI is at present on tour in Texas. His letters home are described as "florid and fervid but not enlightening." Their want of lucidity is attributed to Texan indifference.

A STATISTICIAN remarks that "the population of Europe is greatly added to by the invasion of American girls who are determined to be prime donne."

Le Ménestrel informs its readers that Messrs. Burnand and Solomon's piece at the Comedy has a subject taken from the "Pickwickier" of Dickens.

Mozart's "Il Seraglio" has been produced at Alexandria. We wonder what the pashas thought about it. An elopement from the seraglio, forsooth!

ANOTHER Giuseppe Verdi has appeared. He is described as a Maestro and journalist, and a "Leonora" from his pen will shortly be produced in Italy.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

THE long-standing promise to produce Mr. Benoit's so-called Oratorio "Lucifer" was redeemed by the directors of this Society on the 3rd ult., when a moderately large audience made acquaintance, for the first time, with a typical example of modern Flemish music. It cannot be said that the result was wholly one of satisfaction, and we fancy that a very long time will elapse before "Lucifer" finds acceptance, if ever it does, at the hands of English amateurs. In the first place, the book, accredited to Mr. Emanuel Hiel, is of the strangest description, and is marked by a freedom and luridness of imagination such as few ordinary people can attain unto. There is in it no individual human interest whatever, nor any character, mortal or immortal, save the fallen spirit after whom the work is called. But this very severe limitation of dramatic interest is not all. The book seems to us constructed in a clumsy manner. It opens at a time when Lucifer approaches the earth, under the shroud of night. Baneful spirits like himself mark the signs of his coming, and the convulsions of nature at his presence are shown. The Fiend, declaring that his purpose is to work the ruin of humanity, calls to his aid the elements of Earth, Fire, and Water, which, in personified forms, obey his call. Then the first part ends with a spirit chorus, in which a far from flattering portrait of man is painted. The second part lays before us a kind of parade of Lucifer's forces. He calls them forward one by one, each in turn answering the summons, and detailing the plan by which the ruin of humanity is to be promoted. The "general idea" is that of so promoting man's material interests that he shall become puffed up with pride and rebel against his Maker. At this point there is a huge gap. An indefinite interval passes, during which the agents of evil are assumed to be hard at work, but of their proceedings we learn nothing till, with the beginning of the third part, it appears that Lucifer finds nothing accomplished. He complains of this, but the forces, now arrayed against him, make a counter attack. Even his ally, Death, laughs at him with a lugubrious noise, while light from heaven sweeps across the scene, and the voices of angels and of humanity begin to swell a song of praise. Lucifer raves in his despair, but eventually descends to the abyss, and a Hymn of the Universe ends the work. We must admit the boldness of all this, while recognising that the design is far too large for the canvas, and that the whole conception is disappointingly vague. Mr. Benoit's music divides itself easily into two parts—that which is descriptive and that which may be described—though the word can only be used in lieu of a better—as lyrical. Of the two kinds, we much prefer the second. In the first we have little melody and hardly more orchestral figuration or part-writing, effects being obtained by masses of harmony and tone-colour laid on very liberally. The whole is crude and rough. Intended to be "sensational" at any cost, it is so at the expense of the best features in musical art. But there are moments when the composer, "clothed and in his right mind," shows to far greater advantage, and proves that he has conceptions of beauty with the power to work them out. This most fully appears in Part II.; the solos of Earth, Fire, and Water being one and all of great interest and attractiveness. So, we should add, are a few of the choruses, and, altogether, the satisfactory portions of the work constitute no inconsiderable part of the whole. All the same, we doubt the good fortune of "Lucifer" in this sober, matter-of-fact country.

Mr. Barnby presided over a capital performance, in which the choral singing was conspicuous for its correctness. Madame Sherrington, whose appearance was welcomed as that of an old favourite, took the soprano solos, with Madame Patey as her associate in the contralto department. These ladies had comparatively little to do, the bulk of the work falling upon Mr. Blauwaert, a baritone, who declaimed the words of Lucifer with great effect; Mr. Henri Fontaine, who also sang exceptionally well; and an amateur, by whom the music assigned to the tenor, Mr. Robert Hensler, was taken in that gentleman's absence. Much of the music met with a favourable reception.

NOVELLO'S ORATORIO CONCERTS.

THE third series of these Concerts came to an end on the 9th ult., with a performance, in St. James's Hall, of Handel's "Saul," the first Oratorio written by the great master after he had fairly entered upon his career as a composer of "sacred dramas." To "Saul," and its successors, "Esther," "Deborah," and "Athaliah," were but a prelude, occupying no more than a subsidiary place in the thoughts of the musician-manager whose energies were then devoted to opera. Concerning the work itself we can say nothing new. Though not often heard, it is far from the least known of Handel's Oratorios, while its best and most effective numbers have been made familiar in a detached form. We refer, for example, to the choruses "How excellent thy name," "Envy, eldest born of hell," "Mourn, Israel, mourn," and "Gird on thy sword." But though these are average specimens of the composer's choral writing, the interest of "Saul" lies more in the airs and short solos by which the dialogue is carried on. In their case a performance of the entire work is necessary to appreciation, and, if on this ground alone, "Saul" should from time to time be presented. As in all Handel's Oratorios, some of the airs, written for the purpose of the moment, have lost value now, but others are singularly attractive examples of the master's skill and feeling. So much may especially be said of those in the elegiac part of the work, where Handel is more than equal to the occasion. The performance had an additional source of interest in Mr. Ebenezer Prout's revised orchestration, used for the first time, as may be remembered, when "Saul" was revived at the Birmingham Festival of 1888. We then found occasion to express thorough approval of the discreet manner in which Mr. Prout had discharged a by no means enviable duty, and now we pay him a tribute of the same character. It is difficult in such cases to adjust a proper balance between the demands of modern effect and the just claims of the composer, but Mr. Prout did this so well that his orchestration of "Saul" should stand as a model for future labours of the same kind.

The performance, ably conducted by Dr. Mackenzie, had many merits, above all that of the rendering of the choruses, to which the fine choir connected with these Concerts, capably supported by the orchestra, did much justice. Of the solo vocalists, Miss Anna Williams laboured under the disadvantage of a voice considerably out of order, but Madame Patey, who is seldom troubled in this manner, was in excellent "form," and gave the contralto solos the full advantage of her resources. In the absence of Mr. Lloyd through indisposition, the tenor airs were assigned to Mr. Piercy, who sang them at Birmingham, and acquitted himself not less well in London than in the Midland city. Mr. Watkin Mills gave a good account of the bass solos, minor parts were efficiently rendered by Mr. J. Gawthrop and Mr. R. E. Miles, and the important organ part was excellently well played by Mr. Battison Haynes.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

AN exceptionally interesting programme was arranged for the patrons of this Society at its second Concert on March 28, and again the attendance was sufficiently large to test the seating capacity of St. James's Hall. The first noteworthy feature of the evening was the enthusiastic reception accorded to Mr. F. H. Cowen, on his return to his own country after his artistic triumphs in the Antipodes. This was really a matter of duty, for, if accounts may be trusted, Mr. Cowen has sown good seed, which may in due time yield a rich harvest for musical art. His share in the present programme was not very arduous; he directed Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony in B minor, the performance of which would have been all that could be desired but for the slow tempo adopted in the Andante con moto, and four movements of Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" Music. The importance of the Concert, however, centred in other works. As a matter of course much interest was felt in Professor Villiers Stanford's new Violin Suite in D (Op. 32), which had been first submitted to the judgment of a Berlin audience a few weeks previously. The composer's idea seems to have been to reproduce the form and manner of the older Suite, the movements being entitled Overture, Allemande, Ballade, Tambourine, and Giga. But he does not wear the fetters gracefully; with the exception of the Ballade, which is an expressive and thoroughly modern piece, the music is lacking in spontaneity and moreover is by no means effectively written for the solo instrument. Herr Joachim, who had originally presented the work to the Berlin public, and more recently to a Manchester audience, found himself unable to interpret some of the awkward passages strictly in tune. A thorough legitimate success was gained by the rendering of Grieg's Concerto in A minor by Madame Backer-Grøndahl, a Norwegian pianist of remarkable powers. We learn from a somewhat effusive essay concerning her career that she has passed most of her life in comparative retirement at Christiania, refusing brilliant offers to undertake tours in Europe and in America. We can well believe that such offers have been made, for Madame Backer-Grøndahl showed herself a superb executant, the warm, pure tone, deep expression, and exquisite phrasing showing the true artist. Grieg himself conducted, and as on a former occasion had the orchestra under such perfect control that the performance was exceptionally fine, and presented the work in quite a novel light. Our record of the Concert would not be complete without mentioning that Mlle. Antoinette Trebelli sang airs by Mozart and Rossini in such a manner as to secure the entire satisfaction of the audience.

As Grieg was the hero of the first and second Concerts, so was Tschaiakowsky of the third, which took place on the 11th ult. For some inexplicable reason, the Russian composer, when he appears among us, refuses to be heard in any of his numerous works of importance which have not yet been introduced to the notice of English musicians. Among them are four Symphonies, and a fifth in E minor was announced in the Philharmonic prospectus. But in place thereof his Suite in D (Op. 43) was substituted, this work being only representative of Tschaiakowsky in so far as its themes are full of Slavonic character, the development being of the slightest. As it now stands it consists of six movements, but on the present occasion a Scherzo was omitted. Musicians will probably regard the Intermezzo in D minor as the best movement, but the audience showed its preference for a "Marche Miniature," on account of its odd scoring for the highest instruments of the orchestra, including triangle and glockenspiel. Of course the piece can only be regarded as a musical joke, but as such it is clever. The Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor (Op. 23) was played by Mr. Dannreuther, at the Crystal Palace, thirteen years ago, and excited favourable anticipations concerning the composer, which have not since been realised. There may be much that is wild and extravagant in the details of the work, but the themes are not only original, but noble and expressive, enforcing the attention of the hearer by their unconventionality and true Russian character. The executant, M. Sapellnikoff, exhibited prodigious powers of execution, and if he did not charm the audience he astonished them. He has now left this country, but he may return later in the season, and we shall be glad to have proof that he is something more than a mere performer of sensational feats at the keyboard. Mr. F. H. Cowen, who, as at the previous Concert, was kept somewhat in the background, conducted a fine performance of Mozart's Symphony in E flat, and Miss Marguerite Hall and Mr. W. H. Brereton, in their respective solos, showed how rapidly they are advancing to the front rank as vocalists.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

THE annual appearance of Herr Joachim is always anticipated with much interest by the frequenters of these Concerts, and, as a matter of course, there was a large attendance on Saturday, March 30. There is, however, no occasion to speak at length as to what was done. For example, it would be mere folly to criticise the great violinist's rendering of his own Concerto in the Hungarian style, as the merits of the work and his manner of performance are well known to musicians. Later in the programme he played two movements from Bach's Suite in E and had to comply with an encore. Herr Joachim was also represented by his dramatic and impassioned scena "Marfa," from Schiller's tragedy "Demetrius," which Miss Lena Little interpreted with much feeling and excellent taste. Concerning the orchestral works, which consisted of Mendelssohn's "Hebrides" Overture, Beethoven's "Leonora," No. 3, and Schumann's Symphony in D minor, it is only necessary to record that perfect justice was done to them by Mr. Manns's magnificent orchestra, which was in its finest form throughout the afternoon.

Berlioz's "Faust" occupied the programme on the 6th ult. When the Berlioz fever, which raged fiercely for a time a few years ago, had died away, it was found that his "Faust" had alone made a permanent impression on the mind of the public, and the work is now in the repertory of all the leading choral societies throughout the kingdom. Of course it would be easy to point out the glaring absurdities of the French composer's version of Goethe's poem, and the incongruous mixture of German solidity and French glitter in the music. But argument in a matter of this kind would be wasted; everybody is interested in the "Faust" legend, and Berlioz has unquestionably illustrated it with music so full of brilliancy and colour and, where necessary, pathos, that all who object to his treatment are compelled to acknowledge the glamour of his genius. There were some excellent points in the performance now under consideration. The orchestra was of course irreproachable, and the choir showed more than average merit both as regards power and refinement. Madame Valleria was announced to take the part of Marguerite, but found herself unable to sing, and Mrs. Hutchinson kindly took her place at very short notice. Criticism under such circumstances would in any case be unfair, but, as a matter of fact, Mrs. Hutchinson gave a large amount of satisfaction by her careful and artistic rendering of the music. Mr. Lloyd's performance of the somewhat unthankful part of Faust was as good as usual. Mr. W. H. Brereton was a capital Mephistopheles, pronouncing his words clearly and imparting the necessary sardonic spirit to the music. Mr. R. Hilton was efficient as Brander.

The last of the regular series of Concerts took place on the following Saturday, the 13th ult. The programme might be said to be divided into two sections—a selection of English music and Schubert's Symphony in C (No. 9). The former consisted of Sterndale Bennett's Overture "The Naiads," performed in commemoration of the anniversary of the composer's birthday; Mr. T. Wingham's charming Andante espressivo, from his Suite in E flat, first performed at the Philharmonic Concerts; and a Pianoforte Concerto in C minor, by Mr. J. C. Ames, with whose name we were unacquainted until this occasion. According to the programme, Mr. Ames commenced his musical studies at Stuttgart in 1873, and completed them at the Dresden Conservatorium. He has produced nearly a dozen works, chiefly instrumental, and as the present Concerto is his Op. 8, it must be considered to represent his talent in its more mature stage. In form the work resembles Spohr's Dramatic Concerto—that is to say, it commences with a lengthy recitative leading to an Andante in A flat. This comes to a regular close, and the work ends with a fully developed Finale in C major. The most pleasing portion of the Concerto is the Andante, which is expressive and melodious; but there is some musicianlike writing in the last movement, marred to some extent by boisterous scoring. At the mpst, Mr. Ames can at the present only be regarded as a clever student. Whether he is ever likely to develop higher powers cannot be said from the evidence before us. Mr. Oscar Beringer performed the work in his best manner, and it was cordially received. Miss Macintyre, the vocalist in this Concert, showed her versatility by rendering airs of Boito, Gounod, and Sullivan, in an equally praiseworthy manner.

It now only remains to speak of the extra Concert on Easter Eve, given for the benefit of Mr. Manns, which proved one of the most important and interesting of the season. No one would have a reasonable ground of complaint if on such an occasion Mr. Manns were to form the programme entirely of familiar and popular works with the view of ensuring a large audience; but his artistic instincts compel him to take higher ground, and the knowledge that a Symphony by an English composer was waiting for a hearing afforded him a chance of adding to the many obligations under which he has placed the musical public. The composer, Mr. Frederic Cliffe, has hitherto gained reputation only as a successful student at the National Training School of Music, and later as a professor of the pianoforte at the Royal College of Music. He is a native of Yorkshire, and it was intended to introduce his Symphony at the next Leeds Festival, but the Committee eventually rejected the work, and it is difficult to say when it would have appeared in a Concert programme but for the timely intervention of Mr. Manns. The music conveys to us its own tale, and that in the most graphic way. Mr. Cliffe shows an amount of resource, a command of the legitimate means of producing effect, and a knowledge of the orchestra which are simply astonishing, considering that his Symphony in C minor is his Op. 1. Did space permit, we might offer a minute description of the music in proof of our opinion that it is one of the most remarkable works of its class produced for many years. Enough, however, for the present, that the breadth and nobility, as well as the picturesque orchestration of the first movement, the passionate expression of the Ballade, and the splendid climax, when a theme from the Ballade returns in the most grandiose manner, roused the enthusiasm of the audience to an unusual degree, and Mr. Cliffe was twice called to the platform to receive the congratulations of those present, including the orchestra and the conductor. The Symphony was the only part of the programme on which it is necessary to dwell. Herr Stavenhagen played Liszt's Concerto in E flat in his most brilliant manner, the orchestra was heard to the fullest advantage in the "Midsummer Night's Dream" and "Tannhäuser" Overtures, and Madame Nordica, Mdle. Tremelli, and Mr. Brereton earned much applause in their vocal selections, although the artist first-named cannot be commended for introducing an adaptation of Chopin's Nocturne in E flat.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

A SUCCESSION of crowded audiences, not only on Saturdays, but on Mondays, has brought the thirty-first season of Mr. Arthur Chappell's undertaking to a highly successful termination. On Saturday afternoon, March 30, Grieg appeared for the last time, the result being of course that many hundreds of people could not gain admission. The programme was in every respect interesting, the two works by the Scandinavian composer being heard for the first time. The more important of these was the Sonata in C minor, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 45), which had been heard a few days previously at Grieg's Recital. It improves greatly on acquaintance, and we must now pronounce it superior to its companions in F and G minor. The first movement especially gained on a second hearing, and the second and third are gems of beauty and poetic fancy. No lovelier melody ever came from the brain of a gifted composer than the theme of the Allegretto in E. In the interpretation Grieg was assisted by Madame Néruda, and with such artists it is needless to add that the work was heard to the fullest advantage, or that it was received with enthusiasm. Grieg's pianoforte solos were his "Lyric Pieces" (Op. 43), a set of six little sketches with fanciful titles after the manner of Schumann. Though not of any very great value they are pleasing and characteristic of the composer, perhaps the best being No. 5, "Poème Erotique." Madame Grieg sang five of her husband's songs with her customary charm. It will be welcome news to the frequenters of these Concerts that the Norwegian composer is delighted with his reception in this country, and will repeat his visit next season. This highly attractive Concert opened with Dvořák's beautiful Quartet in E flat (Op. 51), which had already been heard this season, and closed with Schubert's Allegro assai in C minor, which the composer wrote in 1820 as the first movement of a Quartet. At the forty-first bar of the next movement Schubert stopped, as he did at the tenth bar of the Scherzo in the Symphony in B minor, and for a similar inexplicable reason. But an air of mystery still hangs over a great deal of Schubert's art work, notwithstanding the efforts of earnest minds to clear it away.

The programme of Monday, the 1st ult., was also exceptionally attractive, for Dr. Joachim and Madame Néruda were announced to repeat their superb performance of Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins, which had given so much pleasure a few weeks previously. Once more the audience refused to be satisfied until an encore was granted, the choice this time falling on the vigorous Finale. Perhaps with greater reason Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in E minor (Op. 35, No. 1) was regarded as insufficient, and Miss Fanny Davies responded by playing one of the "Lieder ohne Worte." The programme opened and closed with Beethoven, the works being the Quartet in B flat (Op. 18, No. 6) and the Trio in E flat (Op. 70, No. 2). The vocalist was Mr. Max Heinrich, who gave an expressive and refined rendering of Schubert's fine song "Liebesbotschaft," gaining two recalls.

A quiet programme was offered on the following Saturday, but St. James's Hall was quite as full as usual. Of Beethoven's Quartet in F (Op. 59), No. 1 of the Rasoumowsky set, there is nothing to say, nor indeed of Brahms's Trio in C minor (Op. 101), which has now been heard several times. Dr. Joachim played the Romance from his Hungarian Concerto and Spohr's Scherzo in D, No. 2 of the twelve "Salon Duettings," and Miss Fanny Davies contented herself with two of Mendelssohn's "Lieder ohne Worte" and the Caprice in E minor (Op. 16, No. 3). Of course she was asked for more, but she merely repeated the Caprice. Miss Florence Hoskins displayed an excellent mezzo-soprano voice in Gluck's "Che farò" and songs by Schumann and Wagner.

At the last Monday Concert but one Mr. Chappell put forward a very fine scheme, including two of Beethoven's greatest masterpieces. The Quartet in B flat (Op. 130) is unique in its way, and it possesses a melancholy interest for musicians, the Finale being absolutely the last piece penned by the composer. It is remarkable as possessing six movements, and also for the fact that, with the exception of the first movement, the music is as easy to follow and as clear in construction as any of the works in the second manner. This remark applies with special force to the final section, a particularly bright and humorous movement in extraordinary contrast to the gigantic fugue which it replaced. The performance was one of the finest examples of quartet playing in our experience. The quiet, refined style of Madame Frickenhaus in the Sonata Appassionata is preferable to the violence and exaggerations in which some pianists of the modern school indulge. Dr. Joachim gave his masterly interpretation of Bach's Chaconne, and the Concert ended with Mozart's familiar Trio in E (No. 6). Mdlle. Janson pleased the audience greatly by her excellent rendering of Schubert's "Der Tod und das Mädchen," and a song by Ivar Hallström, presumably a Swedish composer.

There is nothing more attractive to Mr. Chappell's patrons than a Beethoven programme, and the quartet of masterpieces announced for the final Saturday Concert drew an enormous gathering. The performance, however, requires little more than formal record, for it would be superfluous to say anything concerning such works as the Quintet in C (Op. 29), the "Moonlight" and "Kreutzer" Sonatas, and the Violin Romance in F (Op. 50), and also of the manner in which these works were interpreted by Dr. Joachim, Mdlle. Janotha, and their fellow artists. For an encore the pianist substituted Chopin's Marche Funèbre, probably in reference to the funeral of the late Duchess of Cambridge, which took place on the same day. Mr. Hirwen Jones displayed his excellent tenor voice to advantage in airs by Bennett and Gounod, though why he should have sung the Serenade from "Le Médecin malgré lui" in Italian it is difficult to say.

We have now only to speak of the closing scene, which will always be regarded as one of the most memorable in the history of these Concerts. The programme was, as usual, designed to afford opportunity for as many as possible of the leading artists who have taken part in the season to appear for the last time in their individual capacity. Thus Signor Piatti was heard in Veracini's Largo and Allegro for violoncello, Miss Fanny Davies played Chopin's Barcarolle in F sharp (Op. 60) in her best manner, and Dr. Joachim gave three of Brahms's Hungarian Dances, being accompanied by Mdlle. Janotha. Haydn's Quartet in B flat (Op. 76, No. 4) headed the programme, and Schumann's popular Quintet in E flat (Op. 44), with Miss Zimmermann as the pianist, brought the performance to a most effective close. Yet another favourite—Miss Liza Lehmann—contributed four songs, and fairly shared in the honours distributed with an unsparing hand by the audience.

At the conclusion of the Concert, a portion of the audience adjourned to the lower hall to witness the presentation of a Stradivarius violin to Dr. Joachim, in commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of his first appearance in public. Sir Frederick Leighton, P.R.A., made the presentation on behalf of the subscribers, and around him on the platform were Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, Dr. Hubert Parry, Mr. Alma Tadema, R.A., and some of the artists who had taken part in the Concert. In acknowledging the gift of his English friends, Dr. Joachim referred to the great sympathy he had always met with in this country, both from eminent musicians and the public, and concluded by saying that the motto always in his mind was "Uphold the dignity of art." It should be added that the violin is a magnificent specimen, and had been chosen by Dr. Joachim himself on account of its colour, a deep red, as he had already two Strads, one yellow and the other brown. The fiddle was accompanied by a splendid bow by Tourte, formerly in the possession of Kiesewetter.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

At the Students' Concert in St. James's Hall, on the 17th ult., there were several features of interest, among them the performance, by Mr. Gilbert R. Betjemann (son of the well-known violinist), of the first movement in Beethoven's last Concerto (E flat) for pianoforte and orchestra. The young artist made a favourable impression, although his style is not that which now-a-days commands the approval of the "many-headed." Mr. Betjemann plays in what, some years ago, was the approved fashion, and still remains the classic, if not the popular, model. He is a promising musician, and will do good service in time to come. A youthful violinist, Mr. Gerald Walenn, pupil of Mr. Sainton, made a great success in two movements from Wieniawski's D minor Concerto. This student has, to all appearance, a bright future before him. Executive skill and artistic feeling were conspicuous in the course of his performance, which excited marked attention and elicited great applause. We must speak very favourably of another pianist, Miss Dora Matthey, whose rendering of a movement from Rubinstein's Pianoforte Concerto in D minor had obvious merits. There were other noteworthy performances, but we dwell only upon an Andante for organ, harps, and strings, the work of a student, Mr. T. Ward, who presided at the "king of instruments." The composer of this work has ability, but its exercise needs more supervision. His Andante is too obviously the work of a tyro, and misses even the effects which, with such means, are easily produced. Dr. Mackenzie conducted the Concert, to which a good orchestral lent attraction.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

THE excellent work carried on by this Institution was well exemplified at the Orchestral Concert, held under the direction of Professor Villiers Stanford, at Alexandra House, on the 4th ult. The programme only contained half-a-dozen pieces, but each one of them gave great satisfaction in its way. The purely orchestral works were Bizet's charming Suite "L'Arlésienne" and Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger." Messrs. Jasper Sutcliffe and W. H. Squire, who were announced to play Brahms's Double Concerto for violin and violoncello, are now admirable performers, and they showed that the talents with which nature has endowed them have been subjected to excellent training. Mention should also be made of a highly creditable and well balanced rendering of the Septet from Goetz's "Taming of the Shrew," which, it is understood, is to be the subject of the next operatic performance in connection with the Royal College. That which rendered the Concert specially interesting, however, was the performance of a new Pianoforte Concerto in G minor, by Mr. Sidney P. Waddington, one of the College scholars. Excellent as to form and construction, the work is also marked by a certain freshness of manner, and the writing generally resembles that of an experienced musician rather than of one who is still a student. This is especially so in the first movement, which, on the whole, is the best of the three. It is brilliantly written for the solo instrument, which was exceedingly well played by Miss Polyxena Fletcher. The composer was twice called to acknowledge the enthusiastic applause of the crowded audience.

BOROUGH OF HACKNEY CHORAL ASSOCIATION.

ENTERPRISING as this Society has shown itself on many occasions, it never evinced a stronger disposition to make light of difficulties than when it undertook to perform Brahms's German Requiem. This masterpiece, composed by Brahms in memory of a beloved relative, was first introduced in this country by the Philharmonic Society about fifteen years ago, and a little later it was performed by the Bach Choir. Since then it has suffered complete neglect by metropolitan choral societies, and this notwithstanding the beauty, majesty, and pathos of the music, qualities which place it on a level with the finest choral works ever written in commemoration of the dead. But the explanation of this seemingly strange neglect is very simple: like other German composers, Brahms pays scant heed to the capabilities of the human voice, and the incessant strain upon the upper register, especially in the soprano and tenor parts, places the Requiem at a great disadvantage, and, indeed, makes its general acceptance out of the question. The Hackney chorists struggled bravely with their cruel duties, and the sopranos deserve especial praise for their courage in returning to the attack when apparently exhausted. But the conflict was almost painful at times, metropolitan singers not possessing the stamina and lung power of their brethren in the north. The solo parts were creditably rendered by Madame Eleanor Farnol and Mr. W. G. Forington, and Mr. Prout conducted the performance with even more than his usual ability. A selection from Schubert's "Rosamunde" music formed the second part.

MR. HARVEY LÖHR'S ANNUAL CONCERT.

AN interesting batch of novelties was brought forward by Mr. Harvey Löhr at his eighth Annual Concert, given in Prince's Hall on Thursday evening, the 4th ult. But a programme consisting wholly of new or unfamiliar works is a somewhat questionable enterprise; it is apt to exercise too lengthy a tension upon the receptive faculties of the listener; the strain is continuous, and sooner or later one's powers of accurate discrimination give way under it. We do not purpose, therefore, to enter for the present into detailed criticism concerning the various parts of Mr. Löhr's scheme. The Quartet in E, by Dvorák (Op. 80), will be repeated shortly at Sir Charles Hallé's Chamber Concerts, and then a more reliable idea can be formed of its merits. The Pianoforte Trio in C minor (Op. 27), by Eduard Schütt, seems to be a well-designed, melodious work, and might be heard again with pleasure. Mr. Harvey Löhr's own Pianoforte Quartet in E minor (Op. 15), which is published by Breitkopf and Härtel, consists of the four usual movements, all of them remarkably clear in structure and development, and characterised by considerable melodic charm. This effective work was certainly not the least successful of the evening's novelties. Mr. Löhr played as solos some pieces of his own, and a set of twelve "Silhouettes" (Op. 8), by Dvorák, one of the most graceful and original of the Bohemian composer's early pianoforte works, yet curiously enough now given for the first time publicly at a London concert. The string players who assisted were Messrs. Szczepanowski, S. D. Grimson, W. Richardson, and W. E. Whitehouse.

"THE REDEMPTION" AT THE PEOPLE'S PALACE.

THE executive of that youthful but admirable institution, the Popular Musical Union, appear to have regarded in the light of an experiment their first performance at the People's Palace of Gounod's "Redemption." Their doubts, however, were scarcely warranted by the result of endeavours in the immediate past to popularise the sacred masterpieces among the inhabitants of the Mile End district. Mr. Orton Bradley, the Musical Director of the People's Palace, finds himself in the midst of a genuine music-loving population.

The higher the class of choral work he puts before them, the more hearty their response. Among other amateur bodies that have come East at his call, none has laboured to better purpose than the Popular Musical Union, which we believe had previously given five choral performances here during the winter, the attendance in each instance being extremely gratifying. Hence the encouragement to try "The Redemption" at the last of the series on the 6th ult. Whatever fear there may have been that Gounod's trilogy would prove above the heads of the Mile Enders was speedily set at rest. To begin with, no fewer than 5,000 of them—a best on record at these Concerts—paid their modest threepence apiece at the turnstiles and crammed to repletion the superb hall which it is their proud boast to possess. The aspect of this vast gathering, larger by far than any London concert-room could hold—unless we count the Albert Hall or the Centre Transept of the Crystal Palace—was strangely impressive. It was something more than an orderly, respectable crowd; it was an intelligent, an interested assemblage, thoroughly understanding and profoundly moved by the noble strains wedded by Gounod to the story each and all knew so well. Happily the words of the Oratorio were, by permission, printed in full in the programme (a weekly periodical called The Palace Journal), costing no more than a penny, and thus enabled everyone to follow the progress of this most sublime and pathetic of tragedies. Had it been the interior of a cathedral the attitude of those present could hardly have been more reverent or more quietly indicative of pure and complete appreciation. There was applause, of course, but it was bestowed with singular discrimination and with no noisy demonstrativeness, even when Miss Robertson was called upon to repeat her fervent delivery of the air "From Thy love as a Father." In short, the venture was from every point of view an unalloyed success and should certainly act as an incentive to renewed efforts in the same direction, until there remains no work in the active oratorio repertory that is unfamiliar to these humble but earnest amateurs. Concerning the performance we have little space left to speak. The voluntary workers in Mr. W. Henry Thomas's choir and orchestra manifested an entire confidence in their able leader and acquitted themselves very well indeed, the choruses especially being given with a satisfying volume of tone and no lack of spirit. The solos were sung by Miss Robertson, Miss Baily, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Kent Sutton (who replaced Mr. Charles Chilly), Mr. Henry Pope, and Mr. Bertram H. Latter, a very promising young baritone.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

MR. E. F. JACQUES read a paper, on the 1st ult., on "The Laws of Progress in Music," in which he argued that the laws of evolution were applicable to the art. He dwelt also upon the nature of the impulses which lead to the production of a work of art, and upon the difference between composers and their public in viewing music as an emotional language. It was by no means a universal language, for its idiom required to be studied. Its formal elements owed their origin and development to man's "decorative instincts." The evolution of fine art was "a psychological process dependent upon social conditions," and the study of its progress required serious scientific preparation. While acknowledging the value of the labours of certain writers, Mr. Jacques was of opinion that the right method had not yet been adopted. We now wanted a history of music which might be truly spoken of as "Philosophy teaching by examples." A discussion followed the reading of the paper.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

PIANOFORTE Recitals were given by Mr. Bernhard Stavenhagen at St. James's Hall, on the afternoon of Friday, March 29, and Monday, the 8th ult. He appeared before large audiences, and in each instance his playing tended decidedly to enhance the high opinion already formed of his gifts. As an interpreter of Liszt it must be considered that Mr. Stavenhagen has no rival. He seems to have imbibed not only the actual characteristics of his master's style, but the very spirit and essence of his meaning. Such a performance of the formidable Sonata in B minor as was given at the first of the above Recitals had never before, in the estimation of competent judges, been heard in this country. It was a magnificent display of technique, and something besides—that something enabling many to see the work in an almost new light. Remarkably fine, too, was Mr. Stavenhagen's execution of a further selection from his teacher's works, comprising the paraphrase on Chopin's "Chant Polonais," the Paganini Studies in E major and G sharp minor, and an unprinted version of the Rhapsody, No. 13. To say that this singularly gifted pianist attained a similar height of perfection in music other than Liszt's would be to say too much; and yet in the A flat Sonata of Beethoven (Op. 110) he came near indeed to the achievement of a faultless reading. Intellectuality, feeling, refinement, grace, were all there. It was only when exuberant energy overmastered the player's sense of symmetry that certain passages were marred by a too demonstrative style—notably a tendency to exaggerate fortissimos. Here, unquestionably, lies Mr. Stavenhagen's chief, if not his only, serious failing. Happily it is one that time and careful self-watching will most likely eradicate in an artist who has at command such delicate gradations of tone and such a marvellously sensitive touch—qualities made evident at the same Recital with irresistible effect in Schumann's Papillons (Op. 2) and Haydn's Variations in F minor. The second programme was laid out in three divisions, the first containing two Beethoven Sonatas (Op. 90 and Op. 27, No. 2), and the second and third Chopin and Liszt selections respectively. On the whole, the rendering of the Sonatas did not satisfy in the same degree as that of the later work mentioned above. Mr. Stavenhagen's prevailing fault came out strongly in the opening movement of the E minor and the final section of the "Moonlight," the rest in either case being beautifully played. His interpretation of the Chopin pieces left little room for criticism, but we cannot accept, without an expression of doubt, the statement in the programme that the Polonaise-Fantaisie in A flat major (Op. 61) was now performed for the first time. It may have been, of course; but who shall make bold to say so with absolute certainty, knowing the myriads of Concerts for which Chopin's store of pianoforte work has been ransacked since the Polonaise-Fantaisie was published in 1846? Writing of this composition in his admirable biography of Chopin, Mr. Frederick Niecks exclaims: "What an unspeakable, unfathomable wretchedness reveals itself in these sounds! We gaze on a boundless desolation. These lamentations and cries of despair rend our heart, these strange, troubled wanderings from thought to thought fill us with intensest pity. There are thoughts of sweet resignation, but the absence of hope makes them, perhaps, the saddest of all. The martial strains, the bold challenges, the shouts of triumph, which we heard so often in the composer's polonaises, are silenced." Liszt, too, has declared that the Polonaise-Fantaisie contains "thoughts that in beauty and grandeur equal—I would almost say surpass—anything Chopin has written." No wonder, therefore, that Mr. Stavenhagen was eager to play it to us; but he must not be sure he was the first who ever did so.

After a lengthy absence Mr. Frederick Lamond made his reentrée before a metropolitan audience, on the 10th ult., at the first of two Recitals given in St. James's Hall. The young Scotch pianist, who, by the way, is only just out of his "teens," was not particularly favoured by the weather on this occasion. A dense black fog had barely dispersed when the Recital began, and the attendance in consequence was extremely meagre. Under these dispiriting conditions Mr. Lamond acquitted himself extraordinarily well. He manifested an all-round improvement that took connoisseurs by surprise. Beginning with Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor, as transcribed by Tausig, he displayed an even more remarkable purity and accuracy of mécanisme than when he came to us fresh from the hands of Liszt three years ago. It was, however, in the Beethoven Sonata in A flat (Op. 110) that Mr. Lamond showed with most striking results what experience and study had done to develop a gifted musical organisation. He gave a thoroughly dignified, clear, intellectual reading of the work. The performance of the opening movement was instinct with lofty expression, that of the Adagio with deep feeling; while the Fugue was expounded with unerring precision and clearness, the applause which greeted him at its close being richly merited. In his second group of pieces Mr. Lamond included Brahms's Rhapsody (Op. 79, No. 2), which he gave with plenty of vigour, and a Ballade and Nocturne by Chopin and Liszt's "Soirée de Vienne," rendered with a charming touch and rare rhythmical grace; also an unpublished version of the latter's "Liebestraume," a gem delightfully played. On the other hand, the pianist was less successful in his rendering of Schubert's "Wanderer" Fantaisie (Op. 15)—it had its good points, but there were moments of exaggeration, if not positive coarseness. He was again heard to perfect advantage in a light Capriccio and difficult Etude of his own composition, and finished up an interesting afternoon with a Valse Impromptu by Liszt and Fantaisie, "Halka," by Tausig.

There was a much larger muster of amateurs at the second Recital, on the 17th ult., when Mr. Lamond challenged criticism with two chamber works of important dimensions, both from his own pen. Let us say at once that we cannot place Frederick Lamond, the pianist, and Frederick Lamond, the composer, upon one and the same pedestal. That he strives in each domain to attain a lofty ideal may with truth be admitted; but, so far, it has only been given to the executant to achieve success in one. The compositions now heard—a Pianoforte Trio in B minor (Op. 2) and a Sonata in D for pianoforte and violoncello—were welcome, nevertheless, for the promise which they revealed, and not least of all because their faults were, in a great measure, the faults of youth and immaturity. What is here vague, diffuse, and laboured in Mr. Lamond's music will doubtless disappear when his style becomes more individual and decided, especially when he has cultivated a clear symmetrical form as assiduously as did the masters whom he has taken for his models. At any rate, what we have listened to justifies our encouraging the young Scotchman to persevere. Portions of his Trio are very well put together indeed, notably the opening Allegro and the Andante, and though too lovingly written for his own instrument throughout, there is in this work an evidence of rhythmical feeling and rugged vigour that ought not to be overlooked. Mr. Lamond had the assistance of Messrs. Straus and Piatti in the interpretation of the Trio, and of the famous violoncellist in the Sonata. It is needless, therefore, to add that entire justice was done to both works. As regards Mr. Lamond's solos, his rendering of Chopin's Barcarolle was rather wanting in poetic charm, albeit this quality sufficiently pervaded his phrasing of the same composer's Nocturne in D flat. His delicate touch enabled him to give with good effect Henselt's Romance and Study, "Si oiseau j'étais," and in response to continued applause he repeated the latter section. Among his concluding group of pieces the Recital-giver played two "Clavierstücke," Nos. 6 and 7, from his Opus 1.

Rarely have the abilities of that sterling artist, Miss Agnes Zimmermann, shone in a stronger light than they did at the Recital given by her at Prince's Hall, on the 4th ult. She executed her well-chosen programme in a manner that held her hearers in thrall from the first note to the last. To dwell minutely on the qualities which enabled her to do this would be superfluous. Rather let us seize the opportunity to point out the steady advance made by Miss Zimmermann in recent years as an exponent of the romantic school of pianoforte music—a school for which she always entertained a predilection, but whereof she did not always embody the traditions with such ripe and adequate fulness. For example, we can now speak of her performance of Schumann's Sonata in G minor as of an achievement leaving nothing whatever to be desired. It reveals not only technical resource and intellectual power, but the warmth and fire and impassioned sentiment of an artist whose emotions are swayed by the current of intense feeling pervading her theme. Hence the unalloyed pleasure afforded by Miss Zimmermann's playing in this Sonata on the occasion under notice. In another way her rendering of the same composer's difficult Toccata was equally satisfying; it was a triumph of mechanical skill and well-judged effect. The scheme also included Bach's Fugue in A minor and Gigue in A flat, Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in E minor, in addition to short pieces by Scarlatti, Schubert, Moszkowski, and Hubert Parry, concerning the execution of which we need do no more than speak in terms of general and emphatic praise. Mention may, however, be made of the singular charm infused by the pianist into Chopin's seldom heard Nocturne in E minor (Op. 72), the earliest and perhaps the weakest of his compositions in that form. Miss Zimmermann was rewarded with frequent and hearty applause by a numerous audience.

Miss Dora Bright completed her well-arranged series of Pianoforte Recitals at Prince's Hall, on March 27. The programme of this, as well as the preceding date, was noteworthy not only on account of its general interest, but of the prominence given to English music in particular. It comprised Nos. 4 and 5 of the Six Romances by the late Sir G. A. Macfarren; the bright "Irlandaise" from Mr. Francesco Berger's Pianoforte Suite; a Berceuse by Mr. G. J. Bennett; and the three charming Highland Pieces by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, entitled "On the hillside," "On the loch," and "On the heather." The Recital-giver was also heard in two characteristic pieces by her friend Miss Ethel Boyce, who assisted her in the repetition of her clever Variations for two pianofortes on an original theme by G. A. Macfarren. Miss Bright played the last four of the set of new Studies by her master, Mr. Walter Macfarren, who came forward to share with her a hearty recall at the close. She also gave a highly satisfactory rendering of Beethoven's Sonata in D minor (Op. 31, No. 2) and Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in E minor. Miss Eleanor Rees sang.

SIR FREDERICK ARTHUR GORE OUSELEY.

THE Rev. Sir Frederick Arthur Gore Ouseley died, after a sudden and painful attack of heart disease, at Hereford, on the 6th ult. The news was received everywhere with profound sorrow by those who enjoyed the privilege of his friendship as well as by those who knew him only by name. He was a distinguished musician and a learned and accurate scholar, and the brilliancy of his accomplishments was only equalled by the amiability of his character and the benevolence of his disposition. His place in the world, as marked by the influence he possessed, will never be wholly filled; his works, however, will serve to keep his memory green, and the recollection of his many good actions will survive in the hearts of those who are acquainted with them. The record of his life is one of unostentatious goodness and unobtrusive earnestness in the performance of appointed labour. He was the only son of the Right Hon. Sir Gore Ouseley, the eminent Oriental scholar, who was successively Ambassador and Minister Plenipotentiary to Persia and St. Petersburg, by his marriage with Harriet Georgina, daughter of Mr. John Whitelocke. He was born in London in August, 1825, consequently he was in the sixty-fourth year of his age at the time of his death. He was called Frederick after the Duke of York, and Arthur after the Duke of Wellington, his godfathers. He displayed unusual talent in music at an early age. His earliest effort at composition, made when he was five years old, was a work descriptive of his own sensations on recovery from a severe illness. A waltz, written by him when he was seven, was printed in the "Harmonicon," and at eight he produced an opera, "L'isola disabitata." Many stories have been told of his extraordinary musical powers displayed in early infancy; these, however, derive their chief point from the ability of his later years. He was educated privately, and in 1843 entered Christ Church, Oxford, as a gentleman commoner. His father died in 1844, and he succeeded to the baronetcy. He took his B.A. degree in 1846, his M.A. in 1849—in which year he was ordained deacon by the Bishop of London and became curate of St. Barnabas, Pimlico; he took the degree of Mus. Bac. in 1850, and that of Mus. Doc. in 1854, the Oratorio "St. Polycarp" being the exercise for the latter purpose. He had conceived the idea of founding a College for the education of boys when he left his curacy in 1850, and carried it into operation first at Langley, near Slough. His scheme was further developed at Tenbury, where he erected a beautiful church and college, dedicated to St. Michael and All Angels, upon a portion of his property. The work carried on at St. Michael's cannot be too highly estimated. The College is not, as is often erroneously stated, one devoted solely to the purposes of music. The boys are trained for the Universities and other public careers, and there is a foundation for the maintenance of a daily choral service of the highest Cathedral pattern, so that, in the course of training, music is a prominent but not an indispensable feature.

In the formation of this design as a permanent educational institution, Sir Frederick spent the greater part of his fortune, and it will stand as a monument of his beneficence and self-sacrifice. Attached to the College is the magnificent library, rich in Oriental, theological, and topographical works formerly belonging to his father, and augmented by many valuable additions by himself. In the private rooms he occupied as Warden of the College is the choice musical library, which will also now probably become the property of the institution. In the collection of these precious volumes Sir Frederick took great pride. The library includes a large number of books from the Old Palais Royal Collection, with the Royal Arms of France stamped upon the sides, consisting of operas, vaudevilles, &c., by Lully, Colasse, Destouches, Lalande, Campra, Rousseau, and many other composers of whose works the names only survive. There is also a large collection of Italian sacred music of the Palestrina period, from the library of the late Abbé Santini, of Rome; and a fine copy of "The Messiah," partly in the writing of Handel, partly in that of his amanuensis, J. C. Smith. This, which is known as the Dublin MS., was used by Handel for the first performance of the work in Dublin, and contains a number of annotations in his handwriting. There is among the autographs a large collection of vocal and instrumental pieces in the handwriting of Dr. Crotch, a full score of a Symphony by Spohr, and autographs of Orlando di Lasso, Benevoli, Blow, Croft, Buononcini, Travers, Boyce, Arnold, Mozart, Paganini, Mendelssohn, and others. The library is also rich in rare treatises, among which is the earliest and rarest "Gaffurius," published at Naples in 1480, with all the later editions. A complete copy, and, perhaps, the only one in England, of Esclava's "Lira Sacro-Hispana," a printed collection of sacred music by Spanish writers, together with a number of full scores of modern works are among the treasures of the musical library.

His own contributions to musical art were many. He published in 1853 a volume of his own services and anthems, and this was followed by a collection of services by English writers. His "Special Anthems for certain Seasons and Festivals of the Church" included the first works of many Church writers who have since become famous. His Oratorio "St. Polycarp" was published in 1854, when he took his degree as Doctor of Music. He also published, in conjunction with Dr. E. G. Monk, late of York, the "Anglican Psalter and Chants," and later, by subscription, a collection of the hitherto unpublished works of Orlando Gibbons. His compositions for the organ, upon which he was a remarkable executant, comprise three sets, one of six, one of seven, and one of eighteen preludes and fugues, besides two sonatas, three andantes, and six preludes. He also published a second Oratorio, "Hagar," written for the Hereford Festival, a set of six songs, words by the Rev. R. Wilton, and he was the composer of a large number of anthems, some with orchestral accompaniments, and many glees, madrigals, and part-songs still unpublished. His labours as Professor of Music at the University of Oxford have been said to be less eventful than they might have been, considering the extent of his official and personal influence. It should be remembered, however, that when he succeeded to the chair of music in 1855, on the death of Sir Henry Bishop, he had many prejudices to fight against. His own Dean (Dr. Gaisford) told him that it was unbecoming for a man in his position to present himself for examination in music in the University. His acceptance of the Professorship removed this contumely, and raised the standard of the degrees. He also strove by adding literary qualifications to the subjects for examination in music to make the degrees proportionately equal in dignity to the other grades of the University, so that at the time of his death some of the best and most learned musicians of the time held Oxford musical degrees. The power of granting degrees honoris causa possessed by the University, was revived in his days, and would doubtless have been exercised to a still greater extent had he possessed all the power to nominate the recipients which he was supposed to possess by the outside world. As a musician he was endowed with extraordinary powers. His musical memory was astonishing. His skill in extempore playing upon the organ and piano-forte was unequalled. His facility and ingenuity in dealing with suggested or improvised themes was especially remarkable. His talents as a musician, great as they were in composition, found their best and most congenial expression in his impromptu performances. His writings seem to have been dictated by a conscientious following of a plan laid down in early life and to have been for the most part more indicative of scholarship than poetic feeling. That he was not deficient in this latter quality was well known to those who enjoyed the privilege of his acquaintance. He could tell a story with rare recognition of its point, and he was always ready to offer cordial and sympathetic appreciation of the like talent in others. His tastes were simple, his love for literature deep and wide, and simple and unaffected piety was one of his chief characteristics. Nothing could better show this than the fact that he devoted the best energies of his life and the greater part of his fortune to the foundation and maintenance of St. Michael's College. His hospitality was boundless. All who had any interest in music or education were welcome under his roof. There, within the peaceful walls of the College, men of all shades of honest opinion were wont to be brought together, and through the kindly influence of their host learned to love each other and to be tolerant of views adverse to their own. Like every man of true-hearted honesty he had a profound contempt for imposture or charlatanism; if an object was good he was content to give it the strength of his support, even though the promoters were not always as right minded as himself. How many who are now actively engaged in music, in and out of the service of the Church, minor canons, vicars-choral, organists, lay clerks, and others are indebted to him for much kindly aid and encouragement, cannot now be measured. He was a friend to all who sought his help and whom he deemed to be worthy of it. The purity of his character led him to judge all with a like singleness of purpose as that which moved his own actions; therefore his influence among men will not cease even though the power to direct it has been taken away from him through death.

He was buried in the churchyard of St. Michael's, Tenbury, under the East window of the Church and College which his unselfish benevolence had called into being. His funeral was attended by numbers of mourning friends including representatives of the Cathedral of Hereford, where he was Precentor and Canon, of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, and Edinburgh, whose degrees he held; and of the body of Freemasons to which he belonged.

ALBERTO FRANCHETTI'S OPERA "ASRAEL."

THIS opera, or "musical legend," as it is styled, is undoubtedly among the most important recent works of its kind, and its performances at the Pagliano Theatre in Florence during the month of April derive special interest from the fact that the principal part, that of Asrael, was taken by Signor Tamagno, the celebrated tenor who, it will be remembered, also created the title-rôle of Verdi's "Otello." Nor was it without difficulty that Signor Tamagno was induced to undertake the task; indeed, if a story from behind the scenes be true, it would appear that after having accepted the handsome terms offered him by the composer, he discovered that the part was not suited to his voice; nay, so anxious was he to be relieved, lest an inadequate rendering should impair his voice or imperil his reputation, that he offered to pay "any fine the composer chose to name." The composer took Signor Tamagno at his word, and named the trifling fine of £30,000; whereupon Signor Tamagno promptly "reconsidered his position," and decided to master the part. And master it he did, in such a manner that the magnificent success of the opera is in no small degree due to the unique rendering of Asrael by this great artist.

"Asrael," the first ambitious operatic work which Signor Franchetti has produced, was given in the course of last year at Reggio, Bologna, Milan, and Genoa. But in neither of those cities did it secure an adequate performance, and it was reserved for the Pagliano at Florence to put it on the stage under the composer's own direction, in a revised form, with first-rate artists, with a splendid orchestra conducted by Signor Cimini, and with a scenic display regardless of expense; in short, in a manner worthy of the remarkable merits of the work. Experience had taught Signor Franchetti that an opera such as his, designed on a grand scale, is nothing if not performed in a manner conformable.

The subject of "Asrael" is of that semi-mystic character so conspicuous in Northern legends, tinged, however, with a strong admixture of the realistic tendency of the Italian school of the day; and the leading dramatic features of the libretto, by Signor F. Fontana, derived from a Flemish legend of the thirteenth century, may be summed up in a few words.

The opera, in four acts, is preceded by a prelude which narrates that Asrael and Nefta, his beloved, were among the blessed ones in the celestial regions when the latter were attacked by Lucifer and his rebel hosts, in the course of which struggle Asrael was made prisoner. Asrael is deluded by Lucifer into the belief that Nefta too has been dragged from the celestial to the infernal regions; but failing to find her, and having, in his despair, given himself up to the orgies of Lucifer's abode, he is seized with a desire to look for Nefta on earth, and enters with Lucifer into a compact according to which he is to return after a year's absence and to bring with him a victim, under pain of eternal damnation.

The second part of the prelude takes us to the celestial regions, where Nefta is imploring the angelic host to intercede in her behalf with the heavenly powers, and obtain for her permission to migrate on earth in search of Asrael, whom she pledges herself to redeem under penalty of foregoing the future blessings of Paradise. Her prayer is granted; and hereafter, in the opera, properly speaking, we find Asrael in the garb of a wandering knight and Nefta in that of a sister of mercy, under the name of Sister Clotilde.

The scene of the opera is in Flanders, on the banks of a river, at the foot of a mediæval castle. The King of Flanders has an only daughter, Lidoria, who, abhorring marriage, is devoted to the art of magic, and has vowed that she will only give her hand to the man who shall withstand her dark and fiery glance. Seven years have passed, and, to her father's distress, no knight has succeeded in vanquishing this virago. But on the day appointed for the seventh and last trial, Asrael appears and victoriously defies her. She acknowledges her defeat and, though unwillingly, submits to become Asrael's wife, when, lo and behold, he throws the proffered ring to the ground, vowing that he will only wed a woman that loves him. The retainers of the insulted king and princess are on the point of dragging Asrael to the castle, when he is rescued by a crowd of errant fishermen and women, led by their chief Loretta, who had observed Asrael, and had promptly and passionately fallen in love with him. A free fight is about to ensue, when Sister Clotilde, accompanied by other sisters of mercy, appears on the scene, and separates the contending parties. Lidoria vows vengeance, while Asrael follows Loretta, but not without having been secretly recognised by Sister Clotilde as the one she has pledged herself to redeem.

In the next act we find Asrael in the company and under the spell of Loretta, whose suspicions regarding her lover have, however, been aroused by Lidoria, this latter having, by means of her black art, ascertained that Asrael is an emissary of the infernal regions and, moreover, loves another. Loretta's suspicions are confirmed when Asrael, in a dream, utters the name of Nefta as his guardian angel, whereupon she pours over Asrael the poisonous contents of a phial which Lidoria had given her. Seeing a flame issue from Asrael's breast, she rushes away in fear and despair, while Asrael awakes, and, maddened with pain, calls on the infernal hosts to take possession of him. While the evil spirits appear on one side, Sister Clotilde and her companions appear on the other, and, having vanquished the enemy, carry Asrael to the neighbouring convent.

Here he recovers after a long illness, tended by Sister Clotilde; but on rising from the sick bed, he remembers his compact with Lucifer, and that the fatal day fixed for his return to the infernal regions is at hand. He has learned

FREDERICK NIECKS.

Ce beau génie est moins un musicien qu'une âme qui se rend sensible.—H. DE BALZAC.

IN TWO VOLUMES, CLOTH GILT, PRICE TWENTY-FIVE SHILLINGS.

WITH A PORTRAIT, ETCHED BY H. R. ROBERTSON, AND FAC-SIMILES OF THE COMPOSER'S MS.

EXTRACTS FROM PREFACE.

My guiding principle has been to place before the reader the facts collected by me as well as the conclusions at which I arrived. This will enable him to see the subject in all its bearings, with all its pros and cons, and to draw his own conclusions should mine not obtain his approval.

Whatever the defects of the present volumes may be—and, no doubt, they are both great and many—I have laboured to the full extent of my humble abilities to group and present my material perspicuously, and to avoid diffuseness and rhapsody, those besetting sins of writers on music.

My researches had for their object the whole life of Chopin and his historical, political, artistical, social, and personal surroundings, but they were chiefly directed to the least known and most interesting period of his career—his life in France, and his visits to Germany and Great Britain. My chief sources of information are divisible into two classes—newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, correspondences, and books; and conversations I held with, and letters I received from Chopin's pupils, friends, and acquaintances.

Prefixed to the first volume of the present biography the reader will find one of the portraits by Kwiatkowski, an etching after a charming pencil drawing in my possession, the reproduction of which the artist has kindly permitted.

"The two volumes are so rich in absolutely new facts concerning Chopin's life, and so valuable in interesting and, for the most part, unprejudiced analytical comments upon the composer's works, that in the future we may reasonably expect the book to be frequently quoted whenever the writings of the 'Ariel of the pianoforte' are in question. To the large majority of readers, however, the true story—told with all the evidence that can be collected from letters and from the reports of onlookers to support the truth—of the romantic love of the pianist-composer for the eminent novelist, Madame George Sand, will be of the supremest interest. Nearly 200 pages are devoted to this episode, which was not only the most momentous incident of Chopin's career, but which also practically broke his heart and led to his early death. . . . The volumes likewise contain a full list of Chopin's works, an index, an etching from one of the portraits by Kwiatkowski (so different from the glorified drawing by Ary Scheffer), and a fac-simile of Chopin's delicate penmanship from one of the 'Etudes,' which, with the preludes, mazourkas, waltzes, polonaises, and the rest, are a great deal more popular in English drawing-rooms now than they were at the date of the composer's death, a few months short of forty years ago."—Daily News.

"Mr. Niecks's work at once takes its place among standard biographies of Great Musicians—the first complete and wholly satisfactory life of Chopin that has been written. Mr. Niecks may be assured that its successful achievement places him in the front rank of musical biographers; while, at the same time, the production of so able and adequate a work adds one more to the laurels earned by the distinguished firm that has already given us in English form Otto Jahn's 'Mozart' and Spitta's 'Bach.'"—Sunday Times.

"It is an admirable, well-contrived, and interesting biography, in which one of the most important items is formed by Chopin's own letters. . . . How the work is brought out is said in two words: it is published by Novello & Co. That is sufficient guarantee."—The World.

to love Sister Clotilde, though unconscious that she is Nefta; and rather than drag this pure and saintly creature to destruction, he resolves to leave and face his doom of eternal damnation. In a vision, an angel messenger informs Sister Clotilde that the only means of saving her beloved is to prevail on him to utter a prayer to the Holy Virgin, and to that end she resolves to make a supreme effort. Conscious of his guiltiness, Asrael refuses at first; but after a violent mental struggle, in which a chorus of angels on the one side and of evil spirits on the other take part, he at last kneels down at the altar to which Sister Clotilde has gently led him, and, with increasing fervour, repeats the Ave Maria after her. Sister Clotilde's transfiguration follows; Asrael sees her above as Nefta who, surrounded by the angelic host, bids him come. The flame which had issued from his breast had cleansed him of the evil spirit, and the scene of his own transfiguration, his redemption, and reunion with Nefta in the celestial regions brings the drama to a close.

It will be seen that in its details the subject of the opera, though pure and beautiful, is open to the reproach that it lacks originality, inasmuch as it suggests a variety of more or less familiar reminiscences, such as the characters of "Lohengrin," "Tannhäuser," the "Flying Dutchman," and, on the other hand, those of "St. Elizabeth," "Marguerite," and others, which seem blended in the leading parts of Asrael and Nefta respectively; indeed, it is on this account that some adverse and facetious critics have described the libretto of "Asrael" as the remains of a repast composed of well-known and well-digested dishes. It should, however, be borne in mind that the legends of which all those characters are the heroes or heroines are founded very much on the same principle—viz., the triumph of good over evil through love—and that consequently the family likeness is to some extent natural and unavoidable. At all events, there can be no doubt that, as a whole, the libretto of "Asrael" is exceedingly effective, and furnishes a great variety of powerful dramatic incidents and contrasts which the composer has turned to admirable account.

The eclecticism noticeable in the libretto, and which is, indeed, the leading characteristic of all modern Italian art and science, is also perceptible in Signor Franchetti's musical design and treatment. It appears that the composer had his excellent and thorough musical training first in Italy and then in Munich and Dresden, and he is, therefore, and very naturally, a thorough-going disciple of that continuity of action which is the well-known and fundamental principle of modern musical drama. Hence it is almost impossible to deal with any separate numbers of the score, which must be treated and judged as a whole.

As such, the opera is undoubtedly a remarkable work, the more so as, in spite of elaborate instrumentation, the vocal parts soar well and distinctly above the orchestra, instead of being practically absorbed by or made hopelessly subservient to the latter, as is so frequently the case in the overloaded operatic works of the day. It is in this respect that modern Italian composers, however much they have adopted, and wisely adopted, the methods of other countries, are still true to the best traditions of their own school, and that their works bear the impress of a distinct national individuality. This is proved by such works as Boito's "Mefistofele," Ponchielli's "Gioconda," and Verdi's "Otello," and it is with these that Franchetti's "Asrael" may properly be classed. In its general character "Asrael" is a remarkable and highly successful effort to combine the best features of the modern musical drama with the classical merits of Gluck's school and the romantic school of Spontini; and that Franchetti's laudable example should be followed, in as well as out of Italy, is assuredly a consummation devoutly to be wished.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

It is always the unexpected that happens. The Birmingham Town Hall organ has been for many years in sore need of renovation and extension to fit it for the constantly advancing requirements of the modern orchestra, but the sum required was so large—not less than £3,000—and the pecuniary result of the last musical festival was so unsatisfactory, that its best friends despaired of seeing the work accomplished in time for the transfer of the instrument to the Corporation. Happily the public has been more generous and responsive than was hoped for, and the efforts of the festival committee have already been crowned with complete success. An order for the necessary work has been given to Messrs. Hill and Son, of London, the successors of the firm by whom the organ was built fifty years ago, and the contract provides for its completion by September next. The specifications, prepared in consultation with Dr. J. F. Bridge and Mr. C. W. Perkins, comprise the substitution of pneumatic power for the old system of trackers, back-falls, &c., the addition of several modern stops hitherto wanting in the instrument, such as the orchestral oboe and the Hohl flöte, the completion of the pedal organ which, in several cases, consists of only one, instead of two and a half octaves of pipes, the emancipation of the fourth manual from the swell and choir organs, the removal of the Tuba mirabilis to the solo organ, the re-arrangement of the stop jams, the provision of four composition pedals for the pedal organ, and the erection of a hydraulic engine in the basement for the supply of the wind. When completed, the instrument will be formally handed over to the City, and the occasion will be signalised by a series of Recitals in which Sir John Stainer, Dr. Bridge, Dr. Peace, and M. Guilmant are expected to take part.

At the second Concert of the Edgbaston Amateur Musical Union, which took place on the 12th ult., an interesting revival was the performance of Spohr's rarely heard First Symphony in E flat, in the Larghetto of which, so suggestive of the slow movement of Beethoven's C minor Symphony, the amateurs found ample scope for their executive proficiency. In the Allegro and the Scherzo the time was rather slow for the realisation of the intended effect. The other orchestral pieces were Auber's "Masaniello" Overture, the "Benedictus" of Dr. Mackenzie, the fourth and sixth numbers of the Ballet Music from Gounod's "Faust," and Meyerbeer's March from "Le Prophète." Mr. F. W. Beard gave a fairly effective rendering of Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Concerto in G minor. The vocalists were Miss Edwards and Mr. W. A. Crosbee, the latter of whom sang a new song by Dr. Wareing, entitled "Chloris," accompanied on the pianoforte by the composer. The composition is refined and musicianlike and its performance was warmly applauded. Mr. W. Astley Langton conducted.

On the 8th ult. the Birmingham and Midland Musical Guild gave a Musical Conversazione at the Grand Hotel, at which several novelties were introduced. Special mention should be made of a second Trio in F, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, by W. E. J. Breakspeare, which excited great interest among the critical company present. Other noteworthy pieces were Raff's Violin and Pianoforte Sonata (No. 3, Op. 128), the Andante and Finale from E. Prout's Concertante Duet for harmonium and pianoforte, in A (Op. 6), Schumann's "Faschingsschwank," admirably played by Mrs. Hale, and Spohr's Duet for two violins (No. 6) in D minor. Mr. T. M. Abbott played a violin solo by Ernst, Mr. Owen a violoncello solo by Mr. T. Troman, and several vocal pieces were effectively rendered by Madame Oscar Pollack, Miss Lizzie Preston, Miss Elsie A. Baugh, and Mr. Gervas Cooper.
